PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SEVENTIETH CONGRESS SECOND SESSION

SENATE

TUESDAY, February 26, 1929

(Legislative day of Monday, February 25, 1929)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was unable to be here yesterday, or I would have made the announcement then that I want to make this morning.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] very kindly introduced a resolution yesterday in my behalf in regard to the Vare investigation. My own idea is that the special committee have extended every courtesy that could possibly be extended to Mr. VARE in making the investigation. They have shown him every leniency and given him every accommodation that anyone could ask. Nevertheless, Mr. VARE is a very sick man, and, of course, I, like others, sympathize with him in that condition and sincerely hope he will soon be restored to health.

I desire to say that while I think the Senate and the committee have done their full duty, nevertheless, on account of these conditions I do not intend to press to a final vote the resolution which was introduced yesterday, and I shall not ask that it be taken up during the present session of Congress. I am mindful and aware of the fact that if it goes over the votes of Senators who are opposed to my position in the matter will be greater in number at the next session and in the next Congress than at present. However, notwithstanding that fact, I do not feel under the circumstances that I want to press the resolution during the present serious illness of Mr. VARE. Neither do I see how his presence could change the situation. He has been extended every privilege I believe that could possibly be extended to him. But for the reasons stated I do not intend to ask the Senate to consider the resolution, although it is a privileged matter and I think I would have a right to force it to a vote.

I desire, however, to leave no doubt about the continuance of the authority of the committee and about the extension of the resolution which has heretofore been passed giving authority to the committee. I read the RECORD this morining, and I noticed that Senators yesterday expressed themselves to the effect that the resolutions were still in force and effect and would so continue. But the resolution granting the extension does not contain one resolution that I think is very important, and that is the resolution adopted at the beginning of this session of Congress known as Senate Resolution No. 2. It is the resolution which directed the present investigation so far as it has gone. It is the resolution which denies to Mr. VARE the right to take his seat until the final determination of the case. It is the resolution which gives to Mr. VARE the right to be present and to be heard if he desires. So I have prepared a resolution, for the present consideration of which I ask unanimous consent. It simply extends the life of the committee and extends the life of the resolution to which I have referred. I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 341), as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolutions 195, 227, 258, and 324 of the Sixty-ninth Congress and Senate Resolution 2 of the Seventieth Congress be, and the same are hereby, continued in full force and effect and to the same extent as though herein fully set forth until the special committee appointed under said Senate Resolution 195 is finally discharged by the Senate, and said special committee is hereby continued in office during the interim between the final adjournment of the Seventieth Congress and the convening of the first session of the Seventy-first Congress and thereafter during the life of said Congress unless sooner discharged by the Senate.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I think the attitude of the Senator from Nebraska in this matter is entirely fair. I have no doubt but that the committee is continued by the resolutions already adopted by the Senate, but in order that there may be no doubt in anyone's mind I am perfectly willing to have the resolution adopted, and I join with the Senator from Nebraska in asking unanimous consent that it may be considered now.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I do not expect to object to the adoption of the resolution. But we hear a great deal of talk about the Constitution. We hear nearly every day in the Senate about somebody violating the Constitution; somebody not doing this and somebody not doing that. Last night we heard it in connection with the reapportionment bill and what a great violation of the Constitution it is not to reapportion the country. I would like to know where there could be a greater violation of our oaths than when we deprive the State of Pennsylvania or any other State of its representation in this body?

Pennsylvania is a sovereign State and has a right to have two representatives in this body. I suppose I am just about as far politically from Pennsylvania as any man in the world, but I do not think this matter should be carried over in this manner. I believe we ought to be men enough to meet the issue. If we are going to let Mr. VARE have his seat, let him have it and let the State of Pennsylvania have her two Senators as she is allowed to have them under the Constitution of the United States. If we are not going to let Mr. VARE have his seat, then it is our duty to so declare in order that the State of Pennsylvania may have the opportunity to fill the vacancy and have her representation as she is allowed and as she is required to have it under the Constitution of the United States.

If the Senator from Pennsylvania, who represents his State, is willing to have the resolution considered I have not any objection, but I want to say now that Senators should quit talking about the Constitution, whether it is in reference to a half pint of liquor or reapportionment or whatever else it may be, as long as they sit in this body and deprive the sovereign people of a sovereign State from their proper representation in this body.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I feel as the Senator from South Carolina does about the constitutional rights of the State of Pennsylvania, but I realize that those rights are not likely to be accorded by opposing the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska. Therefore I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, buying by anybody of a seat in this body is a very serious question. The purchase of a seat here as men buy seats on the stock exchange is shocking, insulting, and dangerous to our free institutions. I think the sooner the Senate acts upon the Vare case the better it will be for the Senate and for the country. Mr. VARE has either acquired his seat corruptly or he has not. The Senate thus far has denied him the right to a seat here because of the fearful things disclosed in the testimony. During that time the State of Pennsylvania, as the Senator from South Carolina has said, has been represented by but one Senator in this body.

So, Mr. President, the Senate ought to get early action upon the Vare case. We all sympathize with Mr. VARE in his illness. I do. I served with him in the House. I like him personally. He is a very clever man. But we can not afford to let our sympathies, our likes and dislikes for a person control our action here. The Senate must be firm and steadfast in the position that seats in the United States Senate are not for sale, and whoever buys a seat in this body, whether he be a Democrat or Republican, he will not be allowed to have a seat in this body.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

The resolution was agreed to.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Senate Joint Memorial 6, memorializing the Senate of the United States for early passage of the special resolution by Senator CAPPER directing the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee to take immediate action relative to the special export rates on grain

To the honorable Senate of the United States:

Whereas the question of export grain rates is of paramount importance to farm relief organizations; and

Whereas the American price of wheat is theoretically based upon the surplus minus the transportation charge, which results in discrimination against the American producer because of the fact that the Canadian transportation rate is lower than that of the United States; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission has heretofore failed to take any action that might remedy this condition in spite of the fact that our agricultural interests have proved that a period of depression in this basic industry exists and has become a matter of serious economic importance: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, That we do hereby petition the Senate of the United States to take early action upon the special resolution of Senator CAPPER to the end that the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce will give speedy relief to the American grain growers by the adjustment and establishment of reasonable export grain rates which will meet the competition of the Canadian rates; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the honorable Senate of the United States and to the Senators from the State of Montana with the request that they exert every effort within their power to bring about the relief herein expressly desired.

Approved by J. E. Erickson, governor, February 19, 1929.

Mr. WALSH of Montana presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Joint Memorial 4

A memorial to the honorable Secretary of Agriculture of the United States advocating the establishment and promulgation of grades and standards of wheat which shall take into account its protein content

To the honorable Secretary of Agriculture of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Twenty-first Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, respectfully represent that:

Whereas the protein content of wheat is an important factor in determining its quality; and

Whereas the present grades and standards of wheat, as fixed by your honorable Secretary, are established without regard to said protein content; and

Whereas your memorialists believe that this important quality-determining factor should be taken into consideration as an element entering into the establishment of grades of wheat; that if grades and standards are established giving due regard to the quality of the wheat as determined by its protein content, such action will promote a more uniform market for wheat throughout the United States; will enable the producer thereof to obtain and the purchaser to pay the true value thereof; will eliminate the competition between millers that now arises by virtue of the fact that millers in some parts of the country refuse to pay a price for wheat that is based upon its milling quality as determined by its protein content, while in other parts of the country the millers pay a premium above the regular market price for high protein wheat, and that this difference in price is reflected in the prices of flour quoted to purchasers thereof, to the disadvantage of the miller paying the said premium; that the establishment of such grades and standards would prevent territorial discrimination in the prices paid producers of wheat, and would promote the raising of a better quality of wheat, facilitate the handling thereof, and tend to establish uniform prices therefor: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Twenty-first Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, That we do hereby memorialize the honorable Secretary of Agriculture of the United States that he establish and promulgate grades and standards of wheat, which said grades and standards shall take into account the protein content of the wheat; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to the honorable Secretary of Agriculture of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Montana.

Approved by J. E. Erickson, governor, February 19, 1929.

Mr. WALSH of Montana also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana praying for the early passage of a resolution, submitted by Mr. CAPPER, directing the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee to take immediate action relative to special export rates on grain, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. (See joint memorial printed in full when presented to-day by the Vice President.)

Mr. BROOKHART presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Concurrent Resolution 5 (by committee on agriculture)

Whereas the livestock producers of this country are, from justice and necessity, entitled to a market for the sale of their livestock which will insure most advantageous results to them, governed either by the natural laws of competition and supply and demand or some other system equally effective; and

Whereas during the last few years there is in existence a system of direct or private buying that has so expanded as to endanger, in the opinion of many, the open competitive livestock markets which have been built up in this country over a period of 50 years; and

Whereas it is the opinion of the vast majority of the stock growers that if the open competitive markets do not prevail the direct or private system of buying is, as it operates to-day, dangerous to the livestock interests of the country; and

Whereas approximately 40 per cent of the hogs now being shipped to the big terminal markets are bought in the country by packing agents and shipped to private stockyards and by this system are kept out of the competitive market: Therefore be it

Resolved, That our Representatives in Congress are hereby requested and strongly urged to conduct a thorough and fair investigation of the questions of marketing livestock in all of its phases, especially with respect to the setting up of some form which will be satisfactory to livestock producers if the competitive market is becoming obsolete; such investigation to be made on a basis which will inspire confidence in the conclusions and result among the producers, the consumers, and the packers, the stockyards and all other marketing agencies; that will tend to settle adequately the questions which have perplexed the country and Congress so much in the past, concerning marketing problems of the livestock industry; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of our Representatives in Congress.

J. H. JOHNSON,
Speaker of the House.
ARCHER MCFARLAND,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was duly adopted by the Forty-third General Assembly of the State of Iowa.

A. C. GUSTAFSON,
Chief Clerk of the House.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). In accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement already entered into, the calendar will be taken up for unobjected bills. The clerk will report the first number in order on the calendar.

FOX RIVER FOOT BRIDGE, ILLINOIS

The bill (H. R. 13593) granting the consent of Congress to the villages of East Dundee and West Dundee, State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a foot bridge across the Fox River between East Dundee and West Dundee, Ill., was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out the following after the enacting clause:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the villages of East Dundee and West Dundee, State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a foot bridge across the Fox River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between said villages, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the bridge now being constructed across the Fox River at the foot of North Street, East Dundee, Ill., by the village of East Dundee, Ill., if completed in accordance with plans accepted by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, as providing suitable facilities for navigation, shall be a lawful structure and shall be subject to the conditions and limitations of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, other than those requiring the approval of plans by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before the bridge is commenced.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to legalize a bridge across the Fox River at East Dundee, Ill."

CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

The bill (H. R. 9285) to provide for the settlement of claims against the United States on account of property damage, personal injury, or death was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have a number of amendments which I desire to propose to that bill. I did not think it would be reached on the calendar so soon, and I therefore ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TRESTLE, LOG DUMP, AND BOOM IN HENDERSON INLET, WASH.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15382) to legalize a trestle, log dump, and boom in Henderson Inlet near Chapman Bay, about 7 miles northeast of Olympia, Wash; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the trestle, log dump, and boom built by the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. in Henderson Inlet, State of Washington, on the westerly side near the mouth of Chapman Bay and the mouth of Woodards Bay, which is about 7 miles northeast of the city of Olympia, in the State of Washington, be, and the same are hereby, legalized to the same extent and with like effect as to all existing or future laws and regulations of the United States as if the permit required by the existing laws of the United States in such cases made and provided had been regularly obtained prior to the erection of said trestle, log dump, and boom: Provided, That any changes in said trestle, log dump, and boom which the Secretary of War may deem necessary and order in the interest of navigation shall be promptly made by the owner thereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE NEAR CANNELTON, IND.

The bill (S. 5511) granting the consent of Congress to the Hawesville & Cannelton Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River was announced as next in order.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, this is a bridge bill. The House on yesterday passed a bill, H. R. 16565, which is identical with the Senate bill which has just been read by title and as it has been reported by the Committee on Commerce. I therefore ask to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to substitute the House bill named by him for the Senate bill, the title of which has been stated. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 16565) authorizing the Hawesville & Cannelton Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cannelton, Ind., was read twice by its title, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WATSON. I move that the Senate bill No. 5511 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANK C. MESSENGER

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12390) for the relief of Frank C. Messenger, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint Frank C. Messenger (retired), formerly chief gunner in the United States Navy, a lieutenant in the United States Navy, and place him upon the retired list of the Navy with the retired pay and allowance of that grade: Provided, That no back pay, allowance, or emoluments shall become due as a result of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM S. SHACKLETTE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12666) for the relief of William S. Shacklette, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter William S. Shacklette, who was retired for physical disabilities, incurred in line of duty at the time of the explosion of the boilers of the U. S. S. Bennington, at San Diego, Calif., July 21, 1905, and was awarded the congressional medal of honor for "extraordinary heroism displayed at the time of the accident," shall receive the retired pay of chief pharmacist, equivalent to the maximum pay and allowance of that grade provided by law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], who reported the bill, kindly explain its object?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, this bill is one of the most meritorious bills that I have seen come before the Senate. Mr. Shacklette was awarded the congressional medal of honor for great bravery displayed while he was in an injured condition, after the explosion on one of our naval ships. I can read the report to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], if he desires me to do so.

Mr. KING. Since asking the Senator from Nevada for an explanation of the bill I have read the report, and I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEA SCOUT DEPARTMENT OF BOY SCOUTS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15577) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to dispose of material to the sea scout department of the Boy Scouts of America, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to dispose of, without charge, except for transportation and delivery, to the sea scout department of the Boy Scouts of America, such obsolete material as may not be needed for the Navy, and such other material as may be spared, at prices representing its fair value to the Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL MILITARY PARK AT BATTLE FIELD OF MONOCACY, MD.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11722) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Monocacy, Md., which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That for the purpose of commemorating the Battle of Monocacy, Md., the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to (1) acquire not to exceed 1 acre of land, free of cost to the United States, at the above-named battle field; (2) fence the parcel of land so acquired; (3) build an approach to such parcel of land; and (4) erect a suitable marker on such parcel of land.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. The parcel of land acquired under section 1 of this act shall be under the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of War, and there is authorized to be appropriated for the maintenance of such parcel of land, fence, approach, and marker a sum not to exceed $250 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the commemoration of the Battle of Monocacy, Md."

MARGARET I. VARNUM

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 264) for the relief of Margaret I. Varnum, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, and dependent relatives, George Smith, late private of Company K, Twenty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on the 4th day of March, 1862: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES EVANS

The bill (S. 4274) for the relief of James Evans was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who reported the bill, explain it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, James Evans served a year or more in the Union Army; he was captured in battle and paroled, but was prevented by an illness which lasted during the remainder of the war from rejoining the Union Army.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, James Evans, formerly a private in Company F, Fourteenth Indiana Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged in December, 1862, from the military service of the United States in his final service as a private in Company F, Fourteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pension, bounty, pay, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF EMERGENCY OFFICERS

The bill (S. 4708) to amend the act of May 24, 1928, entitled "An act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah, who has asked that the bill go over, will remember that I was one of those who fought from the first days of my service on this floor against the bill which was known as the emergency officers' retirement bill because I believed that it was an unwise bill. In that, however, both Houses of Congress, by an overwhelming majority, decided that I was wrong, and that the President also was wrong in vetoing the bill. The bill became a law. In its administration, however, by an opinion of the Comptroller General and by the method in which the bill had been administered a very large number of those who Congress believed would be benefited by the bill are not benefited by it.

It will be remembered that those of us who objected to the bill put into the RECORD the names of a large number of officers to show the Congress exactly the type of disabled officer who was to be benefited by the bill, and it was our understanding in opposing the bill that those officers would be retired. Now, due to various decisions that have been made, those officers have not been retired. All that this bill proposes to do, I will say to the Senator from Utah, is to provide that the officers who we thought would be provided for shall be retired, but that they may be given one year more than the original bill provided to have their cases taken care of and to be retired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut whether the difficulty of administration grows out of the practice now prevailing of attempting to determine at the time of application for the benefits of the act the percentage of disability of the officer rather than the percentage of disability existing at the time the act was passed?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is exactly the trouble.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. So that an officer now who is found to possess a disability of 29 per cent, for the purposes of illustration, although at the time of the passage of the act he could theoretically at least, have had a disability of 40 per cent would be deprived of any benefit under the act.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is exactly correct. My sense of justice has led me to introduce this bill, because when the Veterans' Bureau rated a man as permanently disabled at 30 per cent or more, I do not think there is a Senator on this floor who supposed that the act did not mean what it said in its reference to permanent disability.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Particularly when the rating had been made without regard even to the prospect of legislation of this character.

Mr. BINGHAM. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If some such rule as that provided in this bill shall not be adopted every application presented for the benefits of the act will find the question reopened as to the extent of disability existing at the time of the consideration of the application.

Mr. BINGHAM. And the Comptroller General has ruled that it is the duty of the Veterans' Bureau to decide those cases by the present rules of the Veterans' Bureau, rather than by the rules which prevailed when the men originally received their ratings.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have some information which I will be glad to communicate to the Senator from Connecticut. I ask that the bill go over for the present. I will be very glad to confer with him about it.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator knows that there are very few hours left of the present session in which to pass this bill and get it over to the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS FOR EASTERN NEW MEXICO NORMAL SCHOOL

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill (S. 3940) granting certain public lands to the State of New Mexico for the use and benefit of the Eastern New Mexico Normal School, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted and confirmed to the State of New Mexico 76,667 acres of surveyed, nonmineral, unappropriated, and unreserved public lands of the United States in the State of New Mexico, for the use and benefit of the Eastern New Mexico Normal School, at Portales, Roosevelt County, N. Mex., to be used solely for normal-school purposes. Such lands shall be in addition to the lands granted to the State of New Mexico for normal-school purposes under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved June 20, 1910, as amended, and the grant of such lands shall be subject to the same terms and conditions as are imposed upon the grants made by such act of June 20, 1910, as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW JACKSON SEWARD, JR., DECEASED

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill (H. R. 2486) for the relief of Andrew Jackson Seward, jr., deceased, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines, Andrew Jackson Seward, jr., deceased, who was seaman on the United States ship Nevada, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as seaman on or about the 19th day of June, 1919: Provided, That no back pay or allowances shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMOTHY J. MULCAHY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill (H. R. 4770) for the relief of Lieut. Timothy J. Mulcahy, Supply Corps, United States Navy, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lieut. Timothy J. Mulcahy, Supply Corps, United States Navy, the sum of $315.65, to reimburse said officer for certain unauthorized overpayments to various enlisted men while he was acting in the capacity of disbursing officer at the United States receiving ship, navy yard, Philadelphia, Pa., which amount said officer refunded to the Government to remove the disallowance in his accounts because of such overpayments.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

The bill (S. 5046) to relinquish all right, title, and interest of the United States in certain lands in the State of Washington was announced as next in order.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the House yesterday passed an identical bill, amended as the Senate bill is proposed to be amended by the committee. I therefore ask that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Washington that the House bill has not as yet been messaged over to the Senate.

Mr. DILL. Then I ask that the Senate bill may be passed over without prejudice until I can have the House bill sent over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. DILL subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the day Senate bill 5046 on the calendar was passed over until a House bill on the same subject could be messaged over, that I might substitute it for the Senate bill. I ask unanimous consent now to substitute the House bill, which is identical with the Senate bill as amended on the calendar, and ask for immediate consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15727) to relinquish all right, title, and interest of the United States in certain lands in the State of Washington.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 5046 will be indefinitely postponed.

LIEUT. L. A. WILLIAMS

The bill (H. R. 10238) for the relief of Lieut. L. A. Williams, Supply Corps, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Lieut. L. A. Williams, Supply Corps, United States Navy, in the amount of $63.12, which amount represents funds deposited by Lieut. L. A. Williams with the Treasurer of the United States by order of the Secretary of the Navy covering payments made by Lieut. L. A. Williams to certain men of the United States Navy, these payments later disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. H. SANBORN

The bill (H. R. 5286) for the relief of J. H. Sanborn was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to J. H. Sanborn, of Ontario, Calif., the sum of $1,077.55, in full settlement of all claims against the Government and as compensation for personal injury to him resulting from a collision on the 5th day of June, 1927, caused by the reckless, careless, and unlawful operation of a Government automobile by Frank L. Montague, jr., while in the service of the Department of Commerce.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ETTA C. SANBORN

The bill (H. R. 5287) for the relief of Etta C. Sanborn, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury and not otherwise appropriated, to Etta C. Sanborn, of Ontario, Calif., the sum of $3,434.08, in full settlement of all claims against the Government and as compensation for personal injury to her resulting from a collision on the 5th day of June, 1927, caused by the reckless, careless, and unlawful operation of a Government automobile by Frank L. Montague, jr., while in the service of the Department of Commerce.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM F. KALLWEIT

The bill (H. R. 5288) for the relief of William F. Kallweit was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William F. Kallweit, of Ontario, Calif., the sum of $299.33, in full settlement of all claims against the Government and as compensation for personal injuries to him, resulting from a collision on the 5th day of June, 1927, caused by the reckless, careless, and unlawful operation of a Government automobile by Frank L. Montague, jr., while in the service of the Department of Commerce.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LORETTA KALLWEIT

The bill (H. R. 5289) for the relief of Loretta Kallweit was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury and not otherwise appropriated, to Loretta Kallweit, of Ontario, Calif., the sum of $193.22, in full settlement of all claims against the Government and as compensation for personal injuries to her resulting from a collision on the 5th day of June, 1927, caused by the reckless, careless, and unlawful operation of a Government automobile by Frank L. Montague, jr., while in the service of the Department of Commerce.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID A. WRIGHT

The bill (H. R. 12638) for the relief of David A. Wright was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $13,187.50 to David A. Wright, of Chicago, Ill., for money paid by him to the United States as a part of the purchase price of certain machinery which was agreed to be purchased by him from the United States in 1920, but which was not delivered in accordance with the terms of sale, and in order to reimburse and compensate the said David A. Wright for the cost of transportation, unloading, handling, and storage by him in his warehouse in Chicago, Ill., of machinery belonging to the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill from the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], who reported it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, briefly the facts in this case are that Mr. Wright had a contract with the Ordnance Department for the purchase of tools and had received delivery of about 75 of the particular kind of implements which he was buying. I think they are lathes. After about 75 of 160 odd had been delivered they ceased shipping him the lathes, according to his understanding and agreement, for some little time, due to the fact that they were filling an order of the Belgian Government. This delay extended over a period of some months, as I recall the facts, and during that time he was unable to carry on the sale or the delivery of machines which he had contracted to deliver on account of the Government's failure to deliver to him. After filling the order with the Belgian Government, the Ordnance Department shipped him 40 carloads, without any understanding on his part that they should dump 40 carloads of these materials on him. He received them at that time, but his business had been completely disorganized on account of the long delay. He paid the freight on them, and certain charges for storage, and so forth. He refused to accept the delivery of the 40 cars, and after some negotiations the Government finally took back the materials.

The items involved here are for expenses of freight and storage, and so forth, while he was holding that 40 carloads of material. He claimed a much larger sum. He claimed, I think, thirty-seven thousand and odd dollars; but the House committee trimmed that down to the amount specified in the bill, which, I think, is $13,000.

The committee was impressed that the bill was thoroughly meritorious and recommended its passage.

Those are the facts, in brief.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EVA BRODERICK

The bill (S. 5030) for the relief of Eva Broderick was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$130" and insert "$91"; in line 6, after the word "Broderick," to strike out "or as much thereof as is necessary"; in line 7, after the word "automobile," to insert "at the rate of 7 cents a mile for 1,300 miles"; and in line 9, before the words "the doctor," to strike out "furnished to" and insert "by," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $91 to Eva Broderick, in full and final settlement for the use of her automobile, at the rate of 7 cents a mile for 1,300 miles, by the doctor at Mission Agency in California during the fiscal year 1928 for use in making calls upon sick Indians, such services having been furnished with the knowledge and approval of the superintendent in charge of the said agency.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi, who reported the bill, if at this Indian reservation there was not a physician, and if they did not have automobiles? There are usually many upon these reservations.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, my recollection of the bill—I have not seen the report for some time—is that the physician had no car of his own. They were hiring a public car and paying, I think, 20 cents per mile for it. Later on the car belonging to the wife of some man on the reservation was hired for 10 cents per mile; and this small amount was unpaid because of the fact that she was the wife of an employee and under the law could not be paid. The committee felt, however, that there was a saving of 50 per cent; that the sum was a small one; and that it was very proper for the lady to be reimbursed for the use of her car.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUTH B. LINCOLN

The bill (H. R. 13632) for the relief of Ruth B. Lincoln was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAN FRANCISCO, NAPA & CALISTOGA RAILWAY

The bill (H. R. 2474) for the relief of the San Francisco, Napa & Calistoga Railway was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF MARITIME EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION ACT

The bill (S. 5503) to amend section 22 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury to employees in certain maritime employments, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1927, as amended, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 22 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury to employees in certain maritime employments, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1927, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 22. Upon his own initiative, or upon application of any party in interest, on the ground of a change in conditions or proof of erroneous wage rate, the deputy commissioner may at any time review any decision or compensation order in accordance with the procedure prescribed in respect to claims in section 19, and in accordance with such section issue a new compensation order which may terminate, continue, increase, or decrease such compensation. Such new order shall not affect any compensation paid under authority of the prior order except that an order increasing the compensation rate may be made effective from the date of injury, and except that if any part of the compensation due or to become due is unpaid, an order decreasing the compensation rate may be made effective from the date of injury, and any payments made prior thereto in excess of such decreased rate shall be deducted from any unpaid compensation in such manner and by such method as may be determined by the deputy commissioner."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF STATE OF NEVADA

The bill (S. 5717) for the relief of the State of Nevada was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the net balance due the State of Nevada of $595,076.53, as certified by the Comptroller General of the United States January 26, 1929, and printed in Senate Document No. 210, Seventieth Congress, second session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask that the report of the Committee on the Judiciary upon the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[S. Rept. No. 1826, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

REIMBURSEMENT OF THE STATE OF NEVADA

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany amendment to second deficiency appropriation bill, H. R. ———:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the amendment proposed to the second deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. ———) providing for the reimbursement of the State of Nevada in accordance with the statement of account rendered by the Comptroller General of the United States dated January 26, 1929, and printed in Senate Document No. 210, Seventieth Congress, second session, after due consideration beg to report said amendment favorably, with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations for insertion in the second deficiency appropriation bill.

Said amendment is as follows:

"To reimburse the State of Nevada the net balance due as certified by the Comptroller General of the United States January 26, 1929, and printed in Senate Document No. 210, Seventieth Congress, second session, the sum of $595,076.53."

In support of said amendment there is hereto attached and made a part hereof Senate Report No. 1706, submitted by your committee on S. 5717.

Senate Report No. 1706, Seventieth Congress, second session, follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5717) providing for the relief of the State of Nevada, after consideration reports the same favorably to the Senate and recommends that the bill do pass without amendment.

The subject matter of the bill was thoroughly examined into by your committee under S. J. Res. 41, and quite extensive hearings were held by a subcommittee and by the full committee, resulting in Senate Report No. 433, Seventieth Congress, first session. Reference is here made to said printed hearings and said report. S. J. Res. 41 passed the Senate March 2, 1928.

Under a resolution of the Senate (S. Res. 295) the Comptroller General, under date of January 26, 1929, rendered the account between the State of Nevada and the United States for moneys advanced and actually expended in aid of the Government during the War between the States. The report of the Comptroller General (S. Doc. No. 210, 70th Cong., 2d sess.) is as follows:

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: There has been received Senate Resolution 295, Seventieth Congress, second session, authorizing and directing me to—

"* * * reopen and restate the account of the State of Nevada for moneys advanced and expended in aid of the Government of the United States during the War between the States, and on such restatement (1) to accept as a basis of calculation the balance due the State of Nevada on January 1, 1900, stated in the account set forth in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury printed in House Document No. 322, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session; (2) to add to such balance the interest certified by the comptroller of the State of Nevada as actually paid by said State on the sums so advanced and expended from January 1, 1900, to December 31, 1928; (3) to deduct from the total sum so stated the interest at 5 per cent per annum on $8,559.61 repaid by the United States on April 10, 1888, from the date of payment to December 31, 1928; (4) to deduct $12,283.04 repaid by the United States on July 1, 1910, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1910, to December 31, 1928, and certify to the Senate the balance found due the State of Nevada."

Complying therewith I have the honor to certify that the account of the State of Nevada for moneys advanced and expended in aid of the Government of the United States during the War between the States has been reopened and restated as directed in said resolution, and on said reopening and restatement the balance found due to the State of Nevada is $595,076.53, as follows:

1. Basis of calculation, balance due to the State of Nevada on Jan. 1, 1900, as stated in the account set forth in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury printed in House Document No. 322, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session		$462,441.97
2. Plus interest certified by the comptroller of the State of Nevada as actually paid by the State of Nevada on the sums so advanced and expended from Jan. 1, 1900, to Dec. 31, 1928, at 5 per cent per annum, on principal sum of $119,800.12 advanced and expended by the State of Nevada in aid of the Government of the United States during the War between the States	173,710.17
3. Less interest at 5 per cent per annum on $8,559.61 repaid by the United States on Apr. 10, 1888, from date of payment to Dec. 31, 1928	17,429.92
	618,722.22
4. Less $12,283.04 repaid by the United States on July 1, 1910, with interest thereon at 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1910, to Dec. 31, 1928, $11,362.65, or a total deduction of	23,645.69
Net balance		595,076.53

Respectfully,

J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

For the information of the Senate a general statement of facts on which reimbursement is founded follows:

GEOGRAPHICAL FACTORS

In 1864, when said expenditures on behalf of the United States were made, the following state of facts obtained:

(1) West of Kansas the only States were California and Oregon on the far Pacific coast. The vast region between was partitioned into Territories, sparsely settled, and occupied by powerful Indian tribes, restive and resentful of the westward migration of the whites, and incited to hostilities by the general war conditions prevailing. No railroads west of the Missouri River; emigrant travel and transportation of passengers, mail, express, freight, and military supplies were by stagecoach, wagon trains, or saddleback. The westward route followed was the Overland Trail, made by the tread of emigrant trains (1844 to 1864) from St. Joseph, Mo., to Sacramento, Calif., a distance of over 1,500 miles.

(2) This fourth and crucial year of the Civil War, ocean communication with the Pacific coast via the Isthmus or Cape Horn was all but abandoned from war hazard.

THE OVERLAND TRAIL

(3) The Overland Trail thus became the most important line of communication between the East and West. Along it, moreover, stretched the Western Union telegraph, whilst corps of surveyors and engineers of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad Cos., chartered by acts of Congress in 1862, were exploring its course for favorable mountain passes and connecting routes across the plains and deserts to link West with East by railroad, which the Secretary of War had declared was of the utmost military importance (An. Rept. War Dept. 1864–65, p. 149) and the Government (July 2, 1864) was to aid with loans and land grants.

TERRITORY OF NEVADA

The Territory of Nevada at this time had become the goal of fortune seekers West and East. In five years the magic of discovered gold and silver had populated its wastes with some 15,000 adventurous people. Virginia City sprang into existence as the most important town on the Overland Trail.

James W. Nye, governor, was a commanding figure. Formerly on the bench of New York and first president of the metropolitan board of police, subsequently United States Senator, a close friend of Lincoln and Seward, he ranked among the foremost orators of his time. Other residents of the Territory were destined to play large parts in the affairs of the Nation. Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain), deputy secretary, was gathering the materials for Roughing It, the immortal picture of a phase of American history and life without counterpart.

Assessed valuation of property was under twenty millions. The Territory was too poor to own or contemplate a capitol building, its officials commonly having offices in their residences. The Territorial assembly, a score or more of whose members were from New York and the New England States, sat on rude benches in a building donated by a public-spirited citizen, the floors carpeted with sawdust and the two houses separated by a canvas partition. Despite the wealth of the mines and the extreme carefulness with which public funds were appropriated, the treasury uniformly ran dry before the receipt of the December taxes. On November 1, 1864, when the State government succeeded the Territorial, there was but $1,101.98 cash balance in the treasury, with $39,228.54 outstanding warrants issued against it.

FIRST REQUISITION FOR TROOPS

Regular troops stationed along the Pacific coast had been withdrawn to the Atlantic seaboard the first years of the war. California volunteers, by 1863, were protecting not only that State but the Southwest Territories to the boundary of Texas; those of Oregon were similarly extended to guard the Northwest.

Interruption of ocean communication with the Pacific coast by 1863 had made the protection of the Overland Trail a matter of grave military and national concern.

The first call on Nevada Territory for volunteers, dated April 2, 1863, was addressed the governor by General Wright, commander of the Department of the Pacific:

"SIR: I have been authorized by the War Department to raise volunteer companies in Nevada Territory for the purpose of moving east over the overland mail route in the direction of Great Salt Lake City. If it is possible to raise three or four companies in the Territory for this service, I have to request your excellency may be pleased to have them organized. I should be glad to get two companies of Cavalry and two of Infantry, the mounted troops to furnish their own horses and equipments. Arms, ammunition, etc., will be furnished by the United States. Should your excellency consider it improbable that this volunteer force can be raised, even one company will be accepted. I will send a plan of organization and an officer with the necessary instructions for mustering them into the service."

While correspondence was in progress the following telegram was transmitted:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1863.

Brig. Gen. G. WRIGHT,
San Francisco, Calif.:

The Secretary of War authorizes you to raise additional regiments in California and Nevada to reenforce General Conner and protect the overland route. Can not companies be raised in Nevada and pushed forward immediately? General Conner may be able to raise some companies in Utah or out of emigrant trains.

H. W. HALLECK, General in Chief.

General Wright the following day, April 16, 1863, addressed a second and more urgent appeal to the governor, in all material parts as follows:

"The Indian disturbances along the line of the overland mail route east of Carson City threaten the entire suspension of our mail facilities, as well as preventing any portion of the vast immigration approaching from the east reaching Nevada. * * * My force immediately available for operation on that line is small. * * * Some Infantry companies will be thrown forward from this side of the mountains as soon as transportation can be prepared and the roads are in order. In the meantime it is of such importance to keep the mail and emigrant route east of you open that I would earnestly recommend that one or two companies of Cavalry be promptly organized and prepared for muster into the service of the United States. It is impossible for us at this moment to purchase horses and equipments. Each man would have to furnish his own. I can furnish arms, ammunition, forage, clothing, provisions, etc.; in fact, everything except horses and equipments. * * * This is the first appeal that has been made to Nevada Territory * * *." (Hearings on S. J. Res. 41, 70th Cong.)

FOUR COMPANIES RECRUITED

The response was a proclamation of the governor of the Territory eight days later calling for volunteers to serve three years or during the war.

Four companies of cavalry were recruited and mustered into the service, of which two were stationed at Fort Churchill, Nev., the others sent to Fort Douglas, Utah.

SECOND CALL FOR TROOPS

The latter part of November following, General Wright requisitioned the Territory "under authority conferred upon me by the War Department" (see letter Brigadier General Wright to Adjutant General U. S. Army, December 22, 1863) for "one regiment of infantry and two more companies of cavalry."

December 4, 1863, a second proclamation of the governor was issued calling for volunteers.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT ORDER OF FEBRUARY 9, 1863

The four companies of cavalry enlisted under the first call, despite delay in securing horses and equipment at the soldiers' expense, had been recruited and mustered in the service in a few months.

Under the second call, however, so little progress was made in securing volunteers that by February it was clear only a small part of the quota could be enlisted without remedial action by the Territorial assembly.

The situation arose from an order of the Treasury Department, dated February 9, 1863, instructing the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at San Francisco that—

"checks of disbursing officers must be paid in United States notes." (See letter of Deputy Paymaster Gen. George H. Riggold, February 13, 1863.)

Up to this time troops and marines of the Department of the Pacific had been paid in coin.

It is pertinent to remark that the subtreasury at San Francisco held a vast amount of gold and silver, product largely of the mines of California and Nevada. Also, that in the same month as the departmental order the price of gold in Treasury notes on the New York Stock Exchange, February 28, 1863) touched 170.

EFFECT OF THE ORDER ON SOLDIERS' PAY

The effect of this order on the troops of the Department of the Pacific, as well as on further recruiting, may be gathered from a recital of certain conditions, as follows:

First. That during the entire period of the Civil War and subsequently, the only money in circulation or common usage on the Pacific coast was gold and silver coin; all transactions, obligations, prices, salaries, wage, and services being stated therein.

Second. The greater part of all manufactured commodities were imported; with the interruption of ocean transportation as stocks on hand diminished, prices rose accordingly.

Third. In the Territory of Nevada such condition was accentuated by the fact that nearly everything used or consumed, apart from lumber, fuel, beef, and hay, had to be freighted over the Sierra Nevada Mountains, blocked from December to May by snow, in mule trains, the distance from Sacramento ranging from 200 to 450 miles. Freight costs per ton to Virginia City approximated $80, and correspondingly higher to other mining towns. From Leavenworth, Kans., freight approximated $800 per ton. A bushel of corn shipped from Leavenworth, Kans., to Salt Lake City cost $17. (Rept. Secretary of War, 1865–66, pt. 1, pp. 23–112. Also report of General Halleck to Secretary of War, War Dept. Rept., 1866, pp. 31–32.) The range of prices of necessities in Nevada, 1861–1865, gold valuation, was from 50 to 100 per cent higher than the corresponding currency prices east of the Missouri River.

Finally, Treasury notes in regions remote from San Francisco could not be used as money except at an extortionate discount below the current New York quotations.

March 16, 1863, General Wright, commander of the Department of the Pacific, transmitted to The Adjutant General of the United States Army a letter of Major Drew, commandant at Fort Baker, Oreg., containing an explicit statement of the effects of and a formal protest against paying his men in greenbacks, to which General Wright added his own indorsement, saying:

"The difficulties and embarrassments enumerated in the major's communication are common to all the troops in this department, and I must seriously ask the consideration of the general in chief and of the War Department to this subject. * * *"

SITUATION IN NEVADA

The four companies of Nevada Cavalry had been raised before the Treasury order of February 9, 1863, had become generally known or its effects understood. Troops in the outlying districts were not paid with any regularity, frequently being months in arrears, and this appears to have been the case in Nevada.

When the governor's second proclamation was issued, however, the situation was well known. Pure patriotism alone could induce men to accept $13 per month Army pay, when choice required the relinquishment of fortune seeking or employment at from $4 to $10 daily wage in gold. When the soldier's pay was cut by departmental order to the equivalent of about $6 per month, payable in Treasury notes having no currency on the Pacific coast, justice and fair play required some character of relief be granted to help the volunteeers to meet the high cost of living.

THE TERRITORIAL VOLUNTEERS ACT

February 20, 1864, an act of the Territorial Assembly of Nevada was approved, entitled:

"An act to encourage enlistments and give bounties and extra pay to our volunteer soldiers." (Nev. Ter. Laws, p. 81.)

The Territorial volunteers act provided, in all material particulars, as follows:

"Bounties, so called, were authorized to be paid to captains or commanding officers of companies of $10 in gold per capita per recruit enlisted and mustered into the service of the United States in lieu.

"Extra pay, so called, was authorized to be paid volunteer troops, officers, and soldiers, of $5 per month in gold during the period of service; first settlement at the expiration of one year, unless sooner terminated by death or honorable discharge; final settlement at the termination of enlistment or muster out.

"To provide the moneys therefor a soldiers' fund of $100,000 was created; bonds in that amount to bear 10 per cent interest authorized to be issued and sold at an annual tax of 25 cents on each hundred dollars taxable property levied to meet the debt."

THIRD CALL FOR TROOPS

The effect of the Territorial volunteers act is shown in the muster rolls. The exigencies of the Government in protecting the Overland Trail had become so acute that in October, 1864, Gen. Irwin McDowell, then commander of the Department of the Pacific, removed his headquarters to Virginia City, Nevada Territory, and on the 13th requisitioned the Territory "under authority of the Secretary of War," to complete the organization of a regiment of Cavalry and one of Infantry. About the end of the year Nevada had recruited a total of six companies of Cavalry and three of Infantry, aggregating 1,180 men. These troops were actively engaged, 1864 to 1866, in Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, Nebraska, and Kansas. (Hearings on S. J. Res. 41, 70th Cong.)

NEVADA ADMITTED AS A STATE

Eight months after the passage of the Territorial volunteers act (October 31, 1864) Nevada was admitted into the Union. The State constitution provided that all laws of the Territory not repugnant to its provisions were continued in full effect until modified or repealed by the State legislature. The Territorial debt and obligations were assumed and authorized to be carried separately from and independent of the limitations governing the State debt proper.

The soldiers' fund bonds had proved unsalable, and the burden of meeting the liabilities accrued and accruing under the Territorial volunteers act devolved upon the State.

The State legislature authorized the issue and sale of $150,000 bonds bearing 2 per cent per month interest. It was out of the proceeds of this issue that the State met the first accrued claims of the Territorial volunteers. Twenty-four per cent interest to raise funds in 1865, 18 per cent in 1866, and 15 per cent 1867 to 1872 (not to mention 9½ per cent 1872 to 1879) were the prices Nevada paid for statehood.

STATEHOOD ASSUMED FROM LOYALTY

It is pertinent at this point to mention that Nevada assumed the burden of statehood at the invitation of the United States, persuaded from loyalty to do what its sound judgment had rejected. For in the year 1864, on the 19th day of January, the people of the Territory overwhelmingly defeated a proposed State constitution and application for admission as a State. On March 21 following, the Congress of the United States, notwithstanding such rejection, passed an enabling act inviting Nevada into the Union. An additional State was required to insure the adoption of the thirteenth amendment, and the choice of President Lincoln was Nevada. (See Recollections of the Civil War, by Charles A. Dana, Assistant Secretary of War, Lincoln's administration, p. 174.) (Senate Hearings on S. J. Res. 41, 70th Cong.)

STATE VOLUNTEERS ACT

The Territorial volunteers' act had made provision partially to equalize the soldier's pay on account of the abnormal prices prevailing, but had not provided for any additional pay to officers in excess of that allowed volunteers in general. Public sentiment in Nevada in favor of doing justice became strongly urgent that some measure of relief should be given the Nevada volunteer officers.

The State legislature then being in session and considering the matter of such relief, on March 8, 1865, the commander of the department of the Pacific wrote the Governor of Nevada concerning the progress made in recruiting and recommending additional pay to volunteers.

It was the receipt of this letter which caused the legislature to pass the State volunteers act of March 11, 1865, continuing the provisions of the Territorial volunteers act of February 20, 1864, notwithstanding the veto of the governor (Blaisdell).

NEVADA'S EXPENDITURES TO PROTECT THE OVERLAND TRAIL

The liabilities assumed by the State of Nevada as successor to the Territory of Nevada and honorably fulfilled cost the State, as shown by the official reports, the principal sum of $119,800.12, of which $109,048.53 were for so-called bounties and extra pay, no part of which has ever been reimbursed.

Of the remainder of said amount of $119,800.12, $8,559.61 was reimbursed the State as of April 10, 1888, leaving unreimbursed the further amount of $2,191.98. The items of this latter portion of the principal sum comprise salary and expenses of the adjutant general of Nevada and of his office from the date of the official close of the war to the final muster out in 1866 of the last contingent of Nevada volunteers. Inasmuch as the adjutant general of Nevada was the officer designated under the Territorial volunteers act and subsequent State volunteers act to audit the claims of officers and soldiers for bounty and extra pay, such unreimbursed expenditures accrued in consequence of said Territorial volunteers act and are properly inclusive within its force and legal authorization.

It is established by the reports of the successive State comptrollers of Nevada and the statutes of the State that from February 10, 1865, to the present time, Nevada has carried said principal sum as a Territorial debt and paid interest thereon, and that of the interest so paid but $12,283.04 (settlement of July 1, 1910) has been reimbursed the State, leaving the net balance due the State of Nevada, as reported by the Comptroller General on January 26, 1929 (S. Doc. 210, 70th Cong.), of the sum of $595,076.53.

REIMBURSEMENT BEFORE PREVIOUS CONGRESSES

Misconception of fact and law at the foundation of the Nevada Civil War expenditures for the benefit of the Government has hitherto deferred settlement.

The assumption has been in error that reimbursement accrued only as an obligation of the Government under the act of Congress of July 27, 1861.

It accrued instead under an act of the Legislative Assembly and Governor of the Territory of Nevada, subsequently approved and ratified by the Congress of the United States, and the legal, equitable, and moral commitment of the United States to its settlement rests solely thereon. Hence reimbursement, in its controlling aspects, was not before the Court of Claims nor adjudicated in its decision of March 14, 1910, all of which will hereinafter be conclusively shown.

No valid understanding of the unprecedented nature of Nevada's disbursements for the benefit of the United States can be had apart from review, such as hereinbefore presented, of its geographic, economic, and historical setting and the controlling circumstances of time and locality.

The expenditures of Nevada were exhaustively investigated by committees of the two Houses of the Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses and favorably reported for settlement by direct appropriation, the Senate invariably passing the bills, but such bills failed from one cause or another in the House.

The special nature of the expenditures was then recognized, but until after the Fifty-sixth Congress there had been no decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States under which its legal authorization by Congress and the commitment of the Government to its indemnification could be defined.

The equitable and moral validity of reimbursement, however, was attested by those best informed on its character and merits, as shown by the following extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (56th Cong., 1st sess., vol. 33, pt. 7, p. 6278):

"Senator Hawley, of Connecticut, chairman Committee on Military Affairs: 'There is no sort of question of its justice.'

"Senator Eugene Hale, of Maine, ranking member Committee on Appropriations: 'The Senate is committed to this State claim by vote, by sentiment, and it is only a question of time when it will pass.'

"Senator Teller, of Colorado, chairman Committee on Claims: 'If there are any claims that are just and proper which the United States ought to pay, this is one of them. It is as sacred an obligation, in my judgment, as the national bonds.'" (Hearings on S. J. Res. 41, 70th Cong.)

Nevertheless, after the lapse of many years, Nevada yet carries the debt so incurred, the benefits of which accrued to the imperiled Union and the burden of which fell on the State. And at a cost then and since to its sparse population in excess of half a million dollars.

The set-offs thereto are one of $8,559.61 applicable to the principal sum, and the other of $12,283.04 as interest thereon, both of which items with interest from time of payment to date have been credited to the United States in the report of the Comptroller General dated January 26, 1929. (S. Doc. No. 210, 70th Cong., 2d sess.)

REIMBURSEMENT OF NEVADA BEFORE THE DEPARTMENTS

On November 1, 1882, pursuant to the act of June 27, 1882 (22 Stat. 111), the State of Nevada transmitted to the authorities of the Government a statement of the aforesaid expenditures accompanied with the original vouchers and other evidence of every kind then in her possession. It was not until four years later that provision was made for the detail of a board of three Army officers under Special Orders, No. 232, dated October 6, 1886, to examine and report on said expenditures. The board, in 1887, submitted majority and minority reports; the latter allowed $8,559.61 of such expenditures, which amount was approved and paid the State on April 10, 1888. The particular differences in the allowances of the two reports related to the salary of the adjutant general of Nevada and expenses of his office, the minority report terminating it as of August 20, 1866, the official date of the end of the war, instead of December 31 following, as approved by the majority, when its affairs were wound up and the office terminated.

The audit of the board discovered a double charge for rent of $38.33 which the State had paid; no other errors or improper items being found in the disbursements.

SO-CALLED BOUNTIES AND EXTRA PAY

As hitherto stated, up to that time there had been no decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States under which any legal commitment of the Government to reimburse the Nevada Territorial expenditures, as distinguished from the expenditures of other States and Territories, could be established; hence reimbursement of Nevada was included under the act of June 27, 1882, supra, with those of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, and Kansas for Civil War and Indian war expenditures. The act was general in its provisions for the entire section embraced and among other things provided:

"SEC. 2. That no higher rate shall be allowed for the services of said forces, and for supplies, transportation, and other expenses, than was allowed and paid by the United States for similar services in the same grade and for the same time in the United States Army serving in said States and Territories * * *."

With respect to Nevada Territory, it is pertinent to remark that there was no United States Army in the Territory or State when the Nevada expenditures were made except as comprised the Nevada volunteers.

The provisions of the foregoing act, morever, were construed by the department in connection with the act of July 27, 1861 (12 Stat. 276), and the Chase regulations governing its provisions, particularly in the following:

"III. Personal expenses of commissioned officers in recruiting their companies prior to their being mustered into the service will not be allowed; but commissioned officers may be allowed the same rates for subsistence and quarters (board and lodging) as privates from the date of enrollment until muster into the service * * *.

"VIII. Bounties or donations to men or their families to induce men to volunteer will not be recognized * * *."

REPORT OF WAR-CLAIMS EXAMINERS

The report of the war-claims examiners contains the following statements relative to bounties and extra pay as allowed and paid by Nevada:

"The bounty was paid to captains for expenses incurred by them in enlisting, lodging, and subsisting the men of their companies prior to their entering the United States service, in lieu thereof, as is shown by the fact that no other bills are presented for those expenses, and, under the circumstances, this expense was economical; but this claim having been submitted by the State of Nevada as a premium or bounty, the examiners are debarred from considering it, as, under the second section of the act of 1882, no higher rate can be allowed than was paid by the United States, which was $2 per enlistment.

"Prices of commodities of every kind were extravagantly high during the war period in Nevada, which depended for the transportation of its supplies upon wagon roads across mountain ranges that were impassable for six months of every year; and at certain times at least during the said period the rich yields of newly opened mines produced an extraordinary demand for labor, largely increasing wages and salaries. These high prices of commodities and services were consistent with, though in their causes independent of, the depreciation of the Treasury notes, which did not pass current in that section of the country, though accepted through necessity by the troops serving there; and it is safe to say that in Nevada the soldier could buy no more with a gold dollar than could the soldier serving in the Eastern States with the greenback or paper dollar.

"On the whole, therefore, we are decided in the conviction that in granting them this extra compensation the legislature was mainly instigated by a desire to do a plain act of justice to the United States Volunteers raised in the State and performing as arduous frontier service, by placing them on the same footing, as regards compensation, with the great mass of the officers and soldiers of the United States Army serving east of the Rocky Mountains. * * * But the fact remains that the declared purpose of the monthly allowance was to give a compensation to the Nevada volunteers, and that when measured by the current prices of the country in which they were serving their compensation from all sources did not exceed if, indeed, it was equal to the value of the money received as pay by the troops stationed elsewhere; i. e., outside of the Department of the Pacific." (S. Rept. No. 433, 70th Cong., 1st sess.)

Nevertheless, because the Territory of Nevada had used the words "bounty" and "extra pay" in the statute under which it had reimbursed officers the costs of recruiting in lieu thereof and did a "plain act of justice" to its volunteers, all but a small fraction of its expenditures made for the benefit of the United States was rejected on such technical ground.

REIMBURSEMENT BEFORE THE COURT OF CLAIMS

The act of Congress of May 27, 1902 (32 Stat. 235), making appropriation for the payment of certain claims, among other things, provided:

"That the claim of the State of Nevada for costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by the Territory of Nevada * * * under the act of Congress of July 27, 1861 (12 Stat. 276), and joint resolution of March 8, 1862 (12 Stat. 615), as interpreted and applied by the Supreme Court of the United States in * * * New York against the United States, decided January 6, 1896 (160 U. S. 598), not hitherto allowed or hitherto disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, shall be reopened, examined, and allowed, and, if deemed necessary, shall be transmitted to the Court of Claims for findings of fact or determination of disputed questions of law to aid in the settlement of the claims by the accounting officers."

The particular force of the New York decision referred to was to declare interest paid by a State on moneys borrowed for the benefit of the United States was an expenditure "properly incurred" within the meaning of the acts of 1861 and 1862.

The controversial questions of fact and law submitted to the Court of Claims for determination amounted to these: (1) What classes of expenditures should be allowed the State of Nevada and (2) what interest charges are allowable?

The court in its opinion (45 Ct. Cl. 279) specifically states:

"The sole question of law before the court is whether the expenditures for which claim is made by the State were 'properly incurred' within the meaning of the acts of 1861 and 1862.

"The question of the good faith of the State in incurring the expenditures for which it now claims reimbursement; the question of the pressing need of the State for troops during the period of the Civil War; the duty of the United States to provide for the common defense, and the benefits which may have accrued to them from troops raised in Nevada to aid in protecting the Pacific coast may all be conceded without enlarging the liability of the United States under the acts of 1861 and 1862."

That the State may have an equitable claim against the United States was conceded (p. 285, supra):

"That laws enacted * * * at the instance of the officer commanding the military department of the Pacific to provide funds with which to meet the expense of volunteers was quite natural and commendable under the conditions existing * * * and may give rise to some equity in favor of the claim; but that can have no legal force in the construction of the act of 1861 * * * but where there is a law, equity must follow, and hence we are called upon to determine, not the equities of the claim, but the controverted questions of law."

The court upheld the rules promulgated by Secretary Chase as governing the construction of the act of 1861. As all but $8,559.61 of the claim had been disallowed in 1887 under such rules as hereinbefore set forth, the sole effect of the decision was the allowance of interest on $8,559.61 amounting to $12,283.04, which was paid the State July 1, 1910.

That portion of the opinion which held that—

"Whatever valid claim exists in favor of the State of Nevada for reimbursement for moneys expended in raising troops to aid in suppressing the rebellion accrued, if at all, under the act of July 27, 1861"— is obiter dicta; no question having been submitted, nor was within the jurisdiction of the court to hear and determine under the statute submitting the claim, as to any liability of the United States in the premises other than as accrued under the acts of 1861 and 1862.

ACTS OF 1861 AND 1862 NOT APPLICABLE

The acts of 1861 and 1862 specifically applied to States in their soverign capacities and were not intended to, nor did they, apply to the Territories which were under the direct authority of Congress. The act of Congress of July 27, 1861 (as amended by the joint resolution of March 8, 1862), in all pertinent provisions provided as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed * * * to pay to the governor of any State * * * the cost, charges, and expenses properly incurred by such State for enrolling * * * paying and transporting its troops employed in aiding the United States * * *." (12 Stat. 276.)

The radical distinction in relationship to the General Government of the States and Territories precludes any construction that said act applied, or was intended to apply, to the Territories.

"The State is a sovereign having no derivative powers, exercising its sovereignty by divine right. It gets none of its powers from the General Government. It has bound itself by compact with the other sovereign States not to exercise certain of its sovereign rights, and has conceded these to the Union, but in every other respect it retains its sovereignty which existed anterior to and independent of the Union. (Lowenstein v. Evans, 69 Fed. 908.)

"See also New Hampshire v. Louisiana, 108 U. S. 76; Ohio L. Ins. etc., Co. v. DeBolt, 16 How. 416; Spooner v. McConnell, 22 Fed. Cases No. 13245."

As contradistinguished from this reserved, unconceded sovereignty of the States, Chief Justice Waite, in the case of Brunswick First National Bank v. Yankton County (Dakota Territory, 1880), 101 U. S. 129, held:

"All territory within the jurisdiction of the United States not included in any State must necessarily be governed by or under the authority of Congress. The Territories are but political subdivisions of the outlying dominion of the United States. Their relation to the General Government is much the same as that which counties bear to the respective States, and Congress may legislate for them as a State does for its municipal organizations. The organic law of a Territory takes the place of a constitution as the fundamental law of the local government. It is obligatory on and binds the Territorial authorities; but Congress is supreme and for the purposes of this department of its governmental authority has all the powers of the people of the United States except such as have been expressly or by implication reserved in the prohibitions of the Constitution."

In the more recent opinion in the case of Christensen v. King County (Wash.), 239 U. S. 356, the Supreme Court stated:

"There is, of course, no dispute as to the sovereignty of the United States over the Territory of Washington or as to the consequent control of Congress. As an organized political division the Territory possessed only the powers which Congress had conferred. * * *

It was not until October 31, 1864, date of Nevada's admission into the Union, that the acts of 1861 and 1862 were made applicable by the express provisions of section 11 of the enabling act of Congress of March 21, 1864—

"That from and after the admission of the said State of Nevada into the Union, in pursuance of this act, the laws of the United States, not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within said State as elsewhere within the United States."

Prior thereto, on February 20, 1864, the Territory had passed the act under which the expenditures here in question were made.

LEGAL, EQUITABLE, AND MORAL BASIS OF REIMBURSEMENT

The question of the legal, equitable, and moral liability of the United States in the premises resolves primarily into what congressional authorization, approval, or ratification, if any, attaches to the Territorial volunteers act and so invests it with a status different from that of an ordinary act of a Territorial assembly or the similar acts of States.

ACT RATIFIED BY CONGRESS

The organic act of the Territory of Nevada, approved March 2, 1861, required (sec. 3) that copies of the laws and proceedings of the legislative assembly and governor be transmitted to the President and the Congress of the United States. It appears from the following section of the Revised Law of the United States (1878):

"SEC. 1850. All laws passed by the legislative assembly and governor of any Territory except the Territories of Colorado, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming, shall be submitted to Congress and if disapproved shall be null and void"— that the only other Territories, during the period 1861–1865, subject to this requirement were Nevada, New Mexico, Arizona, Washington, and Utah.

The Nevada Territorial volunteers act was duly transmitted and laid before the two Houses of Congress. (House Journal No. 62, 38th Cong., 2d sess., 1864–65, p. 7.)

Congress having the authority—and in respect to another act of the Territorial Assembly of Nevada, relating to corporations (12 Stat. 709), having exercised such authority—to disapprove and annul all or any portion of said act and not so doing, but allowing said act to stand, thereby approved and, in the premises, ratified said act as the act of the Territory of Nevada under authority of the United States; and is estopped from denying reimbursement. (Sowers case, 213 U. S. 5.)

The Territorial volunteers act was not an ordinary, but instead an extraordinary, act of the Legislative Assembly and Governor of the Territory of Nevada. It was not related to, but dissociated from, the ordinary subjects of Territorial legislation. It was, in effect, the assumption of an obligation of the Government of the United States and not of its own, in order to aid and assist the Government in an exigency with which the Government was unprepared to meet and cope. The Territory of Nevada was its primary resource, as hithereto shown, and acted only on urgent requisitions transmitted through the commander of the Department of the Pacific on behalf of the Secretary of War.

TERRITORIAL VOLUNTEERS ACT GOVERNS

The acts of 1861 and 1862 supra, not having been extended or made applicable to Nevada Territory, the Territorial volunteers act, as so approved and ratified by the Congress of the United States, became the governing law in the premises, to wit: An act of the Territory of Nevada under authority of the United States.

On this point the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of McLean v. D. & R. G. R. R. Co. (203 U. S. p. 38) held:

"The right to legislate in the Territories is conferred under constitutional authority by the Congress of the United States and the passage of a Territorial law is the exertion of an authority exercised under the United States."

In the case of Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. v. Sowers (213 U. S. 5) the Supreme Court reaffirmed the decision in the McLean case and stated:

"The passage of a legislative act of a Territory is the exercise of authority under the United States."

The force of the Nevada Territorial volunteers act did not terminate with the admission of Nevada as a State. Section 2 of article 17 of its constitution, as approved by President Lincoln under authority, and "without further action whatever on the part of Congress" (Nevada enabling act of March 21, 1864), provided:

"SEC. 2. All laws of the Territory of Nevada at the time of the admission of this State, not repugnant to this constitution, shall remain in force until they expire by their own limitations, or be altered or repealed by the legislature."

On March 11, 1865, for reasons hereinbefore stated, the State Legislature of Nevada passed an act, notwithstanding the veto of the governor, repealing and simultaneously reenacting the provisions of the Territorial volunteers act; the sole material change being an increase of extra pay to officers according to rank and so equating their compensation on substantially the same basis relatively as allowed the soldiers; the relief made retroactive to cover the period of service.

"The repeal and simultaneous reenactment of substantially the same statutory provisions is to be construed, not as an implied repeal of the original statute but as a continuation thereof." (36 Cyc. 1084.)

Federal and State decisions supporting the above text are so uniform and voluminous that it has become an accepted principle of law.

The State of Nevada having been in honor bound to assume the liabilities accrued and accruing under the Territorial volunteers act, and the Congress of the United States having approved such assumption, the State is entitled to the full benefit of the Territorial volunteers act as the governing law defining the liability of the United States in the premises. It would therefore now appear that Congress inadvertently specified the act of 1861 applying to States only instead of the Nevada Territorial act under which the expenditures were made in the reference of the Nevada case to the Court of Claims.

ADJUSTMENT OF OFFICERS' PAY

The only portion of the unreimbursed principal sum of the expenditures made by the State of Nevada which did not accrue under the original provisions of the Territorial volunteers act was the increased allowance to officers by the State's amendment of March 11, 1865, the amount of which is comparatively small.

On the foregoing date the following state of facts obtained:

No premonition that the Civil War would speedily end.

The exigency of the Government for troops to protect the Overland Trail continuing and Nevada its primary recourse.

The third requisition of the Secretary of War upon Nevada to complete the recruiting of a regiment of cavalry and one of infantry still lacking, respectively four and seven companies to complete the quota.

Recruiting halted by the fact that men suitable for officers were needed both for the service and to recruit the men they were to command and who were unable, on account of the high cost of living, to make the sacrifice without some assistance.

Under these circumstances the State legislature, on March 11, 1865, had the right to rely on the Territorial volunteers act as governing in the premises and that the approval by Congress of said Territorial act sanctioned the granting of extra pay to Nevada volunteers in the exigency presented.

Moreover, Nevada, in responding to the urgent requisitions of the War Department to recruit troops to protect the Overland Trail, had acted and still was acting for and in behalf of the United States as principal. In the agency so undertaken, the situation being remote, the conditions being extraordinary, and the emergency one of national concern, it was expected to act in concurrence with the recommendations of the commander of the Department of the Pacific, as seemed best to accomplish the ends for which the agency was imposed.

Nevada so acted by amending the Territorial volunteers act as stated, and which action was necessary, proper, and indispensable in the premises and the authority for which was the Territorial volunteers act itself and the continuation of the exigency which had caused its sanction by Congress.

The rule of agency as expressed in Story on Agency is applicable:

"Whether the authority be expressed or implied, it necessarily carries with it or includes in it as an incident all the powers which are necessary or proper or usual as means to effectuate the purposes for which the agency was created."

The leading case defining the authority of an agent in an emergency is that of Forrestier v. Bordman (9th Fed. Case 4945, also 1 Story, 43). The principal laid down therein has since threaded all American jurisprudence. If we substitute the word "agent" for "supercargo" and "principal" for "owner" as used by Justice Story in the decision, the governing rule is as follows:

"An agent is not bound to observe the exact terms of his instructions if thereby the interests of the principal would be sacrificed or his objects frustrated.

"In cases of necessity or great urgency it is only necessary that the agent should act bona fide and with reasonable discretion in order to bind the principal."

In United States v. Sheridan-Kirk Contract Co. (149 Fed. 809) the court held that when the emergency passes the privilege ceases.

On March 11, 1865, neither the emergency situation along the Overland Trail nor the exigency of the United States for troops to protect it had passed. The Legislature of Nevada was not bound to observe the exact terms of the Territorial volunteers act if thereby the interests of the United States would be sacrificed or its objects frustrated. It was only necessary that it should act in good faith and with reasonable discretion.

That it acted in good faith and with reasonable discretion has never been questioned. Moreover, it so acted at the express suggestion of the chief military officer of the United States in the region of the emergency, the commander of the Department of the Pacific (letter of March 8, 1865), and not independently of nor contrary to his recommendations.

The opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Miners' Bank case, cited by the court in the Atchison v. Sowers case, supra, is very pursuasive. From the opinion written by Mr. Justice Daniel we quote the following excerpt:

"Congress, in creating the Territorial governments, and in conferring upon them powers of general legislation, did not, from obvious principles of policy and necessity, ordain a suspension of all acts proceeding from those powers until expressly sanctioned by themselves, whilst, for considerations equally strong, they reserved the power of disapproving or annulling such acts of Territorial legislation as might be deemed detrimental. A different system of procedure would have been fatal to all practical improvement in those Territories, however urgently called for; nay, might have disarmed them of the very power of self-preservation. An invasion or insurrection or any other crisis demanding the most strenuous action, would have had to remain without preventive or remedy 'till the Congress, if not in session, could be convened, or, when in session, must have awaited its possibly procrastinated aid.'" (Miners' Bank v. State of Iowa, 12 How. 8; 19 U. S. 6.)

Applying the foregoing statements to the actual conditions existing in the Territory of Nevada at the time the debt in question was contracted by the Territorial legislature solely for the benefit of the United States—a vast desert region, sparsely populated, shut off from the rest of the Nation by impassable mountain barriers, both to the east and the west, for practically six months of each year; an Indian uprising which lasted for many years which, according to the commanding general of the Pacific, threatened the entire closure of communication with the Pacific coast—the action of the Territorial legislature under these circumstances was directly in accordance with the powers by it possessed, as stated by the Supreme Court in the Miners' Bank case rendered in 1861, such action receiving the approval of Congress.

LIABILITY OF THE UNITED STATES

The legal liability of the United States rests on the following grounds: (1) By approving said Territorial act of February 20, 1864, providing extra pay, Congress accepted said act as a modification of the act of 1861 and the regulations made thereunder so far as Nevada alone was concerned and thereby made such extra pay here in dispute valid. (2) It is proven that such extra pay was made by the Territory of Nevada avowedly for the benefit of the United States alone with the approval of Congress; and as stated by the Supreme Court such Territorial act was the exercise of the authority of the United States. (3) Congress is estopped from denying just reimbursement.

The moral liability of the United States rests on the fact that its sparse people struggled to build a commonwealth upon a desert, burdened themselves with the costs of statehood and debt to serve the Union in its exigencies at its urgent call.

The Supreme Court of the United States in United States v. Realty Co. (163 U. S. 427) said:

"That the case as presented to Congress was enough upon which to base the assertion that there was a moral and honorable claim upon the Public Treasury which that body had the constitutional right to recognize and pay; that even though in its purely legal aspects an invalid law could not be made the basis of a legal claim, the planter had acquired a claim against the Government of an 'equitable, moral, or honorable nature'; that the Nation, speaking broadly, owed a 'debt' to an individual when his claim grew out of right and justice—when, in other words, it was based upon considerations of a moral or merely honorary nature."

Reimbursement in accordance with the account stated by the Comptroller General in Senate Document No. 210, Seventieth Congress, second session, is strongly based on "right and justice," as the State of Nevada is not asking Congress to appropriate a dollar she has not actually expended for the benefit of the United States.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 13685) to regulate the distribution and promotion of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4937) continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that this bill go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LIEUT. ROBERT O'HAGAN, SUPPLY CORPS, UNITED STATES NAVY

The bill (S. 3981) for the relief of Lieut. Robert O'Hagan, Supply Corps, United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I ask that Order of Business 1828, House bill 13812, which is identical with this bill, be substituted for the bill just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13812) for the relief of Lieut. Robert O'Hagan, Supply Corps, United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 3981 is indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 12502) for the relief of John H. and Avie D. Mathison, parents of Charles W. Mathison, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that bill, Mr. President. [A pause.] Let it be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

HUGH ANTHONY M'GUIGAN

The bill (H. R. 13658) for the relief of Hugh Anthony McGuigan was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWIN I. CHATCUFF

The bill (H. R. 13721) for the relief of Edwin I. Chatcuff was considered as in Commtitee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5581) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the paving of the Federal strip known as International Street, adjacent to Nogales, Ariz.," approved May 16, 1928, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask that this bill may be temporarily passed over until an identical House bill, which passed the House yesterday, may be messaged to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

FRANCIS LEO SHEA

The bill (H. R. 9009) for the relief of Francis Leo Shea was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this is a bill where no money is involved. It is simply to do justice to a young man who was sent to Haiti, and on that account was not able to take an examination. The Senator will observe, however, that it is provided that a duly constituted naval retiring board must find that he incurred physical disability in line of duty; and it is also provided that no back pay, allowances, or emoluments shall become due him as a result of the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS J. M'DONALD

The bill (S. 2986) for the relief of Francis J. McDonald was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Francis J. McDonald, owner of the American schooner Henry W. Cramp, the sum of $25,000, such sum representing losses sustained by the owner of the schooner because of the interruption of a voyage by reason of the intervention of the United States Shipping Board, effective August 21, 1917, causing the vessel to breach her charter party. The acceptance of such sum by the owner of the schooner shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of the owner in respect to such losses.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill; and I will ask the Senator who reported it, if there is any liability at all, why it should not be paid out of the Shipping Board fund?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, this bill was originally introduced in a way which would have sent it to the Court of Claims for determination. On that bill, as a subcommittee, I reported unfavorably. The question then came up in the committee as to whether or not a part of the claim should be allowed. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] and myself then investigated it together as a subcommittee, having before us the men interested in the claim.

The claim is this:

Before the war, or before any activities which would have made it dangerous for shipping to cross the ocean, a contract was made to deliver certain goods to a foreign country. The boat started from a Gulf port, deviated from its course, and went to Norfolk. I reached the conclusion, and the committee agreed with me, that the deviation from its course would prohibit any liability, either equitable, moral, or legal, so far as the Government was concerned, as to any damages occurring up to that time.

The boat then stayed there for a short time, preparing to leave the port. After it had been there for several weeks, clearance was granted, and the boat prepared to get away. In the meantime the Shipping Board issued an order prohibiting this boat from going across the water. Other boats were permitted to clear from other ports. In other instances the Shipping Board took the cargo on the Government's own boat and transported it across the ocean. This cargo was held up. They did not permit it to go, although vigorous protests were filed; and finally the boat was towed up to Philadelphia, and great losses were sustained. A suit was filed against the shipper by a man named Rosasco, to whom he had agreed to transport the cargo. A judgment was rendered for something over $100,000, which judgment was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Senator from Oregon and myself and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN], acting with us a part of the time, investigating as to the damages resulting, had full information given us. Claim was made for damages amounting to about $80,000. We investigated the matter fully, and cut down the amount to what we believed to be a minimum so low that no complaint could be made, and did not believe it wise to send the matter to the Court of Claims, which would simply cause additional expense; and we were very much of the opinion that if it went to the Court of Claims to determine the damages a larger amount probably would be awarded.

That is the bill under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. KING. In my time, may I ask the Senator why the Shipping Board prohibited this boat from sailing?

Mr. BLACK. The Shipping Board prohibited it by reason of the fact that it was considered dangerous at that time to transport cargoes across the water; and in most instances the Shipping Board itself took the cargo and transported it, and thereby any damages which might have resulted were prevented. This man has been out over $100,000 by reason of that order.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, may I further state to the Senator from Utah a fact to which I think he has not paid attention, which was remarked upon by the Senator from Alabama, and that is that the Shipping Board took other cargoes from other vessels under similar circumstances, put them in Shipping Board boats and transported them, but refused to take this cargo.

Mr. KING. I paid attention to that, and I am wondering why they did it.

Mr. BAYARD. They gave no reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD C. DUNLAP

The bill (S. 5091) for the relief of Edward C. Dunlap was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Edward C. Dunlap, on account of injuries sustained on January 25, 1909, while employed by the Reclamation Service in the construction of the Gunnison Tunnel, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, without regard to the time of the filing of his claim for such benefits.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPACT BETWEEN COLORADO AND UTAH

The bill (H. R. 7028) granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado and Utah with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado, Green, Bear or Yampa, the White, San Juan, and Dolores Rivers and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Colorado," to insert "Wyoming, New Mexico"; on page 2, line 3, after the word "interested," to insert "Provided, however, That such compacts or agreements shall be subsidiary to and subject to the terms of the Colorado River compact, signed at Santa Fe November 24, 1922, if and when approved"; on line 7, after the words "Sec. 2," to strike out "Such consent is given upon condition that a representative of the United States from the Department of the Interior" and insert "Upon request of the governors of said States, a representative of the United States"; and in line 11, after the word "negotiations," to insert "respecting any of said streams," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, and Utah to negotiate and enter into compacts or agreements providing for an equitable division and apportionment between such States of the water supply of the Colorado, Green, Bear or Yampa, the White, San Juan, and Dolores Rivers and of the streams tributary thereto and of all other streams in which such States are jointly interested: Provided, however, That such compacts or agreements shall be subsidiary to and subject to the terms of the Colorado River compact, signed at Santa Fe November 24, 1922, if and when approved.

SEC. 2. Upon request of the governors of said States, a representative of the United States, to be appointed by the President, shall participate in the negotiations respecting any of said streams and shall make report to Congress of the proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into. Other than the compensation and expenses of such representative the United States shall not be liable for any expenses in connection with such negotiations, compact, or agreement. The payment of such expenses of such representative is authorized to be paid from the appropriations for cooperative and general investigations for the Bureau of Reclamation.

SEC. 3. No such compact or agreement shall be binding or obligatory upon either of such States unless and until it has been approved by the legislature of each of such States and by the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 4. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is herewith expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, and Utah with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado, Green, Bear or Yampa, the White, San Juan, and Dolores Rivers and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested."

C. C. SPILLER, DECEASED

The bill (S. 5787) for the relief of the estate of C. C. Spiller, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of C. C. Spiller, deceased, late of Hamilton County, Tenn., the sum of $8,000, found to be due him by the Court of Claims, in congressional case No. 10549 as appears by Senate Document No. 173, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, being his share of the reasonable charter value, together with the destruction thereof, of a small steamboat, known as the Paint Rock, taken and used by the United States, and while in their possession accidentally destroyed and never paid for, all while the said C. C. Spiller, deceased, was a loyal citizen of the United States, as evidenced by the findings or report, dated June 27, 1864, of a board of claims designated by the commanding officer of the Department of the Cumberland, by Special Field Orders, No. 104, dated April 12, 1864, still of record in the War Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WYNONA A. DIXON

The bill (S. 5776) for the relief of Wynona A. Dixon was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,666.67 to Wynona A. Dixon, that being the value of certain of her property seized and appropriated by the military forces of the United States during the late Civil War, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 333, Sixty-first Congress, first session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS

The bill (H. R. 16878) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 5, line 6, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$20" and insert "$12," so as to read:

The name of Morrow B. Wilson, late of Battery H, Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 5, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$30" and insert "$12," so as to read:

The name of Emma C. Bragg, widow of Herbert E. Bragg, late of United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 15, to strike out:

The name of May R. Gehlbach, widow of William C. Gehlbach, late of the Seventy-third Company, United States Coast Artillery Corps, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, with $2 per month additional for each minor child of the soldier until they shall attain the age of 16 years, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 10, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$90" and insert "$72," so as to read:

The name of George Curry, late of Company K, Eleventh Regiment United States Cavalry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 3, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$30" and insert "$20," so as to read:

The name of Sarah A. Byam, widow of William C. Byam, late of the United States Navy, war with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 21, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$30" and insert "$20," so as to read:

The name of Nancy M. Oglesby, widow of William W. Oglesby, late captain Company G, Second Regiment Oregon State Militia, Bannock Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 21, to insert:

The name of Sarah E. Boothe, helpless child of William H. Boothe, late of Company E, Second Regiment Kentucky Infantry, Mexican War, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Archibald A. Cameron, late of Hospital Corps, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Mary A. Walters, widow of James A. Walters, late of Company G, Second Regiment Idaho Volunteer Militia, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Burel E. Pollard, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Richard C. Baalke, late of Company F, Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Peter Huntsman, late of Capt. James C. Owens's company, Utah Militia Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, line 14, at the end of the line, strike out "$30" and insert in lieu thereof "$125."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, a bill for the relief of this lady passed the Senate, and also passed the House, providing that this widow be allowed $4,500. It passed the Senate, it passed the House, but got tangled up at the end of the last session, and never was enacted.

Instead of giving this widow $4,500 I have concluded it best to give her a pension. She is an old lady, and somebody might take the $4,500, or she might lose it, and she has to have aid to support a child. This is a just claim. I will ask to have printed in the RECORD a copy of the House committee report on the bill.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WIDOW OF RUDOLPH H. VON EZDORF

Mr. EDMONDS, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 528):

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 528) for the relief of the widow of Rudolph H. von Ezdorf, deceased, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out the preamble.

Attached herewith is Senate Report No. 766.

There is also attached communication from the Secretary of the Treasury under date of January 20, 1923, with inclosure.

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3205) for the relief of the widow of Rudolph H. von Ezdorf, deceased, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The facts in the case are fully set forth in Senate Report No. 465, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

[S. Rept. No. 465, 65th Cong., 2d sess.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2474) for the relief of the widow of Rudolph H. von Ezdorf, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

On page 2, line 2, strike out the figures "$9,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$4,500."

The bill provides for the payment to the widow of Rudolph H. von Ezdorf, a late surgeon and a commissioned officer in the United States Public Health Service, the sum of $9,000 on account of the death of her husband, which was caused by myocarditis, contracted as a sequel to an attack of yellow fever incurred in the line of duty while an assistant surgeon engaged on the special work of suppressing an epidemic of yellow fever in the State of Mississippi during the year 1898.

After a careful consideration of the bill your committee is of the opinion that the bill should be amended so as to allow a sum equal to a year's salary, and as so amended recommend its passage.

The facts are carefully set forth in the following letter and memorandum, dated January 30, 1918, from Hon. James H. Moyle, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 30, 1918.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reference to your letter of January 28, requesting information relative to the provisions of bill S. 2474, for the relief of the widow of the late Surg. R. H. von Ezdorf, and also requesting an expression of opinion from this department as to the merits of this proposed legislation, I have to transmit herewith a memorandum containing data in respect to Surgeon von Ezdorf's services as an officer of the United States Public Health Service and the circumstances leading up to his death.

It is the opinion of this department that the proposed measure is a meritorious one and deserving of favorable consideration.

Respectfully,

J. H. MOYLE, Assistant Secretary.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS, UNITED STATES SENATE, RELATIVE TO BILL S. 2774

On June 18, 1917, this bill was introduced in the Senate by Senator Owen and was referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill provides for the relief of the widow of the late Surg. R. H. von Ezdorf, United States Public Health Service. Doctor von Ezdorf entered the Public Health Service in March, 1898. He passed a rigid physical examination at that time and was found to be physically sound. In the fall of 1898 he was ordered by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to duty in connection with the suppression of a yellow-fever epidemic at Taylor, Miss., and while so engaged contracted the disease in a serious form. From the nature of the relapse he had at that time it was evident that the heart muscles were considerably affected. Subsequently, however, he recovered and until the date of his death led a very active life in public-health work, more especially in the investigation of the control of malarial fever in the Southern States.

He served as quarantine officer at Santiago during the intervention by the United States, and later at Habana and Matanzas, Cuba. He also served at Colon and Cristobal, Canal Zone, when the Government first acquired those possessions. In 1914, at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, Doctor von Ezdorf was assigned to duty with the forces of occupation accompanying the battleship fleet to Vera Cruz, where he was port medical officer and consultant in the sanitation of that port. Aside from these various details he served in epidemics of yellow fever, plague, and cholera, and subsequent to 1912 was engaged in extensive investigations of malarial fever in the United States and measures for its eradication and prevention. His death occurred near Lincolnton, N. C., on September 8, 1916, from acute dilatation of the heart while running for shelter to escape an oncoming storm. At the time of his death he was making a field investigation of malarial fever in that section. The exertion which caused the acute dilatation in this connection was not sufficient to affect the normal heart, and in studying the case the only cause to which the cardiac weakness can be ascribed is the attack of yellow fever in 1898. His heart was perfectly sound when he entered the service, and he had no other illness except yellow fever since becoming a service officer.

This case appears similar to that of the late Maj. James Carroll, Medical Corps, United States Army, who died in 1907 of a cardiac condition attributed to an attack of yellow fever acquired by him in 1898. Congress in the case of Major Carroll voted a special pension to his widow of $125 per month. There is no provision in law granting a pension to the widows of Public Health Service officers who have died in the line of duty, and the commission for the enforcement of the employees' compensation act has ruled that an officer is not an employee within the meaning of the referred to act, and consequently is not entitled to any of the benefits prescribed therein.

This legislation may well be based on the grounds that Doctor von Ezdorf's death was incurred in line of duty, and that the actual cause and contributing factors were the result of the performance of his official duties.

Congress has apparently acquiesced in the justice of such an argument, as instanced by Private Act No. 56, of May 6, 1910, which provided for Mrs. W. W. Miller, widow of Assistant Surgeon Miller, deceased, a sum equivalent to two years' pay and allowances of Assistant Surgeon Miller, who died in the line of duty from typhoid fever contracted while engaged on a typhoid survey.

The widow of the late Passed Asst. Surg. T. B. McClintic, by Private Act No. 47, of June 24, 1914, was given the amount of salary and allowances for two years of Passed Assistant Surgeon McClintic, who died from Rocky Mountain spotted fever incurred in the line of duty.

The Southern Medical Association, southern health officers, Louisiana State Board of Health, and various other medical organizations of the Southern States at various dates subsequent to Surgeon von Ezdorf's death passed resolutions in recognition of his efforts and achievements in the field of sanitation in the Southern States.

Doctor von Ezdorf at the time of his death was 44 years of age. He is survived by a wife and minor child.

To the UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: In view of the fact that Senate bill 8190, introduced by Senator Owen February 8, 1917, for the relief of the widow of Rudolph von Ezdorf, is now pending in the Senate, we, the undersigned, feel it our duty in appreciation of the magnificent services rendered by Doctor von Ezdorf in his official capacity in this section of our country to urge upon you to lend every assistance you can to the end that this bill may become a law.

We do not wish to take your time with a recitation of the many benefits which have come to us in the South and indirectly to the whole country on account of the great work performed by Doctor von Ezdorf against yellow fever and malaria, but can not refrain from saying that we believe the relief contemplated by the bill will be but a small return by this country for the benefits received from Doctor von Ezdorf's services.

Respectfully,

W. H. SEEMANN, M. D.,
President Louisiana Medical Society.
P. J. GELPI, M. D.,
President Orleans Parish Medical Society.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 23, 1923.

Hon. GEORGE W. EDMONDS,
Chairman Committee on Claims,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. EDMONDS: Referring to the request of your committee for an expression of opinion as to the merits of the bill (S. 3205) for the relief of the widow of Rudolph H. von Ezdorf, deceased, I have the honor to transmit herewith a memorandum containing data with respect to Surgeon von Ezdorf's services as an officer of the United States Public Health Service and the circumstances leading up to his death.

In view of these facts, it is the opinion of this department that the proposed measure is a meritorious one and deserving of favorable consideration.

Respectfully,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

MEMORANDUM RELATIVE TO THE PROPOSED ACT FOR THE RELIEF OF THE WIDOW OF R. H. VON EZDORF, DECEASED

This legislation is requested on the grounds that Doctor von Ezdorf's death was incurred in the line of duty, and that the actual cause and contributing factors were the results of the performance of his official duties.

Congress has apparently acquiesced in the justice of such an argument, as instanced in Private Act No. 56, of May 6, 1910, which gave to Mrs. W. W. Miller, widow of Assistant Surgeon Miller, deceased, a sum equivalent to two years' pay and allowances of Assistant Surgeon Miller, who died in line of duty from typhoid fever, contracted while working on a typhoid survey.

The widow of Passed Asst. Surg. T. B. McClintic, by Private Act No. 47, of June 24, 1914, was given the amount of salary and allowances for two years of Passed Assistant Surgeon McClintic, who died from Rocky Mountain spotted fever incurred in line of duty.

Doctor von Ezdorf entered the Public Health Service in March, 1898. He was physically sound at that time and passed a rigid physical examination. In the fall of 1898 he was ordered by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to duty in connection with the suppression of a yellow-fever epidemic at Taylor, Miss., and while so engaged contracted the disease in a serious form. From the nature of the relapse which he had at that time it is evident that the heart muscles were considerably affected. Subsequently, however, he recovered, and from that time until the date of his death led a very active life in public-health work, more especially in the investigation and control of malarial fever in the South.

He was promoted to the grade of passed assistant surgeon in 1903 and to the grade of surgeon in 1912.

He served as quarantine officer at Santiago during the intervention of the United States and later at Habana and Matanzas, Cuba. He also served at Colon and Cristobal, Canal Zone, when the Government first acquired those possessions. In 1914, at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, Doctor von Ezdorf was assigned to duty with the forces of occupation accompanying the Battleship Fleet to Vera Cruz, where he was port officer of the city and consultant in the sanitation of that port.

Aside from these details, he served in various epidemics of yellow fever, plague, and cholera, and subsequent to 1912 was engaged in extensive investigations of malarial fever in the Southern States and in measures for its prevention and eradication.

His death occurred near Lincolnton, N. C., on September 8, 1916, from acute dilatation of the heart, as a result of unusual exertion in running for shelter to escape an oncoming storm. At the time of his death he was making a field investigation of the prevalence of malarial fever in that section.

The exertion which caused acute cardiac dilatation in this connection was not sufficient to affect a normal heart, and it is only reasonable to assume that Doctor von Ezdorf had a certain cardiac weakness, and in studying the case the only cause to which the cardiac weakness can be ascribed is the attack of yellow fever in 1898, as his heart was perfectly sound when he entered the service, and he had had no illness other than yellow fever since being a service officer.

Doctor von Ezdorf is survived by a wife and daughter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, a member of the Pensions Committee of the House who has been sick a long time had a bill before the Pensions Committee to pay the widow of a soldier $20, and I will send forward another amendment covering that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. Insert at the end of the bill the following:

The name of Sarah D. Rich, dependent mother of Wade T. Hall, late of Company K, Third Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement of the facts in this case, so the House conferees will have them.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 22, 1929.

In re House bill 15991.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR OVERMAN: Referring to my conversation with you over the telephone on yesterday concerning a bill I introduced in the House for the relief of Mrs. Sarah D. Rich, Randleman, mother of Wade T. Hall, who was killed on the Mexican border while serving with the National Guard, I furnish you with the following data:

House bill 15991 provides for a pension of $20 a month to Mrs. Sarah D. Rich, dependent mother of the late Wade T. Hall, who was killed while serving in Company K, Third North Carolina Infantry. This bill would have been acted upon favorably by the Pensions Committee, of which I am a member, so I am advised by members of the committee and by the clerk to the committee, but it was not reached. All I had done in the matter was to furnish the data requested by the committee. Just after the bill had been introduced I was taken ill and could not appear before the committee in the matter.

The claimant, Mrs. Sarah D. Rich, has no real estate and no personal property except $200 which she acquired from the property of her late husband. She has this money on interest. She is unable to work, and this money is her only income. Mrs. Rich lives with her son, who boards her. She furnishes her own clothing. The son with whom she lives is a day laborer at small wages and has a family to support, and it is with great difficulty that he can provide the actual necessities of life. Medical care of Mrs. Rich is required constantly. She has myocarditis and is unable to do any kind of work. This disease, as I understand it, affects the muscles of the heart and is extremely dangerous, and sometimes follows as an aftermath of the influenza.

The foregoing facts were taken from a statement made by the attending physician, Dr. C. E. Wilkerson, and by a near neighbor, Mr. D. R. Bulla, who is one of the best and most trustworthy citizens of my country.

I have known Mrs. Rich a long time, and knew her first husband and her second husband. Her son, Wade T. Hall, was not married. Wade T. Hall was serving with the National Guard on the Mexican border, at El Paso, Tex., at the time he was killed. He was killed December 31, 1916.

Mrs. Rich filed a claim with the Pension Bureau, but the claim was disallowed on the ground that the injury causing the death of her son was not in line of duty; but it was as much or more in the line of duty, according to my view on the matter, than several cases that have been acted upon favorably by the Pension Bureau.

I would, indeed, be glad if you could get this through. It is not my purpose to ask for anything that does not have merit.

This is the first and only bill I have ever had before my committee asking for the relief for any person in the congressional district which

I have the honor to represent in Congress. I do not ask for its passage on that account, but from the evidence produced. I have never made a raid upon the Treasury.

Thanking you for the favor and with best wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

WM. C. HAMMER.

Mr. BRATTON. I send forward an amendment which I ask to have agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. Insert at the end of the committee amendment at the end of the bill and after the amendment of Mr. OVERMAN the following:

The name of Alpha W. Felter, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President, my colleague the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] has offered an amendment. He is engaged in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in reference to the Memphis postmaster. I do not know the details of the amendment, but I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, after line 25, insert the following:

The name of Mary Frances McConnell, dependent widow of Lieut. Frank Brower McConnell, late of the One hundred and fifth Observation Squadron, killed by a falling airplane while on duty in said plane, and pay her a pension at the rate of $150 per month.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, is that offered on behalf of the senior Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TYSON. The senior Senator from Tennessee has offered that as an amendment. I do not know the details of it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I was under the impression it was to be offered for $50 a month. The Senator spoke to me about the matter, and in that I thought we had agreed.

Mr. TYSON. I know nothing about it, except that I found it here, and I did not want the bill to be passed without having an opportunity to have this incorporated. I offer it as an amendment.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee I want to say that we can not accept the amendment in that sum. If the Senator will make it $50 a month, I see no objection to accepting it.

Mr. BRATTON. As a member of the Committee on Pensions I desire to join in the expression just made, and I express the hope that it be submitted for $50 a month, in line with the understanding between the senior Senator from Tennessee and the chairman of the committee.

Mr. TYSON. Will the Senator permit me to have it passed over for a moment until I see my colleague?

Mr. BLEASE. That is the request I was about to make. The senior Senator from Tennessee is engaged in a meeting of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads about the postmaster of his home city.

Mr. TYSON. I understand from the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] that my colleague had left word with him that he was willing to have it made $50 a month. I therefore submit the amendment in that sum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

At this point Mr. MCKELLAR reentered the Chamber.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I was detained in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on the Memphis postmaster nomination, or I would have been here sooner.

This amendment was offered by me for the purpose of compensating Mary Frances McConnell, dependent widow of Frank B. McConnell, formerly of Nashville, Tenn. Lieutenant McConnell was a lieutenant in the Air Corps, being a member of the One hundred and fifth Observation Squadron, Tennessee National Guard. Nearly two years ago, early in June, 1927, Lieutenant McConnell was called to duty at Langley Field, Va. While engaged in air maneuvers in the service of their country Lieutenant McConnell and Lieut. C. A. Anderson were killed. Their plane crashed near the post incinerator and burst into flames as it hit the ground, both airmen being burned almost beyond recognition. Lieutenant Anderson and Lieutenant McConnell were members of the Tennessee National Guard. The machine, O–26 plane, was about 150 feet in the air when it suddenly crashed earthward. The cause of the accident was not known. The plane was on its way to the target grounds for machine-gun practice when it crashed. Witnesses say that the machine went into a tail spin while apparently trying to make a turn.

Maj. J. C. Bennett, when told of the accident, said that it was hard to believe in the light of Lieutenant McConnell's ability as a pilot. He recalled the time of McConnell's enlistment four years ago and his steady climb through the ranks to the office of first lieutenant. In addition to his skill as a pilot, Lieutenant McConnell was praised by his superior as an unusually well-qualified officer, due to his inherent qualities and experience gained during his service during the World War with the marines.

In 1916, during the trouble on the Mexican border, McConnell enlisted in the National Guard and served with the American troops under command of General Pershing. Upon the return of the troops, while the United States had not yet entered the European war, he enlisted in the United States Marine Corps and received his early training at Paris Island. He returned to Nashville with the noncommissioned rank of sergeant and served on recruiting duty. During his recruiting service the Nashville station made a wonderful record in war-time enlistments. He was then sent to Quantico, Va., for further training and there received his commission as second lieutenant in the Marine Corps. During the war he saw service in Haiti and Cuba, the marines playing an important part in quelling the revolution in Haiti. He joined the One hundred and fifth Observation Squadron in 1923 and was then sent to Brooks Field, Tex., in 1925, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant. He was later commissioned first lieutenant and was made commanding officer of the One hundred and sixty-fifth Photo Section and officer in charge of Blackwood Field. He was an expert with the pistol and a sharpshooter, having won medals for proficiency in these lines in the Marine Corps.

Mr. President, the reason I have accepted $50 is because I can not at this time get more. One hundred and fifty dollars would be little enough surely, but rather than get nothing I have accepted what the chairman has agreed to.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD certain newspaper articles which give an account of the accident, and a history of this soldier.

TWO YOUNG FLYERS

Nashville was deeply shocked and grieved yesterday afternoon when it was learned that the lives of Lieuts. F. B. McConnell and C. A. Anderson had been claimed by one of the air's abrupt tragedies at Langley Field in Virginia. Both these fliers were young men who were only in the beginning of careers that promised much of worth-while achievement. That they were possessed of daring and adventurous spirits is testified by the fact that they were flyers. Men do not go up in the air in ships unless they have something more of courage and initiative than is granted the average person among us. When these two young flyers met their doom they were engaged in patriotic service no less commendable than if it had been in time of war. On account of superior skill and interest in their important branch of military service, they had been assigned to take a special flying course at Langley Field.

Why these two young men should have been marked by death is one of those things that mortal man can but confess he does not and can not understand. Certain it is, however, that the end of their lives came while they were employed in the endeavor to fit themselves to be of more efficient service to their native land if the need should arise. The lives of these two young men may be put down as part of the price man is paying for a more certain knowledge of the navigation of the air and as sacrifices paid that those who come after them may live more fully. The pioneers of the air have been and are as courageous as those other pioneers who braved wilderness and savage. Sorrow for the loss of these two young flyers is widespread and genuine and tempered only by the thought that they died as men must who do and dare beyond the ordinary.

LIEUTENANTS M'CONNELL AND ANDERSON

Accustomed as we are to air tragedies, the shocking deaths of two Nashville aviators, Lieut. Frank B. McConnell and Lieut. Cornelius Anderson, at Langley Field, Va., while in the performance of their duties, has cast a pall of gloom over the city and State and will be a source of poignant grief among an unusually large circle of friends and associates. Their deaths in the air again emphasizes the dangers of aviation despite all of the progress that has been made. They were both accomplished pilots; both had been promoted because of their proficiency as aviators. They had each made enviable records in the air service of the State and Nation.

Pending an investigation and official inquiry, it is yet too early to determine the cause of this deplorable accident. It is gratifying by reason of the admirable record that both had made in the field of aviation to know that their deaths were due to some mechanical fault and in no sense to any error that they made. All human progress has been builded on the sacrifices, the heroism, the daring, and the blood of the pioneers. It does seem to us, however, that aviation, great achievement that it is for mankind, has exacted a terrible toll in human life. This is the second awful tragedy of this kind in American aviation within the month.

Lieutenant McConnell, a native of Nashville, had made an enviable record in the service of his country. He was with Pershing on the Mexican border and served with the armed forces during the World War. After peace he did not cease in his service to his country but became a member of the local aero squadron, where his aptitude as a flyer soon gained recognition. He was a capable and trusted officer and wore the uniform of his country with credit. His companion, Lieutenant Anderson, was a Nashvillian by adoption. He was educated here and served ably in the aviation service of the State.

It is highly fitting that these gallant and intrepid young soldiers should be buried with all military honors. They fell at the front in line of duty, as much so as if they had been brought to earth by the bullets of some enemy. In this dark hour the family and friends of our young heroes may have their grief assuaged in the knowledge that they possess the entire sympathy of their fellow citizens and of Americans everywhere who prize and applaud devotion to duty.

COMPLETE PLANS FOR FUNERAL OF ILL-FATED FLYER—LIEUTENANT McCONNELL'S BODY TO BE TAKEN TO FATHER'S HOME

Accompanied by a military escort from Langley Field, where he and Lieut. Cornelius Anderson were killed when their plane fell in flames Monday morning, the body of Lieut. F. B. McConnell left Newport News at 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. The funeral cortege will arrive in Nashville at 8.40 o'clock Thursday morning over the Louisville & Nashville Railway, according to news received by Adjt. Gen. W. C. Boyd and members of Lieutenant McConnell's family from the field commandant Tuesday night. At the request of W. A. Anderson, of La Centre, Ky., Lieutenant Anderson, formerly a medical student at Vanderbilt University, will be buried at Arlington Cemetery.

Lieutenant McConnell's remains will be escorted to the home of his father, Frank B. McConnell, 1304 Sixteenth Avenue, South, where funeral services will be held at 1.30 p. m. followed by special services at Vine Street Christian Church at 2 o'clock, conducted by the Rev. Roger Nooe. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

FLYERS PALLBEARERS

Members of the Aviation Corps in which Lieutenant McConnell had for years had his chief interest and in serving which he met his death will be with the body the entire route from Langley Field to the grave. For the detail of four men under the command of First Lieut. Alfred I. Puryear, of the Field Air Corps, which arrives here with the body Thursday morning, will be relieved by members of the One hundred and fifth Observation Squadron of the Tennessee National Guard, in which Lieutenant McConnell won his commission a year ago.

Officers of the local flying squadron will serve as pallbearers, including General Boyd, Maj. Nat H. Dye, Capt. Richard Gleaves, Capt. J. B. Hibbitts, Capt. Herbert Fox, Capt. Charles G. Blackard, Capt. Walter Williams, Maj. J. C. Bennett, jr., Lieuts. Sam E. Hartsfeld, James H. Douglas, John F. Outlaw, William V. Andrews, Louis H. Hibbitts, Bailey Rascoe, Lee Conway, David S. Lansden, Jesse Zellner, James P. McFarland, A. J. Robert, jr., William E. Barr, John McCall, Richard Barr, jr., Justin Potter, August S. Keim, Clarence L. Sanders, Richard Boutell, and Lewis T. Edwards.

MILITARY ESCORT

General Boyd has notified members of Company F of the One hundred and seventeenth Infantry to act as a military escort and to fire a salute at the grave. Members are requested to meet at the armory Thursday noon.

Dr. Roger T. Nooe, who is a member of the faculty of the Ovoca Christian Pastors' School, will return to-day in order to conduct the services.

At the gates of Mount Olivet the body will be transferred to an artillery caisson, while overhead members of the local flying squadron will circle their planes in a last sweeping courtesy to the former member of the squadron. The band of the One hundred and seventeenth Infantry will play the funeral march at the cemetery.

Lieutenant McConnell, who with Lieutenant Anderson had only recently joined the training school at Langley Field, is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mary Frances McConnell; a small daughter, Frances Dinwiddie McConnell; a sister, Miss Alta McConnell; three brothers, C. H. McConnell, C. W. McConnell, and J. J. McConnell, besides his father.

Two days before his death Lieutenant McConnell had piloted a plane in the convoy which welcomed Lindbergh to Washington. Born in Nashville 29 years ago, Lieutenant McConnell had spent almost his entire young manhood in military pursuits, having served with American troops on the Mexican border in 1916 and serving with the Marine Corps during the World War. After the war he became interested in aviation and went to Brooks Field, Tex., for his first training, later joining the local squadron.

Lieutenant Anderson, who was with him when the plane crashed 200 feet to burst into flames, was a student at Vanderbilt in 1924 and 1926, and a member of Beta Theta Pi. He had planned to take up his studies at the university this fall, but in recent months had given almost his entire time to aviation.

MILITARY FUNERAL PLANNED HERE FOR LIEUTENANT McCONNELL—LIEUTENANT ANDERSON, OTHER VICTIM, TO BE BURIED AT ARLINGTON—PROBE ORDERED—FLIERS HAD BEEN MEMBERS OF COLONEL LINDBERGH'S CONVOY

With War Department machinery at Washington moving to fix the cause of the crash of a plane at Langley Field, Va., yesterday afternoon, killing Lieuts. Frank G. McConnell and Cornelius Anderson, members of the One hundred and fifth Observation Squadron, Tennessee National Guard, arrangements were being made here for a military funeral for Lieutenant McConnell in pursuance to request from his family. Lieutenant Anderson's father, in La Centre, Ky., has requested that his son's body be buried in Arlington Cemetery.

Lieutenant McConnell's wife, from her home at 1304 Sixteenth Avenue south, last night communicated with Maj. J. C. Bennett, commander of the squadron, to make arrangements to have her husband's body brought back here for burial. While definite arrangements for the funeral are still to be made, it is believed the body will arrive here Wednesday or Thursday.

It is expected that Dr. Roger T. Nooe will conduct the funeral services. He is at Avoca, Tenn., but will return when notified of complete plans.

BURSTS INTO FLAMES

Lieutenant McConnell and Lieutenant Anderson, who were participating in the air maneuvers at Langley Field, came to their death when their plane went into a nose dive at a height of 200 feet and crashed to earth, bursting into flames.

Both flyers were incinerated before their bodies could be removed from the wreckage.

They went to Virginia June 4, and in addition to taking part in the maneuvers Lieutenant McConnell had been a member of the flying convoy which served as escort to Col. Charles Lindbergh on his arrival in Washington Saturday.

Yesterday afternoon, still participating in the maneuvers, they had just brought their plane into position for target practice in machine gun and bombing activities, when it was seen to plunge to the ground, the first serious accident to mark the maneuvers during the four years they have been held.

Lieutenant McConnell, a son of Frank McConnell, chief law agent of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, lived at 1304 Sixteenth Avenue South with his wife and child.

Interested in aviation in this section for the past three years, he had made a host of friends through his flying, done for the most part at Blackwood Field. Three weeks ago he was slightly injured when a plane he was piloting, owned by himself and Lieut. William Barr, fell.

He was born here July 6, 1896, and received his early education in the public schools, later attending Montgomery Bell Academy and Webb School, Bell Buckle, Tenn. In school he gained praise for his athletic prowess, specializing in baseball and football.

His first connection with the National Guard came during the trouble on the Mexican border, when he enlisted for service under General Pershing. Upon his return from the border he enlisted in the marines and went to Parris Island, S. C., returning here later as sergeant assigned to recruiting service. Later he was transferred to Quantico, Va., where he was commissioned a second lieutenant.

During the war he saw service in Cuba and Haiti, returning here at its termination to employment in the ticket office at the Union Station. He remained in that field until three years ago, when he became interested in aviation.

His early flying training was obtained at Brooks Field, Tex., where he was commissioned a second lieutenant. Later he was promoted to a first lieutenancy and placed in command of the One hundred and sixty-fifth Photo Section and officer in charge of Blackwood Field.

ANDERSON VANDERBILT MAN

Lieutenant Anderson, while a native of Kentucky, where he leaves his father, W. A. Anderson, has spent considerable time in the last few years here. In the years 1924 to 1926 he was a student at Vanderbilt Medical School and planned to resume his studies this fall.

Since leaving school a year ago he had devoted most of his time to flying and was chosen by Major Bennett to accompany McConnell because of his proficiency as an observer.

Major Bennett, upon learning of the deaths of the two men yesterday, paid high tribute to them and expressed profound sorrow at their loss. He recounted Lieutenant McConnell's enlistment with the squadron four years ago and spoke with pride of his gradual rise to his latest post. He lauded his skill as a pilot and his inherent flying ability.

LIEUTENANT M'CONNELL LAID TO REST AMID HUM OF PALS' PLANES—MOUNT OLIVET JAMMED AS HUNDREDS PAY TRIBUTE TO FLYER

While the roaring motors of his comrades' planes drummed a dirge, brother officers of the One hundred and twenty-fifth Observation Squadron Thursday afternoon said their final farewell to Lieut. Frank B. McConnell and lowered the flag-draped casket containing his body into a grave at Mount Olivet Cemetery.

As the casket came to a rest, a shadow streaked across the grave, the throb of a wide-open motor caused all to give a startled upward glance and a shower of roses fluttered down upon the grave while a plane zoomed up sharply from the very treetops. It was the squadron's final salute to a brave comrade who had flown on beyond the "ceiling" of mortal flights.

The roses fell slowly through the trees, coming to earth gently on and about the grave. The planes droned off in the distance. The first few shovels of earth fell on the casket. A rattle of musketry rang out. The painfully sweet notes of taps rose and fell over the silent crowd. That was all. A brave flier had gone to pitch his tent with the thousands of other courageous airmen whose wings are folded forever.

It was an impressive farewell that Nashville gave Lieutenant McConnell. One of the largest crowds ever seen at Mount Olivet Cemetery followed the funeral cortège to the grave, the line of cars extending back for more than a mile. Representatives of civil and military authority of both city and State were in the crowd.

Tiny cars crawled in the procession beside great limousines. It was as if the city had opened its heart to pour out a spontaneous tribute to a brave son whose wings were clipped short just as he had barely learned to use them.

The crowd grouped about the grave in a great circle. Still they came, old and young, men and women, with somber faces; children with eager eyes turned upward for a sight of the airships.

Long before the casket reached the grave, three planes, their silver wings glinting in the westering sun, hummed above the cemetery, banked and circled to hum back again. It was the aviators' last salute, like eagles wheeling above the rock where a stricken eagle lay.

A fourth airplane soon appeared from the east, flying lower than the others and weaving back and forth over the cemetery.

Then a band began beating out the measured cadence of a funeral march. The family of Lieutenant McConnell filed in as the crowd stood silent with bared heads.

"Attention," the military command fell flat on the hushed air.

Another command struck the silence. There was a click as rifles came to present arms and the officer in command lifted his saber in salute.

Their faces showing plainly the grief they felt at losing a loved and brave comrade, the officers of the squadron, headed by Maj. John C. Bennett, jr., commandant, trudged up the grass lane, bearing the casket of their fellow flier who had made his last flight.

The casket reached the grave. While the soldiers stood at attention Dr. Roger T. Nooe said a few brief words of benediction. None heard them. The roaring motors drowned all else. Then a quartet, in which was one of Lieutenant McConnell's flying comrades, sang, but none heard. Again the motors drowned all.

TAPS SOUNDED

The lone plane, sweeping back and forth over the trees, snarled as if in anger that the failure of another motor had cut down one of its erstwhile pilots.

Then the plane swept out of view. A moment later the motor snarled at an even higher pitch. A woman screamed, "O, I knew he'd fall," and out of the west, preceded by a racing shadow, the plane, but a few feet above the green treetops swept across the grave, and up toward the blue, red roses fluttering down in its wake.

Then the earth was filled in on the grave. It was piled high with flowers, including handsome tributes from the officers. The salute and taps was sounded and the crowd dispersed, while the planes sang on back to Blackwood Field, a few miles to the east.

Previous to the service at the grave, services scarcely less impressive had been held at the Vine Street Christian Church. Scores had been turned away from the church.

Piled high about the bier of Lieutenant McConnell was a blanket of floral tributes from family, friends, acquaintances, and organizations with which he had come in contact before his sacrifice to the progress of aviation.

Over the family monument was placed a miniature airplane, fashioned of brilliantly colored flowers—the tribute of Geny Bros. Beneath it were those of the One hundred and fifth Squadron, of which he was a member, the American Legion, the Nashville Police Department, his Masonic lodge, and scores of others.

Preceding the services at the grave, rites equally impressive were held in the Vine Street Church, where Dr. Rogers T. Nooe eulogized the flyer.

"I saw him once," he said, "in the sanctity of his home, amid the flush of a narrow escape. I saw him in fine manliness and modesty turn the heart of a child to an aged father and mother. I saw him as a loving comrade to his life's companion. I saw him as an adoring father of his little girl, and I marked him as a man and claimed him as a friend.

"Let us honor this man's memory with an appreciation of the courage that marked his life. Some are too cowardly and some too selfish to pay the price of progress, but this man was neither. God has given it to man to have dominion, and the conquest of the air rightly used is in the path of progress.

"Measured by the standard of loyal manhood, Lieutenant McConnell enlisted the admiration of every passing acquaintance and merited the love of all who knew him."

FLYER TO REST IN MOUNT OLIVET—LIEUT. FRANK BROWER MCCONNELL TO BE BURIED WITH MILITARY HONORS—PRIVATE CAR TENDERED—ARMY REGULATIONS MAY PREVENT BURIAL OF LIEUTENANT ANDERSON IN ARLINGTON—MESSAGES OF SYMPATHY

Borne to its last resting place upon a military caisson, while a convoy of planes manned by his former associates of the One hundred and fifth Observation Squadron flies overhead, the body of Lieut. Frank Brower McConnell, who met death Monday at Langley Field, Va., will be laid to rest Thursday afternoon in Mount Olivet Cemetery with military honors.

Lieutenant McConnell's remains under a military guard of honor since leaving Newport News Tuesday morning, will be met by the McConnell family in Louisville and returned to Nashville in the private car of James B. Hill, president of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway. The body will arrive there at 5 p. m. to-day. The private car bearing the family and the remains will leave Louisville about midnight and arrive here Thursday morning at 8.40. Upon arrival here the escort will be relieved by members of the One hundred and fifth Observation Squadron.

MAY REST IN ARLINGTON

Lieut. Cornelius Anderson, who went to his death with Lieutenant McConnell when their plane crashed in flames, probably will be buried at Arlington Cemetery, at the request of his father, W. A. Anderson, of La Center, Ky., with military honors.

Although there has been a hitch in the plans to inter the aviator at Washington, Adjt. Gen. W. C. Boyd is in communication with Secretary of War Dwight F. Davis, Senators MCKELLAR and TYSON, and Representatives TAYLOR and REECE, and believes there will be no difficulty in having the burial there. The appeal to Tennessee Congressmen and the Secretary of War was made because General Boyd had been notified by the War Department that, due to Lieutenant Anderson's not being a member of the Regular Army, he would not be entitled to rest in Arlington Cemetery. General Boyd takes the stand that technically the aviator is eligible because he was in training at a Regular Army field and died in line of duty. He is expecting an answer from Secretary Davis to-day.

Funeral services will be held from the home of the aviator's father, A. F. McConnell, 1304 Sixteenth Avenue south, at 1.30 p. m., which will be followed by special services at the Vine Street Christian Church, conducted by Dr. Roger T. Nooe at 2.30 o'clock.

Officers of the One hundred and fifth Observation Squadron who will serve as pallbearers, including Gen. W. C. Boyd and Maj. Nat H. Dye, are Maj. J. C. Bennett, jr., commander; Capt. Richard Gleaves, Capt. J. B. Hibbitts, Capt. Herbert Fox, Capt. Charles G. Blackard, Capt. Walter Williams, and Lieuts. Sam E. Hartsfield, James H. Douglas, John F. Outlaw, William V. Andrews, Louis H. Hibbitts, Bailey Rascoe, Lee Conway, David S. Lansden, Jesse Zellner, James P. McFarland, A. J. Roberts, jr., William E. Barr, John McCall, Richard Barr, jr., Justin Potter, August S. Keim, Clarence L. Sanders, Richard Boutell, and Lewis T. Edwards.

Company F of the One hundred and seventeenth Infantry will form a guard of honor and fire a salute at the grave. Members of the company will meet at the armory Thursday at noon. The One hundred and seventeenth Infantry band will play the funeral march at the cemetery.

Lieutenant McConnell is survived by his father and mother; his wife, Mrs. Mary Frances McConnell; a small daughter, Frances Dinwiddie McConnell; a sister, Miss Alta McConnell; three brothers, C. H., C. W., and J. J. McConnell.

He served first with General Pershing on the Mexican border, saw service with the marines during the World War, and other expeditions, and finally, unable to put aside his country's call to service, enlisted in the One hundred and fifth Observation Squadron, where he rapidly rose to the office he was holding at the time of his death.

Each year a skilled team is picked from the various State aviation organizations and sent to the Regular Army flying fields for instruction in bombing, machine gunning, and observation. It was on this mission that the two young officers lost their lives at Langley Field. After participating in the Lindbergh reception up the Potomac River Saturday they were making their way to target practice Monday morning when the accident occurred.

Lieutenant Anderson, observer on the team, had temporarily given up a medical course at the Vanderbilt Medical School for the study of aviation. He had planned to return to the university this fall, where he had been prominent in student activities. He was a member of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity.

MESSAGES OF SYMPATHY

Messages of heartfelt sympathy are coming from far and near to the bereaved family of Lieutenant McConnell, of which the following are typical:

"Deeply distressed and shocked to learn of the death of your splendid son, of whom I was very fond. My heartfelt sympathy goes out to you and all the family," wired Gus T. Fitzhugh to Mr. A. F. McConnell, father of the dead aviator.

From Maj. Gen. E. J. Williams, commanding officer of the Thirtieth Division, came the message to Adjt. Gen. W. C. Boyd:

"Just saw account deaths of Lieutenants McConnell and Anderson. Sincerest sympathy to their families and Hundred and fifth Squadron."

Lieut. W. V. Andrews, instructor of the local squadron, received the following wire from Major Brereton, commanding officer of the Second Bombardment Group, to Major Bennett and his fellow pilots for loss of Anderson and McConnell:

"Regret exceedingly to learn of the death of Lieutenants McConnell and Anderson, of the One hundred and fifth Observation Squadron. Please extend my deepest sympathy to the families of these National Guard officers."

"Overshadowing brilliant triumph Colonel Lindbergh New York came the sad news your irreparable loss. To die for a high, noble cause is Godlike and far better than to live a life of self-incloistered ease. May God be with you in this your hour of grief. All my sympathy."

"WILLIAM N. CARUTHERS,
"New York City."

"Mrs. Beesley and I were shocked to hear of your great sorrow, and our hearts are overflowing with sympathy for you and your family.

"JESSE C. BEESLEY,
"Murfreesboro, Tenn."

"You and your family have my deepest sympathy at his untimely taking.

"CHAS. B. ROGAN,
"Gallatin, Tenn."

Among other messages of condolence were wires from Lieut. M. D. McKnight, of the One hundred and fifth Squadron, who is on a leave of absence in west Tennessee; from Ben Hall, passenger agent at Jacksonville, Fla.. James G. Ploden, Greenville, S. C.; Brown & Spurlock, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Judge Clem Jones, Athens, Tenn.; F. W. Kelsey, Chattanooga, Tenn.; W. B. Lamb, Fayetteville, Tenn.; Richard R. Gest, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Anderson and family, Huntsville, Ala.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PAIUTE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS

The bill (S. 5346) to provide for the payment for benefits received by the Paiute Indian Reservation lands within the Newlands irrigation project, Nevada, and for other purposes, was considered as in the Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 4, after the word "be," insert the words "made at the same time and"; on page 2, line 4, before the word "said," insert the words "the Reclamation Bureau by"; and on page 1, line 5, after the word "necessary" and the comma, insert the words "reimbursable, but not to be collected during the time the title remains in the original allottee," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,096.01, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for paying the Truckee-Carson irrigation district, Fallon, Nev., in 60 semiannual installments, as equally as may be, the proportionate share of the benefits received by 4,877⅞ irrigable acres of Paiute Indian lands within the Newlands irrigation project, for necessary repairs to the Truckee Canal to restore said canal to its original capacity, said payments to be made at the same time and at the same rate per irrigable acre as that paid to the Reclamation Bureau by said district for other irrigable lands located therein.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF CONTRACTORS AND SUBCONTRACTORS

The bill (S. 4520) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," approved August 25, 1919, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I move that House bill 13857, which has been passed by the House, be substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks that the Senator explain the bill.

Mr. EDGE. I can explain it in a few words. The contractors for the construction of the courthouse building in Washington, D. C., according to the specifications, presented their bids on the morning of April 7, 1917, as is required by other legislation of this character that has been favorably acted upon in the Senate. Later, April 6, the day before this bid went in, was made the date for a readjustment of bids because of war conditions.

The claim was referred to the Comptroller General, but under the strict interpretation of the law the Comptroller General held that it was impossible for him to order payment of the bill. On two separate occasions following that, as is shown by the report from the Secretary of the Treasury, again he was asked if, under the circumstances surrounding this bid, it did not come within the regulations provided, and upon the decision that it did not, this special bill was prepared. It has passed the House, and has been reported by the Senate committee, and I ask for the substitution in order that we may pass the House bill rather than the Senate bill.

Mr. KING. I can not yet understand what obligation the Government might assume on the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDGE. There is so much confusion in the Chamber it is almost impossible to hear the Senator's query.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please be in order.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator propound his question again?

Mr. KING. I did not quite understand, because I could not hear, just what the obligation of the Government is, and what the bill will do toward imposing an obligation upon the Government.

Mr. EDGE. I will be glad to reexplain the bill. In inviting proposals for the construction of the courthouse building in Washington the Treasury Department proposed that the bids should be presented on April 7, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon. Agreeably to that proposal the Fuller Co., a company incorporated in New Jersey, presented their specifications and bid for the construction of certain portions of the building and were awarded the contract and carried out the work.

Later, as it had been decided in a number of cases where readjustment was permited because of unusual conditions surrounding the war times, it was provided that April 6, the day before the bid went in, which was the day of the declaration of war, as we all recall, would be the day fixed for the readjustment of all contracts signed on that day or previous to that day.

This company bid on constructing a Government building, meeting the requirements and specifications in the proposal as to hour and date, but lost out by approximately 18 or 20 hours. They went through with their contract completely, and now their claim can not be readjusted because of the fixing of this arbitrary date 15 or 18 hours earlier.

I repeat, the Treasury Department, believing in the absolute justice of the claim, referred it to the Comptroller General on three distinct occasions, asking the Comptroller General if under the circumstances of the bids these did not come within the specifications.

Mr. HARRIS. It only provides that the company shall file a claim with the Treasury Department.

Mr. EDGE. Yes; and I think the Senator from Georgia has in charge a similar bill which follows on the calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; I have.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask what is the amount of the claim contemplated?

Mr. EDGE. In answer to the Senator I will say there is no specific amount of claim. The bill merely provides for a reconsideration of the conditions prevailing at that time as to this company, just as has been done for dozens and dozens of other companies. It does not provide any specific amount. In other words, it gives them a day in court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has asked unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13857 in the place of Senate bill 4520.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 13857) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," approved August 25, 1919, was read twice by its title and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 4520 will be indefinitely postponed.

The bill (H. R. 10957) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other bulidings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," approved August 25, 1919, as amended by act of March 6, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT MICHAEL WHITE

The bill (H. R. 5952) for the relief of Robert Michael White was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT WAYNE, IND.

The bill (H. R. 12409) to grant to the city of Fort Wayne, Ind., an easement over certain Government property was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT DES MOINES, IOWA

The bill (H. R. 13957) to repeal certain provisions of law relating to the Federal building at Des Moines, Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUBTREASURY BUILDING, NEW ORLEANS

The bill (H. R. 15468) to repeal the provisions of law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a site and building for the United States subtreasury and other governmental offices at New Orleans, La., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF PHILIPPINE CORPORATION LAW

The bill (S. 5738) to approve, ratify, and confirm an act of the Philippine Legislature entitled "An act amending the corporation law, act No. 1459, as amended, and for other purposes," enacted November 8, 1928, approved by the Governor General of the Philippine Islands December 3, 1928, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, House bill 16881, Order of Business 1772, is a bill which passed the House February 13, 1929. It is identical with Senate bill 5738, and I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16881) to approve, ratify, and confirm an act of the Philippine Legislature entitled "An act amending the corporation law, act No. 1459, as amended, and for other purposes," enacted November 8, 1928, approved by the Governor General of the Philippine Islands December 3, 1928.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator explain this bill? When any measure affects the right of the Filipinos to govern themselves I want to make some inquiry about it.

Mr. BAYARD. I will be very glad to explain it. This bill was passed at the urgent request of the Philippine Congress in both branches, the leaders of the Filipinos in the Philippine Congress, and at the earnest request of the Governor General, Mr. Stimson.

The purpose of the bill is to modify and broaden the present corporation laws in the Philippines. We passed an act in Congress in 1902, and then we passed the organic act of 1916, which were both very stiff in regard to the granting of corporate powers to chartered companies in the Philippines. It has been found under the practice obtaining there that these restrictive provisions have militated against good commerce and the ability of the Filipinos and those interested in Philippine commerce to extend their operations.

At the request of the Filipinos themselves this matter was taken up, it was thrashed out with great care, not only by both branches of the Philippine Congress but by the Governor General, Mr. Stimson. It came to Congress after the unanimous action of both houses and with the Governor General's approval and recommendation.

I will state to the Senator that it in no way interferes with the right of the Federal Congress to change, alter, amend, or repeal the corporate charters granted thereunder.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 5738 will be indefinitely postponed.

MUNICIPAL CENTER IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 16274) to provide for the establishment of a municipal center in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, all of squares Nos. 490, 491, 533, and reservation 10, in the District of Columbia, including buildings and other structures thereon, as a site for a municipal center, and to construct thereon necessary buildings to house municipal activities: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to close and vacate such portions of streets and alleys as lie between or within such squares, as in the judgment of said commissioners may be necessary, and the portions of such streets and alleys so closed and vacated shall thereupon become parts of such site: Provided further, That if this property or any part thereof shall be condemned, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be entitled to enter immediately into the possession of any such property for which an award shall have been made by paying the amount of such award into the registry of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, payable in like manner as other appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, including not to exceed $10,000 for the employment, by contract or otherwise, of architectural and other professional services, as approved by the commissioners and without reference to the classification act of 1923, as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHILDREN'S TUBERCULOSIS SANATORIUM

The bill (H. R. 13752) to provide for the construction of a children's tuberculosis sanatorium was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and to cause to be constructed thereon, in accordance with plans and specifications approved by such commissioners, suitable buildings and structures for use as a children's tuberculosis sanatorium, including necessary approaches and roadways, heating and ventilating apparatus, furniture, equipment, and accessories.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act, to be appropriated in like manner as other appropriations for the District of Columbia.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia whether he would be willing to have an amendment in line 1, striking out the words "and directed"? This would leave the bill as an authorization.

Mr. CAPPER. The Senator would limit it to an authorization?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. CAPPER. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 4, strike out the words "and directed," so as to make the clause read: "That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut whether his committee has agreed to the expenditure of $500,000?

Mr. BINGHAM. I may say that that matter has never come before the Committee on Appropriations. All the Appropriations Committee did was to provide $1,500 for a study of the question so as to see what was the first thing to be done in the way of a hospital for tubercular children.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with that. I am wondering if it is wise to pass a bill now authorizing $500,000 before the report has been made.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is a member of the District of Columbia Committee, and I am not.

Mr. KING. I was unfortunately not able to be present when the bill was considered.

Mr. CAPPER. The committee went into the matter pretty carefully and it was given very careful consideration by the District Committee of the House. Mr. SIMMONS, who was in charge of the District appropriation bill in the House, was very much in favor of the bill as it is now reported to the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I say, too, that the Appropriations Committee gave the matter very careful consideration and I hope the bill will pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LAND FOR INDIAN COLONY, NEAR ELY, NEV.

The bill (S. 5245) to purchase land for the Indian colony near the city of Ely, Nev., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $1,000 for the purchase of 10 acres of land now occupied as a camp by the Indian colony near the city of Ely, Nev., and $600 to connect the camp with the city water service by the purchase and installation of pipe and hydrants and the erection of a standpipe with necessary protective structure, the title to be held in the name of the United States Government, for the use of the Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing an appropriation for the purchase of land for the Indian colony near Ely, Nev., and for other purposes."

DISABILITY COMPENSATION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 5676) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury to employees in certain employments in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 17, 1928, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury to employees in certain employments in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 17, 1928, be, and it is hereby, amended by adding at the end of said section the following:

"No person who is an officer or employee in the service of any war veterans' or fraternal organization or any lodge or social club not organized for profit, and whether incorporated or unincorporated shall be deemed to be an employee if his usual period of service shall not exceed four hours on one day at intervals of a week or more."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CODE

The bill (H. R. 12697) to amend the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia relating to interest and usury was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, that is an important measure. I would like to have an explanation of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] is requested.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I want to explain to the Senator from Arkansas that the bill rewrites the present Code of the District of Columbia with reference to usury and adds that if any transaction involving $100,000 or more no corporation shall interpose a defense of a plea of usury in any action at low or in equity.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Why is the right of a litigant to plead any defense that the law recognizes denied and the denial based on the question of the amount involved?

Mr. BLAINE. I will explain to the Senator the purpose of the amendment. There are a great many promotion schemes in the District of Columbia. Corporations are organized and in order to get money to carry out their promotion schemes they will contract to pay a very high rate of interest. They will sell their bonds to innocent parties, and then when the interest on the bonds falls due and a suit is brought they interpose the defense of usury. The promotion schemes ought not to be permitted and the purpose of the bill is to prevent a corporation, which enters into a contract providing for the payment of a higher rate of interest than is allowed by law, from having the right to interpose such usury contracts as a defense.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I shall ask that the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ALONZO DURWARD ALLEN

The bill (H. R. 12793) for the relief of Alonzo Durward Allen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized and directed to determine, in accordance with the provisions of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, the degree of disability, if any, of Alonzo Durward Allen, due to the aggravation of an attack of typhoid fever on or immediately after September 18, 1917, resulting from reporting at Memphis, Tenn., for enrollment on said date, and to pay him compensation at the same rate, in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions and limitations as if such disability were the result of such aggravation in the line of duty in the military service of the United States during the World War; except that no compensation shall be payable for any period prior to such determination.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I would like to offer an amendment to the bill. I move to amend it by striking out, on page 2, lines 21 and 22, the words "except that no compensation shall be payable for any period prior to such determination."

This young man is in such condition that he probably will not live a great while and if he is compelled to wait until after its determination before he gets any compensation, he may not live to get any at all. I hope the amendment may be adopted and the bill passed as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5752) authorizing the Uintah, Uncompahgre, and the White River Bands of the Ute Indians in Utah and Colorado and the Southern Ute and Ute Mountain Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico to sue in the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my understanding is that a similar bill passed some time ago and went to the House, and that they have passed it with some amendments. It has not been returned to the Senate yet. Therefore I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 16877) providing for the biennial appointment of a board of visitors to inspect and report upon the government and conditions in the Philippine Islands was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Over.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator his reason for objecting? I may say to him that the bill had very full consideration in the House. The Philippine Delegate made a very eloquent speech in the House urging its passage.

Mr. WHEELER. I objected because I do not know anything about it. I want to look into it before I agree to its passage.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator be kind enough to ask any question he desires? The House has passed the bill twice.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the subject matter of this bill has been before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. While we think the bill has some merit, some of us are of the opinion that we are establishing a very dangerous precedent. If we send a board of visitors every two years to the Philippine Islands, we will then have to send a board of visitors to Alaska, to the Hawaiian Islands, to the Virgin Islands, and to Porto Rico, and we will have a continuous activity of this sort.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5601) providing for an appropriation for the benefit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this matter is now pending before the Committee on Appropriations in connection with the deficiency appropriation bill, so I ask that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT VICKSBURG, MISS.

The bill (H. R. 14472) to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at the city of Vicksburg, Miss., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at the city of Vicksburg, Miss., authorized by the act of Congress entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Vicksburg Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Vicksburg," approved May 3, 1926, be, and the same is hereby, extended to May 3, 1930.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, all calendar numbers to and including 1783, being similar bridge bills, will be regarded as having passed through their various parliamentary stages and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just a moment. In so far as Calendar No. 1783 is concerned, the House has passed the identical bill, but it has not been reported here yet.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I can not consent to that method of passing bills. I think it is absolutely imperative that the bills be called separately, so that the status of them may be checked, even though they are merely bridge bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggested that they are identical bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has Calendar No. 1783 been passed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the request of the Senator from Arkansas the bills will be called separately and considered in their order. The Clerk will state the next bill.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, KENTUCKY AND OHIO

The bill (H. R. 15201) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Maysville, Ky., and Aberdeen, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Maysville, Ky., and Aberdeen, Ohio, authorized to be built by the Maysville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, by the act of Congress approved March 12, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from March 12, 1929.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OCMULGEE RIVER BRIDGE, FITZGERALD, GA.

The bill (H. R. 15714) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ocmulgee River at or near Fitzgerald, Ga., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ocmulgee River at or near Fitzgerald, Ga., authorized to be built by J. E. Turner, his heirs, legal representatives, or assigns, by the act of Congress approved April 4, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from April 4, 1929.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, RANDOLPH, MO.

The bill (H. R. 16026) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved May 24, 1928, to be built by the Kansas City Southern Railway Co. across the Missouri River at or near a point approximately 1 mile southeast of Randolph, Mo., are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from May 24, 1929.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5685) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Tiptonville, Tenn., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the House has passed an identical bill and I want to substitute that bill for the Senate bill and pass the House bill and indefinitely postpone the Senate bill. The House bill is H. R. 16959.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has it reached the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. It has not and the question is raised in my mind whether we can pass it before it reaches the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hold that that may not be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I will ask that the bill may go over for the present and later on in the day after the House bill has been reported to the Senate I will ask permission for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4975) to create a commission on establishing a country summer White House was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 185) granting authority for the erection of a permanent building at the headquarters of the American National Red Cross, Washington, D. C., was considered in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That authority be, and is hereby, given to the American National Red Cross to erect upon square 172, in the city of Washington, D. C., in replacement of the temporary building or buildings erected on such lot under Public Resolution No. 3, Sixty-fifth Congress (S. J. Res. 61), a permanent building for the use of the American National Red Cross in connection with its work in cooperation with the Government of the United States: Provided, That the plans for any building which may be erected under this authority shall have been approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, and that such building shall be erected under the supervision of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital: Provided further, That the cost of the removal of the temporary building or buildings and the erection of the permanent building be borne by the American National Red Cross without expense to the United States: And provided further, That said permanent building shall remain the property of the United States Government but under the supervision of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital; and the American National Red Cross shall at all times be charged with the responsibility, the care, keeping, and maintenance of the said building without expense to the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask whether the bill requires any expenditure by the Government or is the expense to be borne entirely by the Red Cross?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attention of the Senator from Ohio is requested.

Mr. FESS. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. KING. Does the bill involve any expenditure by the Government, or is it to be borne by the Red Cross itself?

Mr. FESS. Under this bill the expense is to be paid in full by the Red Cross organization. However, my opinion is that the Government ought to cooperate and pay part of it, but the bill as it stands is without any cost to the Government. A House bill relating to the same subject includes some cost to the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senate joint resolution under consideration also provides that at all times the Red Cross shall be charged with the upkeep and maintenance of the building.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM E. ADAMS

The bill (H. R. 1993) to correct the naval record of William E. Adams was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That William E. Adams shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from service in the United States Navy as of the 20th day of October, 1919: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5758) amending the act approved May 4, 1926, providing for the construction and maintenance of bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I would like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BRATTON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

POLICE AND FIRE DEPARTMENTS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 5512) to provide recognition for meritorious service by members of the police and fire departments of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the official recognition of outstanding acts in the line of duty by the members of the police and fire departments of the District of Columbia there shall be awarded annually one gold medal and one silver medal, appropriately inscribed, to those two members of each department who have by outstanding or conspicuous services earned such awards.

SEC. 2. The awards shall be made annually by a committee of five persons, consisting of the head of each department and three civilians appointed by the commissioners of said District; all to serve without compensation on such committee of award.

SEC. 3. When promotions are being made in the departments the holders of such medals shall be preferred to other members of said departments, other things being equal.

SEC. 4. To provide for the cost of such medals there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually such sum as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may deem necessary for the purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LANDS IN NEVADA

The bill (S. 5379) to authorize the disposition of certain public lands in the State of Nevada was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Western Pacific Railroad Co., a California corporation, be permitted to purchase from the United States, at the price of $2.50 per acre, the south half of the southwest quarter of section 28, township 34 north, range 66 east, Mount Diablo meridian, in Elko County, Nev., containing 80 acres; and that patent shall, after such purchase, issue to said company therefor: Provided, That the Western Pacific Railroad Co. file in the district land office at Carson City, Nev., an application for the said lands, and tender payment therefor at the price fixed herein within 60 days of the passage of this act: Provided further, That patent issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal and other minerals in the land so patented, except sand and gravel, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 320) for the adoption of the report of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys on the investigation conducted under Senate Resolution 202 was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

STATE LIVESTOCK QUARANTINE

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 202) for the amendment of the act of February 2, 1903, and March 3, 1905, as amended, to allow the States to quarantine against the shipment thereto, therein, or through of livestock, including poultry, from a State or Territory or portion thereof where a livestock or poultry disease is found to exist which is not covered by regulatory action of the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committe of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, on page 3, line 4, to strike out the numerals "531" and insert the numerals "831," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the act of February 2, 1903 (32 U. S. Stat. L. 792), as amended by the act of February 7, 1928 (45 U. S. Stat. L. 59), be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding at the end of section 2 thereof the following:

"Provided, That until the Secretary of Agriculture shall have made regulations and taken measures to prevent the introduction or dissemination of the contagion of a contagious, infectious, or communicable disease of livestock, including live poultry, from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia to another, nothing in said act shall prevent or shall be construed to prevent any State, Territory, or District from enacting, promulgating, and enforcing any quarantine, prohibiting or restricting the transportation of any livestock, including live poultry, into or through such State, Territory, District, or portion thereof, from any other State, Terriotry, District, or portion thereof, when it shall be found, by the State, Territory, or District promulgating or enacting the same, that such contagious, infectious, or communicable disease exists in such other State, Territory, District, or portion thereof: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, whenever he deems such action advisable and necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, as amended, to cooperate with any State, Territory, or District, in connection with any quarantine, enacted or promulgated by such State, Territory, or District, as specified in the preceding proviso."

SEC. 2. That the act of March 3, 1905 (32 U. S. Stat. L. 1264), as amended by the acts of March 4, 1913 (37 U. S. Stat. L. 831), and February 7, 1928 (45 U. S. Stat. L. 59), be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding at the end of section 1 thereof the following:

"Provided, That until the Secretary of Agriculture shall have determined the fact that cattle or other livestock, including poultry, are affected with a contagious, infectious, or communicable disease, and has quarantined a State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or a portion thereof, with reference to such disease, as provided in this act, as amended, nothing in said act shall prevent or shall be construed to prevent any State, Territory, or District from enacting, promulgating, and enforcing any quarantine, prohibiting or restricting the transportation of any livestock, including live poultry, into or through such State, Territory, District, or portion thereof, from any other State, Territory, District, or portion thereof, when it shall be found, by the State, Territory, or Distict promulgating or enacting the same, that such contagious, infectious, or communicable disease exists in such other State, Territory, District, or portion thereof: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, whenever he deems such action advisable and necessary to carry out the purpose of this act, as amended, to cooperate with any State, Territory, or District, in connection with any quarantine, enacted or promulgated by such State, Territory, or District, as specified in the preceding proviso."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana explain the purposes of the joint resolution and the changes in the existing law?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, under existing law quarantines against cattle and poultry can be established exclusively by the Department of Agriculture. It was intended to give to the States the authority to establish quarantines wherever the United States has not established one. We enacted a similar law two years ago in relation to plant quarantine, which has proven exceedingly beneficial in operation. The bill is approved by the Department of Agriculture and is regarded as very necessary for the preservation and prosperity of the livestock industry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks just made a letter received by me from W. J. Butler, State veterinary surgeon of Montana.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MONTANA LIVESTOCK SANITARY BOARD,
Helena, December 14, 1928.

Hon. T. J. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I was chairman of the United States Live Stock Sanitary Association committee on uniform regulations this year. This association, as you know, is an association of regulatory officials interested in livestock sanitary work in various States of the United States, the Federal Government, and the Dominion of Canada.

One recommendation which was made reads as follows:

"Your committee again calls your attention to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, No. 187, October term, 1925. This decision, in effect, declared that State quarantines were not operative on interstate shipments when specific authority to govern the spread of disease has been delegated to the Federal Government.

"We recommend that this association authorizes its legislative committee to have drafted and presented to Congress an amendment to the existing Federal laws which will give States the right to establish and enforce quarantine for animal and poultry diseases, on shipments of livestock or poultry consigned to or passing through their respective States."

I do not know just how to go about securing an amendment to the Federal laws, and I am appealing to you for assistance. This amendment, I believe, would require similar action to that which you took for the Department of Agriculture in securing for them Federal recognition for plant quarantine.

We understand that the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania upheld the Pennsylvania Bureau of Animal Industry quarantine restricting the movement of cattle into or passing through the State of Pennsylvania during the last foot-and-mouth disease outbreak. We also understand that the United States Department of Agriculture regulation provides for the recognition of State quarantines; but I believe we would be in a much safer position if Congress amended the present law so as to give the States the right to establish and enforce quarantines on the interstate shipment of livestock or poultry consigned to or passing through their respective States.

Yours very truly,

W. J. BUTLER,
State Veterinary Surgeon.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNUAL LEAVE OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 5307) equalizing annual leave of employees of the Department of Agriculture stationed outside the continental limits of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "of," to insert the words "the act of June 30, 1914 (U. S. C. 58, sec. 535), and," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of June 30, 1914 (U. S. C. 58, sec. 535), and the act of July 24, 1919 (U. S. C. 58, sec. 536), with respect to annual and cumulative leave for certain employees of the Department of Agriculture stationed in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the island of Guam, and the Virgin Islands shall hereafter apply to all employees of said department assigned to permanent duty at any place outside the continental limits of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I would like to have the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], who introduced the bill, or the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], who reported it, explain it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, as the report indicates, the bill affects about 130 employees of the Department of Agriculture out of a total of over 16,000. It applies only to those employees of the Department of Agriculture outside of continental United States, some of whom at this time have the privilege of 30 days' annual leave which may be accumulated for four years, whereas others have no such privilege and in fact have only 15 days' leave. The matter came to my attention when an employee of the Department of Agriculture in Haiti and another one in Panama told me that they were entitled to but 15 days' annual leave, and that it took them a week to come to the United States and a week to go back, so that their leave would all be used up in travel. The bill is strongly recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture and others and is intended to place all these employees on an equal basis.

The bill is strongly recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture. It affects comparatively few persons, and merely proposes to place them all upon an equality.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator a question. Have not the employees in the Department of Agriculture who are stationed outside of the continental limits of the United States the same leave of absence as have the employees of the other departments?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; there are 37 of them in number who have 30 days' annual leave, which may be accumulated for four years, but there are 135 of them who do not have that privilege, and I am trying to place all upon an equality.

Mr. SMOOT. That is in only one department, however. How about the other departments of the Government?

Mr. HAYDEN. In the War Department, the State Department, and other departments employees may accumulate their leave.

Mr. SMOOT. They have 30 days' leave?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have no objection if the employees in the other departments have 30 days' leave, but if they have not I certainly should object to the employees of the Agricultural Department having any advantage.

Mr. HAYDEN. As I understand, the accumulated leave is allowed in the other departments of the Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CRATER NATIONAL FOREST

The bill (S. 5529) to add certain lands to the Crater National Forest was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I ask that that bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LEVEE AND DRAINAGE DISTRICTS IN ARKANSAS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10657) to authorize the assessment of levee, road, drainage, and other improvement district benefits against certain lands, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the Government of the United States to the levy of special assessments, based upon benefits estimated to be derived from local levee and drainage districts within the boundaries of the St. Francis Levee district of Arkansas, within the State of Arkansas, is hereby expressed and given. The laws of the State of Arkansas levying said special assessments and providing for the enforcement of such levy and the establishment of a lien and of all remedies pertaining thereto are expressly made applicable to the lands described in this act: Provided, That no levy, assessment, or collection of any special assessment shall attach or be applicable to any lands of the United States, nor permit the collection of any special assessment for such tax from the United States Government, nor from any entryman or person as to any such lands until the date when the entryman or purchaser shall become entitled to a patent from the United States for such land. Such levy, special assessment, or tax shall not operate against the Government of the United States, and shall only operate and take effect and be in force when and if the equitable title to any particular tract of land involved shall have passed from the United States to such entryman or purchaser, and such entryman or purchaser shall have become entitled to patent therefor.

SEC. 2. That all the acts, levies, assessments, and proceedings in substantial accordance with the laws of Arkansas, and all levies and assessments of benefits against lands, the equitable title to which had passed as provided in section 1 of this act, are hereby cured and confirmed, and the same shall not be set aside, vacated, or annulled by any court for want of jurisdiction or any irregularity in the proceedings based upon the want of authority now conferred by this act.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be available to the St. Francis Levee district of Arkansas, and to any drainage district within the boundaries of the St. Francis Levee district heretofore or hereafter created, as expressing the consent of the Government to the special assessments fixed substantially in accordance with the laws of Arkansas and this act.

SEC. 4. That in all cases where there has been a foreclosure of the liens of any improvement district and said lands have been purchased by the said districts, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon proof of such sale and purchase and upon the payment of the sum of $5 per acre, together with the usual fees and commissions charged entry of lands under the homestead laws, where such payment has not heretofore been made, to execute to said district or districts a patent to said lands; and in all cases of future foreclosures and purchases by said districts it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the payment of a like sum and proof of the foreclosure and purchase by the said districts, to execute to them patents for the lands so purchased upon the expiration of the period of redemption in the areas in Mississippi and Poinsett Counties, described in the act of January 17, 1920.

SEC. 5. If any portion of this act be held unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the remaining provisions of the act.

SEC. 6. This act shall repeal all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith and shall take effect forthwith.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas to favor us with an explanation of that bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I hope I may do so quite briefly. Drainage and levee districts were established in my State to reclaim lands from overflows and from accumulated surplus waters. All of the cost of those drainage and levee districts is paid by the landowners who are benefited by the drainage work. A decision of the Supreme Court exempted out about 20,000 acres of such land because the title was in the Government at the time the districts were formed, although the landowners petitioned for the improvement. As everybody could not be made to pay, others similiarly situated quit. We passed a measure through the Senate intended to accomplish the same purpose as this bill, but some lawyer down there thought there was a difference between a bill and a Senate joint resolution. So we propose to pass this new measure.

Mr. KING. There is no obligation imposed on the Government?

Mr. CARAWAY. No.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is merely proposed to permit land formerly owned by the Government and passing to private ownership to bear its share of burdens?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCES BY CENTRAL PACIFIC AND SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAYS

The Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14457) validating certain conveyances heretofore made by Central Pacific Railway Co., a corporation, and its lessee, Southern Pacific Co., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the conveyances hereinafter particularly described and heretofore executed by Central Pacific Railway Co., a corporation, and its lessee, Southern Pacific Co., a corporation, involving certain lands or interests therein, in and in the vicinity of the city of Lodi, and near the station of Acampo, all in the county of San Joaquin, State of California, and forming a part of the right of way of said Central Pacific Railway Co., granted by the Government of the United States of America by an act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes" (vol. 12, U. S. Stat. L. 489), and by said act as amended by act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862" (vol. 13, U. S. Stat. L. 356), are hereby legalized, validated, and confirmed with the same force and effect as if the land involved therein had been held at the time of such conveyances by the corporations making the same under absolute fee simple title.

The conveyances, recorded in office of county recorder of San Joaquin County, Calif., in book of official records, which are hereby legalized, validated, and confirmed, are as follows:

42. October 6, 1928; Lodi Storage and Milling Co., a corporation; volume 262, page 32.

Provided, That such legalization, validation, and confirmation shall not in any instance diminish said right of way to a width less than 50 feet on either side of the center of the main track or tracks of said Central Pacific Railway Co. as now established and maintained: And provided further, That nothing herein contained is intended or shall be construed to legalize, validate, or confirm any rights, titles, or interests based upon or arising out of adverse possession, prescription, or abandonment, and not confirmed by conveyance heretofore made by Central Pacific Railway Co. and its lessee, Southern Pacific Co.: And provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, or other minerals in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to have a statement of the purpose of this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, in the vicinity of the little city of Lodi and the city of Acampo there are certain lands that have been held by various individuals and their predecessors for 30, 40, and 50 years, respectively. The Central Pacific Railroad was one of the land-grant railroads, and to it was granted the right of way for its railroad tracks in that vicinity. The individuals who come here seeking relief, in asking that their title be validated, are those who acquired from the United States Government and have been in possession for the periods of time I have indicated. Their title never had been questioned, for the right of way never was utilized by the railroad company until in 1925 the Southern Pacific Co. began an action to recover certain lands embraced within streets in the city of Stockton. Then the title companies, for the first time, questioned the title of individuals at Lodi and others near Acampo on the right of way of the Central Pacific. Everybody is agreed upon the measure, so far as that is concerned, including the railroad company, the Government, and the landowners. The desire is simply to settle the one technical question of title that has been raised by one of the title companies.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is this land within the exterior limits of the right of way?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Am I to understand that the bill provides that the consent of the railroad company be given?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; and they have already executed quitclaim deeds to it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This is for the purpose of quieting the title of their grantees?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LASSEN VOLCANIC NATIONAL PARK IN CALIFORNIA

The bill (H. R. 11406) to consolidate or acquire alienated lands in Lassen Volcanic National Park, in the State of California, by exchange, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, when the public interests will be benefited thereby, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to accept, on behalf of the United States, title to any land within exterior boundaries of Lassen Volcanic National Park which, in the opinion of the Director of the National Park Service, are chiefly valuable for forest or recreational and national park purposes, and in exchange therefor may patent not to exceed an equal value of such national-park land within the exterior boundaries of said national park; or the Secretary of the Interior may authorize the grantor to cut and remove an equal value of timber in exchange therefor from certain designated areas within the exterior boundaries of said national park: Provided, That such timber shall be cut and removed from such designated area in a manner that will not injure the national park for recreational purposes and under such forestry regulations as shall be stipulated, the values in each case to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become a part of Lassen Volcanic National Park.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MUNICIPAL BATHING POOLS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Order of Business 1778, being House bill 5758, which was passed over a few moments ago during my absence from the floor. The bill authorizes the construction of bathing pools in the District of Columbia and provides a program which is now desired by all the city authorities. Three years ago Congress authorized the construction of two large bathing pools. Quite a controversy arose; that plan was abandoned, and this plan, which has the approval of all groups at interest and of the civic associations and the District authorities, was substituted for that plan. Already two small pools have been constructed, and there has been no objection from anyone. This bill contemplates some other smaller pools.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator where the pools are to be located?

Mr. CAPPER. That is left, according to the bill, to the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, subject to the approval of the National Park and Planning Commission, and after consultation with the Commission of Fine Arts. The bill does not designate the location.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator explain whether the funds for this purpose are chargeable in part to the District or are entirely to be paid by the Government of the United States?

Mr. CAPPER. The money for the purpose is to come out of appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. CAPPER. The Senator will find on page 2, lines 12, 13, and 14, that—> the appropriation of the sums necessary for the purposes named is hereby authorized to be paid in like manner as other appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request preferred by the Senator from Kansas, namely, that the Senate recur to Order of Business No. 1788?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5758) amending the act approved May 4, 1926, providing for the construction and maintenance of bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the establishment of artificial bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia," approved May 4, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 394), is hereby amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

SECTION 1. That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to locate and construct in the District of Columbia, subject to the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and after consultation with the Commission of Fine Arts, as appropriations shall be provided therefor, artificial bathing pools or beaches, not exceeding six in number, with suitable buildings, shower baths, lockers, provisions for the use of filtered water, purification of the water, and all things necessary for the proper conduct of such pools or beaches, and to conduct and maintain the same. The cost of construction of any of these pools or beaches, with buildings and equipment, shall not exceed $150,000 each, and the appropriation of the sums necessary for the purposes named is hereby authorized to be paid in like manner as other appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. The Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital may, in the interest of economy and good administration, with the consent of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transfer for such period as he shall determine, to said commissioners the possession, control, and maintenance of any of said bathing pools or beaches. Otherwise they shall be operated and maintained by the said Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks, and in either case the official conducting any bathing pool or beach is hereby authorized to charge and collect a reasonable fee for the use and enjoyment of such pool or beach, such fees to be paid weekly to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia for deposit in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COUNTRY SUMMER WHITE HOUSE

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Order of Business 1784, being the bill (S. 4975) to create a commission on establishing a country summer White House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLEASE. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold objection for just a moment?

Mr. BLEASE. I am opposed to the bill. It will simply take up the time of the Senate, and I object.

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator withhold his objection for just a moment?

Mr. BLEASE. I withhold it if the Senator wants to talk, but, as I say, it will merely take up time.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, there has been considerable contention about the proposal to provide for a summer White House. The one seeming rational position to take would be to establish a commission made up of the Vice President, the Speaker of the House, the chairman of the respective Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House and Senate; the ranking member of those committees in each body, and the Architect of the Capitol, together with the chairman of the Park and Planning Commission.

There has been some doubt as to the wisdom of the proposal which has been made, accompanied by a recommendation which is here before the Senate and also before the House, that a certain amount be appropriated to put in shape buildings at a certain location now owned by the Government. Consequently, it seems to me that the proper thing to do would be to create such a commission as that provided for in this bill to which such proposals may be submitted. If it then appears wise that action be taken the commission can so report. On the other hand, if the commission deems it unwise——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is refused and the bill will go over. The clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

The bill (H. R. 15651) for the relief of Leonidas L. Cochran was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will speak on that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The commission would be the best judge of the wisdom of the recommendation coming from the Budget Bureau for an appropriation of $48,000 to put in shape a property already owned by the Government.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. FESS. I will yield in a moment. If, on the other hand, it should appear unwise to establish either a summer White House at some other location or to improve the grounds already owned by the Government, the commission would be the best judge of that. I am attempting to lodge this question with a commission whose judgment would be wise and could guide us in the course which should be pursued. That is why I have provided in this bill for a permanent commission to be created. I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GLASS. Has the bill been objected to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been objected to and passed over, but the Senator from Ohio was recognized to speak upon Order of Business No. 1800, which is now before the Senate.

Mr. GLASS. But he is not doing that.

Mr. FESS. I am exercising my rights under the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair believes the Senator from Ohio is still within his rights under the rules.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I saw it reported in the newspapers that a bill was pending here to put in order as a summer White House Government property at a place called Mount Weather, Va.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Is there such a bill on the calendar?

Mr. FESS. There is no such bill on the calendar. Such a bill has been introduced, but it has not been acted upon. Not only that, but there is a recommendation that comes from the Budget Bureau that $48,000 be appropriated for that purpose. I am not certain that it ought to be done.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The pictures of Mount Weather as shown in the newspapers indicate that it has about as much charm as a reform school.

Mr. FESS. That is my impression.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There would appear to be no trees there.

Mr. FESS. I agree with the Senator. My hope was that we could place this matter in the hands of a commission whose judgment could be relied upon.

Mr. DILL and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. Does not the Senator think that the same kind of a commission might well give consideration to the question of a home for the Vice President?

Mr. FESS. That is another important feature which I should like to see the Senate consider.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that the President ought to be permitted to select his own place for having a summer vacation?

Mr. FESS. I think that, of course, goes without saying.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think he should.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am hoping that there will be a Democratic President some time, and I should like to see a summer White House where he could be made comfortable. Pending that time, I think we should do our part to make the President of the United States comfortable during the heated season in this city.

I am usually out of harmony with the Senator from Ohio, but this time I think he is right, and I hope his project will succeed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can not to-day, in view of the objection raised by the Senator from South Carolina.

LEONIDAS L. COCHRAN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of House bill 15651?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOULA NATIONAL FOREST, MONT.

The bill (H. R. 14148) to amend the act of May 17, 1928, entitled "An act to add certain lands to the Missoula National Forest, Mont.," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 14761) for the relief of Clarence Stevens was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 14981) for the relief of Josephine Laforge (Sage Woman) was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask to have that bill also go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM W. HEAD, DECEASED

The bill (H. R. 15700) for the relief of the heirs of William W. Head, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN MONTANA

The bill (H. R. 15724) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain lands within the State of Montana, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREE TEXTBOOKS FOR PUPILS OF DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The bill (H. R. 12739) to provide books and educational supplies free of charge to pupils of the public schools of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I submit two amendments to this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, lines 6 and 7, it is proposed to strike out the comma following the word "textbooks" and the words "supplemental books, and other necessary educational books."

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it is entirely impossible to hear anything that is going on. Can we not have order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BAYARD. May the amendment be stated again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will again be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, lines 6 and 7, it is proposed to strike out the comma following the word "textbooks" and the words "supplemental books, and other necessary educational books."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] has objected to this bill several times. I do not think the Senate should take it up in his absence.

Mr. CAPPER. The amendments I have just presented are suggested by the Senator from Colorado and made the bill entirely satisfactory to him. They are also agreed to by the superintendent of schools and the Board of Education.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have two amendments to this bill. If the Senator from Kansas will accept them, very well. If not, the bill must go over. I ask to have them read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We must dispose of the amendment that has already been stated to the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas a question about that amendment. I have some objections which have been received in my office to this bill, with the statement that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] has amended it in some way so as to prevent the furnishing of free textbooks to all the pupils in the schools, and a protest by the Board of Education of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER. The Board of Education of the District of Columbia agrees to the amendments I have submitted. The terms of the bill were rather broad as it was first presented to the Senate; and the Senator from Colorado thought it gave too much leeway in the selection of supplemental or extra books for the students of the senior and junior high schools. The Board of Education advise us that the amendments will make the bill entirely satisfactory to them, and they can obtain all the books that are required by the students of the junior and senior high schools.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Chair permit the amendments to be restated, so that we may understand what they are?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated once more.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment is, on page 1, lines 6 and 7, to strike out the comma following the word "textbooks" and the words "supplemental books, and other necessary educational books."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment proposed, but it seems that we are to have other amendments; and if the bill is going to take up the time of the Senate, and prevent us from reaching other bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, I am going to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over under the objection raised by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. CAPPER. To the amendment I have submitted there is no one objecting.

Mr. GLASS. I am not objecting to the Senator's amendment, but other amendments are to be proposed.

Mr. CAPPER. I know nothing as to the other amendments.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have some amendments. I should like to have them read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May we not have action on the amendment that has been stated?

Mr. BRATTON. I think the bill should go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the objection of the Senator from New Mexico, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, would the Senator object to having this one amendment disposed of, so that we may perfect the bill?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over unless my amendments are going to be accepted, because there is going to be a vote on them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF RAILROADS

The bill (S. 3623) to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] give us a brief explanation of this bill? It is a very important measure and I should like to understand its terms.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, this bill, Senate bill 3623, was introduced at the last session of Congress for the purpose of carrying out a difference of opinion that arose between the Director General of Railroads and the Interstate Commerce Commission. It applies solely to the short-line railroads.

A controversy arose between the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Director General of Railroads as to when, if at all, certain short-line railroads went under Government control. This bill, as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, gives permission to have a trial case brought before the court in the District to determine whether the Director General or the Interstate Commerce Commission interprets section 202 of the transportation act correctly. The bill provides for incurring no expense at all, but gives to the court jurisdiction to determine which of these two agencies of the Government is correct in its interpretation of this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that all that is provided for is that there may be a lawsuit about the matter, in order that the courts may decide the situation upon the law and the evidence?

Mr. COUZENS. That is correct; and they have agreed to make one test case, instead of cluttering up the courts with different suits brought by the short-line railroads.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what is the question that the courts will be empowered to decide if the bill passes?

Mr. COUZENS. If the Senator will look at the report he will find that at one time the Director General of Railroads said that certain railroads under President Wilson's order came under Government control. The Interstate Commerce Commission said that there was another time when they came under Government control; and the court is to determine the time when they did come under Government control for the purpose of settling the claims either of the Government against the short-line railroads or of the short-line railroads against the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Why can not that question be determined now in a proper proceeding? Why has it not been determined?

Mr. COUZENS. Because the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Director General of Railroads have not agreed, and the Interstate Commerce Commission has reversed itself as to the determination of the time and left certain short-line railroads up in the air, without any way of adjudicating their cases, and other cases have been adjudicated.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is found necessary in order to adjudicate the claims of the short-line railroads?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes. The Interstate Commerce Committee have been negotiating with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the short-line railroads for over a year to devise language that was satisfactory to the Interstate Commerce Commission to have this matter adjudicated.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. If I understand the Senator correctly, the case will be a moot case.

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, no; they will take one concrete case which involves the same principle that is involved in all the other cases.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It will be a test case.

Mr. BLAINE. Will it be seeking an advisory opinion?

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, no; it will be a test case. It will be a concrete case, with the same principle involved that is involved in the cases of all the other short-line railroads.

Mr. BLAINE. Brought by one of the roads against the department?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I have two or three telegrams from Cleveland protesting against the passage of the bill. If the bill does nothing more than the Senator says—and I have no reason to believe that he is incorrect about it—it seems to me there is no objection to the passage of the bill. Notwithstanding the fact that I have some telegrams expressing opposition to it, I am inclined to let the bill go through.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator's constituents have misunderstood the nature of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, we can not hear what is being said. If there is anything important going on over there, we should like to hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. FESS. I was just stating to the Senator that I had had some protests in the form of telegrams from Cleveland, Ohio, against the passage of this bill; but I can not see any basis for the protests, for, as the Senator explains the matter, this is simply an opportunity to adjudicate a point in difference that ought to be cleared up. For that reason I am not inclined to oppose the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920, be amended and reenacted by adding thereto a new paragraph to be known as paragraph (h).

(h) If the claim of any carrier under this section is denied in whole or in part by the commission, the several district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction, upon a petition of such carrier to enjoin and set aside such action of the commission, to hear and determine questions of law arising upon such claims in the same manner and to the same extent as they now hear and determine questions of law in cases brought to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend in whole or in part any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the act entitled "An act to create a commerce court and to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910, as amended by the act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1913; and the provisions of said act shall apply to all such proceedings under this amendment: Provided, That if the petition is for the enjoining and setting aside of any such action taken by the commission prior to the approval of this amendment said petition shall be filed within one year from the time when this act is approved, and not after; and if the petition is for the enjoining and setting aside of any such action taken by the commission after the approval of this amendment, said petition shall be filed within one year from the time when such action is taken by the commission, unless within such period the carrier and the commission agreed in writing to suspend the running of the statute of limitations for filing suit from the date of the agreement to the date of the final decision in one or more named cases then pending before the courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF FARMERS IN ORANGE COUNTY, N. Y.

The bill (S. 5743) authorizing an appropriation of $50,000 for the purchase of seed, feed, and fertilizer to be supplied to farmers in the flooded sections of Orange County, N. Y., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. Let that go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, was this bill objected to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not know who made the objection.

Mr. BAYARD. I made the objection.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will withhold his objection for a moment, I should like to explain the object of the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. COPELAND. In the Wallkill Valley over two or three years there have been several floods, and as a result of them a thousand families are without means of support. They have no money to buy seed or fertilizer; and the object of this bill is the very obvious purpose of relieving their necessities.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall have to continue my objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is maintained, and the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3913) to promote the better protection and highest public use of lands of the United States and adjacent lands and waters in northern Minnesota for the production of forest products, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be explained, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Neither the author of the bill nor the Senator who reported it is present.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

INCINERATORS FOR REFUSE IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 5598) authorizing the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia and the construction thereon of two modern high-temperature incinerators for the destruction of combustible refuse, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 4, line 12, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$725,000" and insert "$850,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to acquire, by purchase at such price or prices as, in their judgment, they may deem reasonable and fair, or, in the discretion of the commissioners, by condemnation, in accordance with the provisions of Chapter XV of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, under a proceeding or proceedings in rem instituted in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, two suitable and properly located sites in the District of Columbia, one in the southeastern section not exceeding 100,000 square feet in area, and one in Georgetown, not exceeding 49,000 square feet in area: Provided, That if the said sites or any part thereof be condemned the said commissioners shall be entitled to enter immediately into possession of any property for which an award shall have been made by paying the amount of such award into the registry of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia: Provided further, That authority is hereby granted to occupy, in addition to the site to be acquired in the southeastern section, such public highways and alleys or parts of public highways and alleys as abut or fall within said site, but the owners of abutting property shall not be denied the use of such highways or parts of highways for ingress and egress.

SEC. 2. That the said commissioners are authorized to erect upon each of said sites a modern, high-temperature refuse incinerator and the necessary equipment for its efficient operation, the combined capacity of such incinerators to be sufficient to consume the entire production of combustible refuse, including street sweepings, in the District of Columbia; and the said commissioners are further authorized to do such grading and fencing of the sites as may be necessary, and to construct loading hoppers, separating plants, ramps, platforms, and buildings for the storage of equipment.

SEC. 3. That the said commissioners shall give reasonable public notice thereof and shall fix a date after which all combustible refuse collected by public or private agencies in the District of Columbia shall be delivered at the incinerators herein provided for, for disposal, except that hotels, apartment houses, business houses, or residences may dispose of their own refuse in their own incinerators: Provided, That such incinerators are inspected and approved for use by the proper agency of the District of Columbia; and after such date it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, company, or corporation to dispose of any combustible refuse in any other manner or at any other place than that prescribed by the said commissioners. The said commissioners are hereby empowered and authorized to make and enforce such regulations as they may deem necessary and proper to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 4. That from and after the date when the incinerators herein authorized to be constructed shall be in operation it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, company, or corporation to burn or in any way dispose of combustible refuse in any manner or at any place other than that prescribed by the said commissioners, except as hereinbefore designated. A violation of the provisions of this act shall be a misdemeanor; and, upon conviction thereof, the person, firm, company, or corporation so charged shall be fined not more than $100 for each and every offense, or confined in the District of Columbia jail for a period not exceeding 60 days, or both, in the discretion of the courts.

SEC. 5. That, in order to dispose of combustible refuse in the manner provided by this act, the commissioners are authorized to purchase motor trucks and trailers and other means of transportation, to install additional equipment, buildings, and machinery, and to employ personal services and labor.

SEC. 6. That a sum not exceeding $850,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, in like manner as other appropriations, for the expenses of the District of Columbia, for sites, buildings, equipment, and other construction work authorized by this act, of which amount $25,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary may be expended for the employment of one or more experts for engineering studies, to determine the possible generation or use of available power resulting from incineration of combustible refuse, and for preparation of plans and specifications; and, upon completion of the incinerators herein provided for, the said commissioners shall abandon the use of the leased plant at Montello Avenue and Mount Olivet Road NE.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5879) authorizing Llewellyn Evans, J. F. Hickey, and B. A. Lewis, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Puget Sound, within the county of Pierce, State of Washington, at or near a point commonly known as the Narrows.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4704) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and report to Congress on the advisability and practicability of establishing a national park to be known as the Tropic Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 17053. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13060. An act to recognize the high public service rendered by Maj. Walter Reed and those associated with him in the discovery of the causes and means of transmission of yellow fever.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to each of the following bills:

S. 2366. An act to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions; and

S. 3162. An act to authorize the improvement of the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 16839. An act to provide for investigation of sites suitable for the establishment of a naval airship base; and

H. R. 17026. An act granting a part of the Federal building site at Savannah, Ga., to the city of Savannah for street purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 2068. An act for the relief of certain officers of the Dental Corps of the United States Navy;

S. 3198. An act to amend the act of March 3, 1915, granting double pension for disability from aviation duty, Navy or Marine Corps, by inserting the word "Army," so as to read: "Army, Navy, and Marine Corps";

S. 3590. An act to amend section 110 of the Judicial Code;

S. 3770. An act authorizing the Federal Power Commission to issue permits and licenses on Fort Apache and White Mountain Indian Reservation, Ariz.;

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1896) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to amend the contract executed by the Treasury Department for the construction of the Edward Hines Junior Hospital at Broad View, Ill., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

OIL AND GAS PROSPECTING PERMITS AND LEASES

The bill (H. R. 479) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant certain oil and gas prospecting permits and leases was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 7, after the words "to the," to strike out "Northeast quarter and north half of southwest quarter of section 5; the east half of northeast quarter and northeast quarter of southeast quarter of section 6; the southwest quarter of northeast quarter, south half of northwest quarter, and southeast quarter of section 29; the."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC WORKS

The bill (H. R. 13884) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator——

Mr. KING. We can take it up at a later date. It would take too long now. I have several amendments to offer.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, IOWA

The bill (S. 5583) authorizing the Iowa-Nebraska Amortized Free Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, a bill identical with this has passed the House and was substituted for this and passed the Senate. I therefore ask that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be entered.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, TENNESSEE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Senate bill 5685, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Tiptonville, Tenn. Since that bill was passed over a few moments ago there has been sent to the Senate House bill 16959, which has passed the House, and I move that that bill be substituted for the Senate bill and that we proceed to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 16959) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Tiptonville, Tenn., was read twice by its title and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Tiptonville, Tenn., authorized to be built by J. T. Burnett, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, by the act of Congress approved May 14, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from May 14, 1929.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that Senate bill 5685 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL STREET, ARIZONA

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, when Calendar No. 1747 was reached, I asked that the bill be temporarily passed over until an identical House bill could be sent over to the Senate. The House bill is now here on the table, and I ask that it be substituted for the Senate bill and that we proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 16661) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the paving of the Federal strip known as International Street adjacent to Nogales, Ariz.," approved May 16, 1928, was read twice by its title and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 5581 will be indefinitely postponed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, KANSAS

The bill (S. 5758) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "the date of approval hereof" and insert in lieu thereof "May 22, 1929," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., authorized to be built by the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, by act of Congress approved May 22, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from May 22, 1929.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE

The bill (S. 5045) authorizing Jed P. Ladd, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain from the town of Alburgh, Vt., to the town of Swanton, Vt., the said right and privilege to extend across Lake Champlain along the shore line 1 mile each way, northerly and southerly from the Central Vermont Railway Co.'s bridge on the Swanton shore and 1 mile northerly from said bridge and southerly from said bridge to the south end of McGregors Point, so called, on the Alburgh shore at a point at or near East Alburgh was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 2, line 5, to strike out "Alburgh" and insert "Alburg"; in line 5, after "near," insert "west"; on page 3, line 16, strike out "twenty" and insert "five"; on page 5, line 19, strike out "this" and to insert in lieu thereof "his"; on page 6, after line 9, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 8. All contracts made in connection with the construction of the bridge authorized by this act, and which shall involve the expenditure of more than $5,000, shall be let by competitive bidding. Such contracts shall be advertised for a reasonable time in some newspaper of general circulation published in the States in which the bridge is located and in the vicinity thereof; sealed bids shall be required and the contracts shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. Verified copies or abstracts of all bids received and of the bid or bids accepted shall be promptly furnished to the highway departments of the States in which such bridge is located. A failure to comply in good faith with the provisions of this section shall render null and void any contract made in violation thereof, and the Secretary of War may, after hearings, order the suspension of all work upon such bridge until the provisions of this section shall have been fully complied with.

On page 7 change the section number from "8" to "9."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, Jed P. Ladd, of Burlington, Vt., his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and he is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Lake Champlain, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between a point at or near East Alburg, Vt., and a point at or near West Swanton, Vt., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon Jed P. Ladd, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Jed P. Ladd, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Vermont, any public agency or political subdivision of such State within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and it approaches and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of five years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State or public agencies or political subdivision thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjudged as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. Jed P. Ladd, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway department of the State of Vermont a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of such State shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of cost so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge. For the purpose of such investigation the said Jed P. Ladd, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available all of his records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to Jed P. Ladd, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns; and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or persons.

SEC. 8. All contracts made in connection with the construction of the bridge authorized by this act and which shall involve the expenditure of more than $5,000 shall be let by competitive bidding. Such contracts shall be advertised for a reasonable time in some newspaper of general circulation published in the States in which the bridge is located and in the vicinity thereof; sealed bids shall be required and the contracts shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. Verified copies or abstracts of all bids received and of the bid or bids accepted shall be promptly furnished to the highway departments of the States in which such bridge is located. A failure to comply in good faith with the provisions of this section shall render null and void any contract made in violation thereof, and the Secretary of War may, after hearings, order the suspension of all work upon such bridge until the provisions of this section shall have been fully complied with.

SEC. 9. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing Jed P. Ladd, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain from East Alburg, Vt., to West Swanton, Vt."

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, WEST VIRGINIA

The bill (S. 5735) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Wheeling, W. Va., to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the east channel of the Ohio River, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, I ask that that bill be taken from its place under Rule VIII and be put under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER BRIDGE, NEW YORK

The bill (S. 5706) authorizing Frank A. Augsbury, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Morristown, N. Y., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, Frank A. Augsbury, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Lawrence River, so far as the United States has jurisdiction over the waters of said St. Lawrence River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Morristown, St. Lawrence County, N. Y., to some suitable or convenient point at or near Brockville, in the Province of Ontario, in the Dominion of Canada, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in the Dominion of Canada.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon Frank A. Augsbury, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of New York needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State of New York, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation and expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Frank A. Augsbury, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with any laws of New York applicable thereto, and the rates of tolls so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to Frank A. Augsbury, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns; and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED RIVER BRIDGE, LOUISIANA

The bill (S. 5720) authorizing L. L. Thompsen, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Red River at or near Montgomery, La., was announced as next in order.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, a bill identical with this has passed the House. I ask that the House bill be substituted and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, this bill will be temporarily passed over until the message from the House can be found.

SURVEY OF INDIAN CONDITIONS IN THE UNITED STATES

The resolution (S. Res. 303) increasing the limits of expenditure for a survey of Indian conditions in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, I desire to address the Senate for five minutes at this time on this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has been agreed to heretofore.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The character of the investigation which has recently been conducted by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs is so similar to the famous Committee on the Conduct of the War that I would like to read an extract from Battles and Leaders of the Civil War, which I think is appropriate at this time.

I find in that volume this statement:

> The Committee on the Conduct of the War proceeded to investigate Ball's Bluff by the methods common to nearly all similar bodies. Witnesses were summoned and examined without order; there was no cross-examination; the accused was not confronted with the witnesses nor told their names, nor the charge upon which he had been already tried, condemned, and sentenced before he was even allowed to appear.

This subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, with the $30,000 heretofore appropriated by Congress, has employed investigators to go about in various parts of the United States seeking out complaints against the Indian Service. If any person could be found who had a grouch, or a grievance, he was heard; if he was disgruntled or a sorehead, the investigators were very glad indeed to meet and talk with him, but the officials of the Indian Service, the various Indian superintendents in the United States whose conduct was under investigation, were not notified of these complaints.

The most flagrant instance that I found, and yet it is typical, is the case of the Riverside Indian School in California. Two members of the subcommittee visited Riverside, examined witnesses in the city of Riverside for two days, took testimony derogatory to the superintendent of the school and to its management, and yet never visited the Sherman Institute. They were invited to go into the outskirts of Riverside and inspect the school. They never went into its precincts, and never called the superintendent before them, though he was severely criticized by witnesses who appeared at the Riverside hearings.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to say, in regard to the Riverside situation, that there was a flu epidemic at the time we were there, and a large number of the pupils were sick with the flu. The superintendent was also sick. We invited him to appear, but he could not come on account of his illness.

Mr. HAYDEN. The report I have from that school, made by four distinguished citizens of Riverside, which I shall ask to have inserted in the RECORD, reads, in part, as follows:

> (a) No visit was made to Sherman, 5 miles away, though invited. Would it not have at least been fair to have seen the school.
> (b) Superintendent Conser was not consulted in any manner. Is not his 20 years of experience valuable, and should he not be asked to give his versions.
> (c) Doctor Wells sat in the room a good part of the time, but he was not asked anything. Why deliberately ignore the valuable help he could have given.
> (d) Dr. W. W. Robles, the attending physician, was not called. He has an Indian service health record second to none, nor second to any white school or college.
> (e) There was much valuable information that could have been had, but you can't get it when the so-evident purpose is to criticize and neither to commend nor recognize the management, and there is no more successful man in the Indian Service than Supt. F. M. Conser, of Sherman.

I bring this matter to the attention of the Senate in connection with this resolution, which, as I stated, I shall not object to in its amended form. I am willing that money be appropriated to the extent of $15,000 to continue this investigation, as recommended by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I hope that as the investigation continues opportunity will be given to the superintendents and other employees in the Indian Service who are under investigation and criticism to appear and defend themselves from unjust charges and accusations.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The difficulty we had in my own State when the committee came there was to get the superintendent and his subordinates to come to the hearing.

Mr. HAYDEN. The committee had full power to subpœna witnesses, to call for persons and papers, so there should have been no difficulty about that.

Mr. DILL. The superintendent had left the country and had gotten as far away as he could, and we had to call for his assistants repeatedly to get them there. It seemed to me that they did not want to appear. They did not want to be there at all. That was my chief criticism of them.

Mr. HAYDEN. The complaint I have to make is that the attorneys and investigators employed by this committee went about the country merely seeking to find persons who were willing to criticize the Indian Bureau. I inquired the other day as to how the first $30,000 had been expended and could not get the information at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Arizona has expired. Did the Senator from Arizona wish to ask unanimous consent for the printing of something in the RECORD?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do so request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RIVERSIDE, CALIF., February 5, 1929.

SENATE AND HOUSE COMMITTEES ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Pursuant to request through the Indian department, this report is made by Dr. W. B. Wells, city and county health officer, a resident and practitioner in Riverside for 20 years, and who has done considerable social welfare and inspection work in years past with Mr. S. C. Evans, one of this committee, then mayor of Riverside. Doctor Wells has been and is generally familiar with Sherman Institute and also with the Mexican problem as it exists in the Coachella Valley, in the eastern part of Riverside County, and also in the cities of the county in relation to housing, food, sanitation, and health, with considerable direct observation and experience with tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, diphtheria, and the other diseases encountered in general practice. He has been one of our most efficient and most experienced advocates of pure milk and sanitary food and living conditions.

Mr. Meyer Schaenthal has been secretary of the Riverside Chamber of Commerce since 1923. He has attended numerous functions at Sherman Institute and often visits the grounds, and has had abundant opportunity to see the Indian children. He has seen the boys many times in their musical and band exercises on the grounds and at functions away from Sherman, also at football and other athletic exercises. He has also set in at conferences and heard discussed and presented the various phases of local support and activities relating to Sherman, as well as our community interest in the students.

He has also had opportunity to observe and be present when the girls of Sherman have given their public presentations of music, speaking, etc.

Mrs. W. H. Ellis is the widow of our late superior court judge, W. H. Ellis. She and Judge Ellis lived for several years in the Perris Valley near the Indian school before it was removed to Riverside, and later they lived very near the school after its removal to Riverside. Her observation and acquaintance of those years have been deepened and strengthened by her many appreciated services to the community during the war and since, and she has been much interested in Sherman. She has served as president of the Riverside Woman's Club.

Mr. S. C. Evans has visited and collected among the Indians of the Southwest for many years, and has visited Indians throughout California, Arizona, New Mexico, the Klamath country, and all down the west coast of Mexico and below the border adjoining San Diego and Imperial Counties.

He knew the Indian school when it was at Perris and saw its removal to Riverside. He sat in conferences when the late Charles F. Lummis and others advised the Pala location for the removal of the Warner Ranch Tribe, and he witnessed that removal. He has visited Pala several times. He has visited Sherman many times; has addressed the students; delivered the graduating diplomas one year; has visited the dining room and kitchen at meal times and seen the food prepared. He has consulted in the purchase of the last additional land, and has known conditions fairly intimately wholly on account of his interest in and acquaintance with Indians and Indian life on the various reservations. When State senator he investigated the condition of the Indians in Inyo County, Calif. He has also at times employed Indians in land development. He has camped with the Indians on reservations, attended their ceremonies and games; has photographed them and collected their art, but never for commercial purposes.

We feel, therefore, that we are reasonably well qualified to speak on Indian matters with a sympathetic and fair understanding and without prejudice.

After reading, as we have, throughout the years various reports and investigations and magazine articles on Indian matters, and after attending, as several of us have, numerous meetings and conferences and presentations where speakers have addressed from a few to several hundred, we can not but be impressed with the very evident attempt by some reports and investigations and by some speakers to unnecessarily criticize the Government, the Indian Bureau, and the nonreservation boarding school, including Sherman Institute. Constructive criticism is acceptable to all reasonable people, but unreasonable fault finding and some misstatements at times repeated are not conducive to cooperation or to fair decisions.

Many of these critics and investigators have no particular knowledge of the Indians, nor have they in many instances given any adequate time to visitation or inquiry. Very learned language and emphatic statements do not constitute any supereducation nor need any extraordinary ability; and so, while we do not for a minute recognize or acknowledge the claimed particular Indian knowledge of some of these critics and investigators, we offer our comments with a desire to speak rationally and in plain English.

(1) After very careful investigation we deny absolutely that a certain Indian boy was struck in the face by the disciplinarian so that blood flowed from the boy's nose in profusion, etc. This being the case of one Luke Chester from the Klamath country. (Riverside hearing, November 22 to 24, 1927.) This boy was at the time about 20 years old, some six years back, and he was a fairly husky and well-built lad of about 170 pounds. There was a white man by the name of Soden, employed as a carpenter, and he and Luke were working together, when some dispute arose. Mr. Soden asked the disciplinarian, Emil Benson, to punish Luke, and after an investigation the disciplinarian said that he saw no reason for punishment and so he refused. Soden then said that he would do it, and he proceeded to strike Luke in the nose and blood flowed. Luke at once attacked Soden and soon Soden called for help, when the disciplinarian said, "You started this, now you finish it," words approximating that idea.

Mr. Bert Amos Jameson, an Indian, then assistant disciplinarian, and yet at Sherman, was present all the time this took place, about 8.30 to 9 a. m. on the porch of the large boys' building, and he says that the disciplinarian did not even touch the boy Luke, and advised against punishment.

Among so many Indian boys, as with a like number of whites, there are rough ones at times, but very few here and no abuse. The former "jail" of early years was torn down here before the ruling against corporal punishment was promulgated.

We commend that rule. We find that no brutal or excessive punishment has been administered at Sherman. People in jail and in prison sometimes make enough agonizing noises to make you think they were being killed (if you heard them), but this in turn is the exception, and rare exceptions there have been, when, for instance, during Mr. Addison's time as disciplinarian, one bad Indian cut him slightly with a knife, but this and a few are extreme cases.

(2) We personally know that Supt. F. M. Conser for approximately 20 years has sought to raise the age limit of admittance, as enough letters and statements attest, and still at times the pressure of Indian parents is hard to resist in cases, for instance, where small children are deserted by the husband, say, of a mixed marriage, as in the case of one young girl now here. We saw her and we read her case—it is the exception—but this little girl is immeasurably better off here, and taking her at her mother's request was the thing to do—and yet, without the knowledge of her case, the critic can make it appear as terrible.

We agree that the small children should preferably remain with their parents and attend day schools or near-by boarding schools where they can return home at times; but this should not be a hard and fast ruling, as some of these smaller children, even in particular cases, would be better off at Sherman than in any home their parents or one parent can in cases provide. Establish the principle, but administer it reasonably.

To make this change desirable a financial and home visitation set-up must be had and transportation arranged for, as the latter now is done at Pala and at Warner's ranch schools. The desires of the Indian parents should be a decided factor, and they will not be one-minded.

In the hearings held in Riverside November 22 to 24, 1927, the inference was given by one witness that Sherman, as well as other schools, indulged in the sport of forcibly taking children from their parents and bringing them here against their parents' consent. We have heard this before and we state, without any fear of proof to the contrary, that such a condition does not exist here nor would it be countenanced here or elsewhere by anyone with an ounce of sense. It may be—we do not know—that something of too much show of force has been used in years past by some one in the field, but let us hope we have outgrown any such impatience as we have outgrown and improved white conditions in our schools.

(3) We repeat, this statement is injurious and not true as to Sherman, and we challenge any proof to the contrary. The consent of every child's parent is here first obtained. There are those who wish to come, but there is no more room.

This statement is similar to one made in Los Angeles, but a few years back, by a Congressman, that a girl of a certain tribe had been mistreated here, when no girl of that tribe had at that date ever attended here and he was so informed. These loose statements are unnecessarily injurious to good service, and they are too often not true.

Let us insert that the late Riverside investigation of November, 1928, was either very weak or very one sided.

(a) No visit was made to Sherman 5 miles away, though invited. Would it not have at least been fair to have seen the school?

(b) Superintendent Conser was not consulted in any manner. Is not his 20 years of experience valuable, and should he not be asked to give his version?

(c) Doctor Wells sat in the room a good part of the time, but he was not asked anything. Why deliberately ignore the valuable help he could have given?

(d) Dr. W. W. Roblee, the attending physician, was not called. He has an Indian Service health record second to none, nor second to any white school or college.

(e) There was much valuable information that could have been had, but you can not get it when the so-evident purpose is to criticize and neither to commend nor recognize the management; and there is no more successful man in the Indian Service than Supt. F. M. Conser, of Sherman.

The food is plentiful enough, of good quality, and sustaining, as evidenced by the physical looks and the medical reports, reference to which, with a more exhaustive statement, will follow this report.

There could be a greater variety, but there again is a problem of getting some of the Indians to eat certain foods. We will later comment further on this.

If more funds can be supplied, we would favor a raise in cost per meal so that milk, eggs, and butter could be served more frequently, and especially so if meat prices are to remain high.

(4) Yes; looking at it one way, some of the dormitories are too crowded for a permanency, and the school has reached its limit in numbers. The sanitation, cleanliness, warmth, beds and bedding, parlor, and entertainment and study rooms, and open space is sufficient and comfortably equipped. So are bathing showers and individual towels. A few additional toilets should be installed.

We will, however, and within a short time, report constructively as to possible housing and food improvement, based on the funds available; and we will also include a survey of the hospital and health conditions, which are good and under the personal care for 20 years of Dr. W. W. Roblee, one of our ablest physicians and surgeons; and his reports are on file and will be referred to.

His record in tuberculosis and trachoma is exceedingly good and, notwithstanding the flu, the health and physical condition of the Indians is not only good but it is excellent, and they are well and amply cared for by efficient attendants. This statement is not any "bolster up," but it is a real fact of which our whole community is proud.

In conclusion let us say that there are excellent people who have the good of the Indian at heart and who have done good work for him in helping to interpret or have interpreted some of the Indian laws and to prevent some acts becoming laws in the way they were first drawn. There have been in this section some unwise attempts at allotment, and there have been cases hard to deal with, largely due to the unsettled status of the Indian as a citizen, notwithstanding the decisions.

What is a "competent" and what is an "incompetent" Indian is a source of annoyance at times.

Suffering at times is self-imposed, and as one instance both a wife and later the husband died absolutely unnecessarily, but neither would listen to any reason or undergo reasonable attention, though offered by two members of this committee.

Several of the old men absolutely refuse to have their eyes treated or to be given glasses, and this objection to glasses is common at Sherman, though some progress has been made. Extreme cases are known where the lenses have been removed and only the rim worn for a while.

One member of this committee is now trying to get an old Indian man to use glasses, but he refuses.

Are you going to use force to make them receive proper attention? You can't do the impossible with the older Indians or with the more primitive younger ones; it must come with persuasion and education and by the object lesson of seeing others benefited.

Why not forget a good deal of this hysteria, this unfair criticism in many instances, this dividing into groups and associations?

Why not take the financially possible and the more reasonable and practical suggestions and criticisms of the Merriam report—but not all of it—and let all of those who are helpfully interested in the Indian get together for real advancement, rather than be so somewhat intolerant in places of other people's viewpoints and insistence on facts.

None of us know it all, but all of us can or ought to dispassionately discuss and present a reasonable and humane and educational program without soaring into an impossible Utopia.

We pledge our cooperation to all who will work in this spirit.

More details soon.

With best wishes,

W. B. WELLS, M. D.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, during the past year there has been considerable criticism of the Indian Bureau. The investigation now being made discloses that the administration of the Indian Service is not perfect. It would be a miracle if it were.

Mr. McNARY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. What is the measure before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The measure before the Senate is Senate Resolution 303, introduced by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

Mr. FESS. Let it go over.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe it is a great mistake——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor. To whom does he yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will occupy but a moment and prefer not to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In connection with the remarks just made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], I want to submit for the RECORD some data which I think will be helpful; at least they should be helpful.

Some of the criticism leveled at the Indian Bureau perhaps is just, but I am convinced that much of it is entirely unjust. The Indian Bureau is only one element in this matter. The Indian Bureau can function only when and after the Congress gives it money with which to operate.

The record shows that during the past two years the Indian Bureau has submitted estimates to the Budget Bureau totaling something like $13,000,000, which have been denied. Yet the Indian Bureau is criticized for not taking care of the sick and ill and dying Indians, when the facts are that requests have been made for funds with which to improve conditions, to build hospitals, to extend and equip hospitals, and in some instances the Bureau of the Budget has denied such requests and in other cases the Congress has denied the money.

Recently I made inquiry of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to the matter and have his reply, and I now ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, in connection with what I have just stated, a copy of the letter I sent to Commissioner Burke, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and likewise his reply thereto, containing a tabulation of figures showing the amounts of money requested of the Budget Bureau and the amounts denied by that department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 9, 1929.

Hon. CHAS. H. BURKE,
Commissioner Bureau of Indian Affairs,
Department of Interior, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BURKE: Much of the criticism that is now being directed toward your office, it occurs to me, should be directed against other departments of the Government. I realize that we do not have adequate hospital facilities to take care of our Indian population. I realize further that many Indian schools do not have adequate hospital facilities to take care of the Indian children when they become ill and, having no such facilities, nothing can be done except to send them to their homes.

If this is correct, the Congress is mainly responsible for this condition, because I understand that your department has made recommendations on many former occasions for funds with which to adequately take care of the several situations complained of.

To the end that I may have accurate information, please send me an itemized statement of the funds requested from the Budget Bureau during the past two years which have been denied by said Budget Bureau.

In addition to the itemized statement of the funds requested, and denied by the Budget Bureau, please send me an itemized statement of the funds recommended by the Budget Bureau and denied by the Congress. In preparing these two statements, please go into such details as you think would be of benefit to the Congress.

Thanking you in advance for this information, I am

Yours most cordially,

ELMER THOMAS.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 14, 1929.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your letter of February 9, requesting certain information in regard to the estimates for the Indian Service for the fiscal years 1929 and 1930 which have not been transmitted to Congress. The following is a statement in regard to the preliminary, regular, and supplemental estimates for the fiscal year 1929:

Preliminary estimates, Treasury appropriations	$20,375,308.75
Supplemental estimates	3,029,505.75
Regular estimates	16,092,303.00
Total regular and supplemental estimates, fiscal year 1929	19,121,808.75
Total budget submitted to Congress	13,754,009.00
Reduction	5,367,799.75

This is the greatest detail that we can furnish at this time in connection with the estimates for the fiscal year 1929.

I am inclosing herewith a table showing a comparison of the preliminary, regular, and supplemental estimates of the Indian Service for the fiscal year 1930, which also shows the reductions in these estimates. The total reduction will be found in the grand total on page 3, which amounts to $6,701,681. You will note that our estimates have been reduced approximately $12,000,000 for the two years.

Referring to your inquiry about the estimates transmitted to Congress and which were denied, you are advised that Congress made appropriations slightly in excess of the amounts contained in the Budget for the fiscal years 1929 and 1930. If further detailed information is desired we will be glad to furnish it to you upon request.

Cordially yours,

CHAS. H. BURKE, Commissioner.

Approved.

E. C. FINNEY,
First Assistant Secretary.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. BRATTON. What disposition has been made of Order of Business 1823?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] it has been passed over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Ohio would withdraw his objection. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio, and to these other Senators who have just spoken about this matter, that the Senate committee has had this investigation going on for something like six months. I have not the time to answer the criticisms that have been made, but I want to say to the Senate that if these bills are passed, I propose to answer the explanation made by the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Oklahoma.

The committee has taken testimony, and there are three volumes of the testimony which the committee has taken. We did send investigators out, because there have been more complaints coming to the Committee on Indian Affairs by reason of what has been going on in the Indian Service than as to almost any other department of the Government.

When it is remembered that the Indian Bureau has under its charge something like a billion six hundred thousand dollars and 250,000 Indians in the United States, and that there has not been any real investigation conducted into that branch of the service, and that the Indians are dying off on various Indian reservations throughout the country, it seems to me that the Senate ought to be willing to make an appropriation of $15,000, so that we might complete the investigation which has already been started.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. FESS. After listening to statements of a Member of the Senate who I think knows as much about Indian Affairs as any man in this Chamber, namely, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], I want to look into this matter further. I am not going to withdraw the objection now, but I may the next time the resolution is reached on the calendar.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from Arizona and to the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. HEFLIN. Let us have the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The Senator from Montana has the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. And I propose to keep it and to speak for five minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is all right.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona said that witnesses have not been confronted with attorneys and have not been given an opportunity to be cross-examined. That is only partially true. It is true, as I understand it, that when the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE] and a few other members of the committee were out in the State of Washington, some witnesses were called before them and no one was there to cross-examine, but ever since the committee has been in session here in the city of Washington the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Burke, has sat in the committee room, has had his counsel there, has cross-examined witnesses, and has interrupted witnesses. He not only did that, but he came before the committee and then flamboyantly gave to the press of the country a statement charging that one Member of the Senate, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE], was in a conspiracy to injure not only himself but the Indian Service of the country. We called him and asked him to prove those charges. There was not a scintilla of evidence produced, but there has been a determined effort on the part of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to stop the investigation by one means or another ever since it began.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. Is there any notion on the part of the Senator that it is unwise to go forward with the investigation?

Mr. WHEELER. None whatever.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Indian Bureau is above all suspicion, as we assume it is, nevertheless the bureau itself ought to be willing and glad to have the investigation. For my part I want to say to the Senator that I think there should be a sweeping investigation of the activities of the bureau in order that the public may know how the Indian properties are cared for. We find evidences of disease among the various tribes, and it is important that we should have such a thorough investigation as to enable us to determine whether the Congress is doing its full duty in relation to Indian affairs.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator from New York.

Let me say in closing that during the investigation which is being conducted we have the spectacle of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs constantly lobbying among Senators and talking to them with reference to the investigation. The investigation has been conducted fairly and honestly and decently, and there has not been any attempt on the part of anybody to do anything except to try to find out if the Congress of the United States should enact some further legislation that would be beneficial to the Indians. I say to the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Montana that I would be very willing to cooperate with him along the lines he has suggested. I do not want to withdraw my opposition now in view of the statement made by the Senator from Arizona. I would like to look into the matter.

Mr. WHEELER. What statement has been made by the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Montana heard the statement of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I heard the statement, and nothing in opposition has been stated by the Senator from Arizona, who has looked into the matter himself and does not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey will state the inquiry.

Mr. EDGE. What is the business before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is about to consider Calendar 1824.

Mr. EDGE. Why not the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Because the unanimous-consent agreement provided for two hours on the calendar and we did not reach the Calendar until 11.15. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

The resolution (S. Res. 308) continuing until the end of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress, Senate Resolution No. 79, authorizing a general survey of Indian conditions, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, reserving again the right to object, though I do not intend to do so, I desire to address the Senate on the resolution just stated.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it is quite evident this matter can not be considered now, and I hope the Senator will not consume the entire calendar time by further discussion of a resolution which seems to be in controversy among some of the Senators.

Mr. HAYDEN. I assure the Senator so far as I am concerned that the resolution may pass, but I desire to occupy five minutes.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator has that right, but he has already consumed and there has been consumed quite a good deal of calendar time when it was perfectly obvious that Senators were wrangling among themselves over the merits or demerits of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Georgia to object?

Mr. GEORGE. No; I do not object. I express a hope.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the passage of the resolution in its present form, but I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. FRAZIER] whether he intends to press an amendment which he offered to the resolution which continues the committee indefinitely? The amendment to which I refer was printed on January 26 last, and states that the committee is authorized to sit and act at such times and places as it may see fit through the Seventieth Congress and succeeding Congresses.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the proposed amendment was withdrawn. The time has just been extended through the first session of the Seventy-first Congress.

Mr. HAYDEN. Then I offer the following amendment to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Provided, That any officer or employee of the Bureau of Indian Affairs whose official conduct may be under investigation by such committee shall have the right to appear before the committee in person or by counsel and cross-examine all witnesses appearing before the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, before the resolution is adopted I desire to address myself to it briefly. I have no objections to the investigation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. I think proper investigation looking to defects in the administration of the bureau, if any there be, with a view of correcting those defects by evolving a better system of administering the affairs of the Indians as to life and property, is a step in the right direction. I now make no criticism of the committee. I do think, however, that those who are assailed in the course of the inquiry should have the right to appear and defend themselves as provided in the amendment just adopted.

Soon after the investigation got under way certain self-styled uplifters of the Indians throughout the country manifested a deep interest in the matter. I think they are exercising entirely too much power and too many prerogatives in connection with the Indians' affairs. I think some of these so-called uplifters are detrimental instead of helpful to the Indians.

Under date of January 26, last, a member of this committee inserted in the RECORD an article which had previously appeared in the current issue of the magazine Good Housekeeping, under the title "The Cry of a Broken People." In that article criticisms were directed against Indian conditions throughout the country; that is to say, in practically every State where Indians live and reside. Criticism was directed against two of the Indian schools in my State, one located at Santa Fe and the other at Albuquerque. Acting in the belief that this criticism reflected upon the people of the two cities mentioned, I immediately requested the Governor of the State of New Mexico to head a committee to investigate the Indian school at Santa Fe. He did so. The committee wired a telegraphic report of his investigation and followed it with a detailed report. I have the message and the report here. I also requested the mayor of the city of Albuquerque to head a like committee to investigate the school at Albuquerque. That was done. I have a copy of the report here. Two or three other schools in the State of New Mexico were investigated as a result of the ill-considered and fallacious criticism, which I think rests largely upon imagination.

I desire at this point to have these data respecting the several schools in New Mexico thus examined printed in the RECORD. These are excellent schools and are doing a splendid work among the Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The data referred to are as follows:

SANTA FE, N. MEX., January 30, 1929.

Hon. SAM G. BRATTON,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Committee consisting of Gov. R. C. Dillon, Dr. G. S. Luckett, director of State bureau of public health, and E. Dana Johnson, editor of Santa Fe New Mexican, spent four hours at United States Indian industrial school here to-day; examined entire plant and questioned superintendent, many employees, and pupils. Will forward detailed report by mail to-morrow. Food found abundant, clean, and of good variety and check of individual weight charts which are kept on all pupils shows steady gain in weight. Clothing found adequate, warm, and of good quality. Pupils receive hospital care with resident physician and trained nurse and new building under construction will afford improved modern hospitalization. Disease apparently under good control. There are now 42 cases of trachoma which physician and nurse say is decrease of 25 per cent during school year and 8 per cent of enrollment. Report all precautions taken to prevent spreading in school. There was one tubercular case this year according to physician, who says it was removed to hospital at Laguna. No jail could be found and superintendent and disciplinarian say pupils are never locked up. Sleeping accommodations appear clean and adequate with exception of some crowding in two rooms of girls' dormitory. Found no evidence of overwork of pupils. Cleanliness, sanitation, ventilation, and general living conditions found good. No pupils made complaints and children appeared contented, normal, happy, and healthy.

REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF UNITED STATES INDIAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL AT SANTA FE, N. MEX., ON JANUARY 29, 1929

At the request of Hon. SAM G. BRATTON, United States Senator from New Mexico, and of Hon. Edgar L. Meritt, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, transmitted through Superintendent Burton L. Smith, of the Indian school, the undersigned committee of citizens visited and inspected the United States Indian Industrial School at Santa Fe, spending four hours at the institution on January 29, 1929, examining the buildings and questioning the superintendent, employees, and numerous pupils. Following this investigation the committee sent the following telegram to United States Senator BRATTON:

"Committee, consisting of Gov. R. C. Dillon, Dr. G. S. Luckett, director of State bureau of public health, and E. Dana Johnson, editor of the Santa Fe New Mexican, spent four hours at United States Indian Industrial School here to-day, examined entire plant and questioned superintendent, many employees, and pupils. The committee herewith makes the following more detailed report:

FOOD

The quality of food as observed was generally good, excepting three pieces of beef that were strong. The flour was good, with no evidence of insects or mice. There is attached to this report as Exhibit A sample menus, furnished by the superintendent. These are prepared, he says, two weeks in advance. They indicate reasonably good balance, but are rather monotonous. More green vegetables and raw fruit are desirable. Milk furnished is about one-third of desirable quantity, including that used in cooking. Storage facilities for meat, flour, and canned stuff are good; others were not observed.

The management gave the cost of food as about 18 cents per capita daily, at Government contract rate, which is much lower than retail prices. This does not include transportation costs, which are not charged against the school. This would probably be equivalent to 40 cents daily at retail prices.

The chief clerk stated that the school is allowed $25,000 per year for general food supply, in addition to which $10,000 worth of vegetables and milk is raised on the grounds and $4,000 worth of hogs annually. The dairy, he stated, yields 30 to 35 gallons of milk daily; it is desired to increase the milk supply to 1 quart per day per pupil, but there is not money enough to increase the dairy herd to this extent. The chief clerk also states that 150 pounds of dried milk is consumed weekly, equivalent to 600 pounds of liquid milk. Consumption of flour is twenty-five 100-pound sacks per week. He said the school obtained beef at 15 cents a pound, dried fruit at 6½ cents, bacon at 17 cents, and cheese at 22 cents, these prices being averages.

We observed in the kitchen a large washtub over half filled with waste bread left from the breakfast table. All bread is served in large slices about 1 inch thick. Both white and whole-wheat bread are served. The kitchen appeared clean and the food properly handled. A new bakery is under construction.

NUTRITION OF PUPILS

Practically all pupils were observed, and the committee was present when the noon meal was served. All pupils, so far as we could see in such a short time, had a healthy, well-nourished appearance, full of vitality and spirits, and playful as normal children anywhere.

Dr. J. F. Lane, resident physician, Superintendent Smith, Chief Clerk Vaughn, and Principal Anderson state that the children are all weighed once a month. The weight records of about 200 were inspected, and with very few exceptions showed uniform gain. A sample chart is attached as Exhibit B. Doctor Lane stated that any who do not show gain are given cod-liver oil three times a day and milk twice a day in addition to meals; that these pupils are checked up daily and made to come to the hospital for oil and milk. Dr. H. J. Warner, of the United States Pulbic Health Service, and now in charge of Indian medical service in this region, confirms these statements.

CLOTHING

All the children were well clothed and none appeared to be suffering from the cold. The chief clerk stated that outside workers are provided with gloves and overshoes for protection. Clean clothing from the laundry and that in storage was inspected and adjudged of excellent quality. The girls have woolen dresses and the boys heavy woolen suits for dress; the girls also have woolen capes. Both appeared to have sweaters or coats for ordinary wear. The underwear was of excellent quality, medium weight, full length, and would probably retail for approximately $1.75 per suit. The shoes appeared to be of good quality. Those boys who have the money and prefer to buy their own clothes instead of wearing the school clothing are allowed to do so, the superintendent states. In the room of the pupil, Fernando Romero, were two extra suits of clothes and a pair of silk socks which the matron in charge said his father had sent him. Most all the pupils keep their clothes in individual lockers.

HEALTH

Doctor Lane, who resides at the school and cares for near-by pueblos, is in good professional standing, being a member of the Santa Fe County Medical Society and of the American Medical Association. The hospital is in an old building and accommodates 36 patients; it is clean and sanitary. A new building under construction as a hospital will accommodate 75 beds and will be open to the Indians of the pueblos as a general hospital. The old building will then be converted into domestic science and assembly quarters.

Doctor Lane and Miss Beckner, R. N., chief nurse, state that 42 cases of trachoma are now under treatment. The treatment outlined is that usually followed—grattage, silver nitrate, argyrol, etc. The doctor stated that the number of trachoma cases in the school had been reduced 25 per cent since the opening of school last fall. A conjunctivitis list is made out at the beginning of the term, he said. Only three trachoma cases were observed on casual inspection. The doctor stated that all cases have separate seats and books in school and that seats are cleaned regularly with lysol solution.

All pupils have their own towels and the supply is ample. The doctor said that one throat-tuberculosis case was found in the school last fall and sent to the hospital at Laguna. There have been no pulmonary cases, and there are no known tuberculars among the pupils now. Doctor Lane stated that all pupils are examined on admission and again during the school year, and that at any time children showing elevation of temperature are hospitalized for observation. The chief nurse said that hospital admissions average about 20 weekly for all causes, including observation.

During the recent influenza outbreak there were 300 cases in the school, with no pneumonias or deaths resulting, the doctor and nurse stated.

All washrooms are equipped with cabinets filled with clean towels. The towels are withdrawn from a slot in the bottom. Soiled towels are dropped through slots in the top into locked containers, which is a very good arrangement.

There are ample washing and bathing facilities for all. Washing is done only in running water. The matron states that each pupil is required to take a weekly bath, and may have one oftener if desired. Disciplinarian Robertson supervises the boys' baths. The water supply from the city of Santa Fe is of excellent sanitary quality and under regular State supervision. Sanitary drinking fountains were observed. Sewage disposal is through septic tanks. General cleanliness obtains throughout all quarters. We observed that the girls' toothbrushes are kept in individual slots in a glass case.

Disciplinarian and matron inspect all quarters daily and superintendent inspects quarters and departments once a month. Matron and disciplinarian inspect the bodies of all pupils weekly. Bedtime is 9.30 for older pupils and 7 for young ones.

A new, commodious, well-ventilated gymnasium has been completed recently.

DISCIPLINE

The superintendent and disciplinarian both stated that corporal punishment and jailing are not practiced and that pupils are never locked up.

Fernando Romero, a pupil, and the disciplinarian both confirmed a report of an encounter between them in which the disciplinarian slapped the pupil. They agreed that the punishment was aggravated by the insolence of Romero, who left school when finally asked whether or not he intended to obey the rules. He later returned voluntarily, although 21 years of age and therefore not required to stay. He says he likes the school and would rather stay there than go home; that he probably deserved the punishment. The disciplinarian says that Romero, one of the officers of the student body, is an exemplary pupil now in every respect. Romero said he knew of no other similar case of punishment, and never heard of any pupil being tied to a bed or locked up, since the present disciplinarian took charge.

FORCIBLE REMOVAL OF CHILDREN TO SCHOOL

The superintendent said that Indian parents prefer to have their younger children in the boarding school until they are old enough to herd goats or do other work, and related an incident of parents who left a 6-year-old girl at the school against his orders. The child had to be returned to her home by the school authorities, he said. He stated that only the agency superintendent has power to compel a child to go to the boarding school; and that on a trip to Puertecito and Cañoncito, N. Mex., to bring in pupils, he could have brought twice as many as the 50 he did bring, if he had listened to the pleas of the parents who insisted on sending them. The matron told of one girl who, she said, wanted to stay at the school during the summer because the work at home was too hard. The superintendent said day schools through the fourth grade are provided in the pueblos, and through the sixth grade at Taos, and that all will include the sixth grade this year or next, according to present plans.

LABOR

Apparently all the girls are employed in successive details in the laundry, sewing rooms, and kitchen. The superintendent says the system desired is for the pupil to give one-fourth of time to detail work and three-fourths to school. This is not yet true in all cases. The boys work in the dairy and shoe and tailor shops, on the farm, handling coal, carpentering, etc. The superintendent says the boys do small chores in the morning, work from 7.30 to 11.30 a. m., have half an hour for recreation before and after the noon meal, school from 1 to 4 p. m., and out at 4 for rest and recreation. The laundry is equipped with the latest machinery, which is well protected, and we saw no evidence of overwork among the girls here or in the sewing rooms. It is probably true that the girls do not receive much training in ordinary home laundry, excepting ironing. The pupils are robust in appearance and do not look as if they were overworked.

BOYS' DORMITORIES

Two dormitories are in use for the boys; one an old building, which is used only in part, the other new this year and fully modern in every respect. All rooms were inspected and found clean, well kept, and well ventilated. The greatest number in one room is 20, with good separation between beds. Not all the space in this building is yet required. We were told that it accommodates 212 pupils and now contains 168. Wash rooms and toilets were all found to be clean and adequate; there are ample reading rooms and locker rooms, rooms for storage of clothing, students' luggage, etc. The matron of this building said that 8,000 towels were bought for this dormitory alone. There are two commodious guest rooms. Occupants of small rooms accommodating two boys each are allowed to fix up the rooms to suit themselves. In one we observed pie and apples sent in by relatives of the boys.

GIRLS' DORMITORY

The girls' dormitory is an old building. The management of the school said requests for a new one had not yet been granted. Four glass-inclosed, well-ventilated, and not overcrowded sleeping porches have 28 to 36 beds each, with small sitting rooms opening off the porches. One room, about 33 by 40 feet in size, contains 35 beds, much too crowded, and the 7 windows in this room hardly give enough ventilation. Two other rooms about the same size contain 24 and 25 beds, respectively, with about the same ventilation as the 35-bed room; the ventilation may be sufficient for the smaller number of beds.

Fire escapes in this building, from the second floor, do not appear to be quickly accessible from all rooms, considering the crowded condition.

A small playroom in the basement of this building has two windows painted so that the light is insufficiently admitted; however, climatic conditions are such that children may play out of doors practically all winter. On the ground floor is a large recreation room, well furnished, with piano, and the matron says that after 4.30 p. m. the girls sing, dance, and play in this room daily.

GENERAL

The superintendent and employees welcomed the committee cordially and conducted it all over the place, with entire freedom of inspection and to question pupils privately.

Superintendent Smith informed the committee that about $225 per year is allowed for maintenance of each pupil; that the average enrollment is 500 and the present enrollment 550.

It will be clear that this report is based only on what the committee could observe in one full day's inspection and applies only to the Santa Fe Indian School.

YEARLY RECORD OF WEIGHTS OF PUPILS

(To be made part of permanent school record)

For the school term beginning 19— and ending 19—

_____School
(Name) (Day or boarding)

_____, Superintendent.

Each pupil must be accurately weighed at least once each month, and the weight recorded on this form. All who lose in weight, or whose weight remains stationary, should be referred to the physician for a thorough physical examination and further observation. The physician, after inspecting this record, should place his initials each month at the foot of the column in the place indicated

Hon. R. C. DILLON, Governor.
Dr. S. G. LUCKETT, Director of Public Health.
Hon. E. DANA JOHNSON, editor New Mexican, Santa Fe, N. Mex.

GENTLEMEN: Please allow me to express my deep appreciation for the expeditious and thorough manner in which you conducted the examination of the Indian school at Santa Fe to determine whether the facts stated by Miss Connelly in her article recently published in Good Housekeeping were true.

Your telegram under date of the 29th ultimo, as well as the report made on the 2d instant, reached me in due time. At my request, a similar investigation was conducted at the Indian school in Albuquerque. I understand it has been completed, but the report has not arrived. As soon as it reaches me I shall insert both reports in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and take occasion to make some observations on the floor of the Senate regarding the subject matter. It is my belief that we in New Mexico have just cause to deplore the obvious recklessness with which Miss Connelly wrote, so far as the two schools in question are concerned.

With renewed good wishes and kind personal regards to each of you, I am,

Cordially yours,

_____ _____.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
INDIAN FIELD SERVICE,
Zuni Agency, Zuni, N. Mex., February 5, 1929.

Hon. SAM G. BRATTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BRATTON: I am sending you an open letter with reference to that article by Vera L. Connelly in the Good Housekeeping Magazine which was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This letter is sent you, as I know you are very much interested in having a statement of the true conditions given for any of the Indian agencies or Indian reservations in New Mexico.

This reference to Zuni is so unfair that I have felt it my duty to answer this with a statement as to the actual conditions existing here. You are privileged to make any use of this letter you may wish.

Thanking you for your interest and assistance in all matters pertaining to the work here, I am,

Sincerely yours,

G. A. TROTTER, Superintendent.

[Inclosure]

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
INDIAN FIELD SERVICE,
Zuni Agency, Zuni, N. Mex., February 5, 1929.

Senator SAM G. BRATTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BRATTON: Appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 26, 1929, is the article of Vera L. Connelly, from the Good Housekeeping Magazine entitled "The Cry of a Broken People." The following paragraph from the article has reference to Zuni conditions: "At Zuni, in the home of the pueblo governor, while I listened to a story of contaminated drinking water, dysentery, and a reservation doctor who would not pay visits to sick Indians, I saw a young mother anxiously looking into the face of the terribly sick baby in her arms. The child was covered with a scabby disease." Such a statement is eminently unfair as the writer could have investigated and found that the river contamination had been corrected by the construction of sewer lines and septic tanks; that a deep well had been drilled, which although inadequate for all domestic purposes of the Indians, affords much more water than they use, and that plans were being made for the drilling of another deep well at Zuni. The pueblo governor, perhaps, failed to point out to this writer an $8,000 bathhouse with hot and cold water, where as many as 300 adult Indians avail themselves of the opportunity of taking free baths weekly, and where every encouragement is offered all the Indians of the pueblo to make use of this privilege. The pueblo governor, perhaps, failed to inform the writer that the agency physician had a dispensary in the village to which he makes trips every morning, and from there drives over the village calling upon the sick, and volunteering his services—which are more often refused than accepted—in a village where about 1 in 5 is a medicine man or medicine woman. The governor might have informed her that there were six telephones in different parts of the village, all connected with the physician's office, and that this governor had been instructed to advise all of the Zunis that a call at any time during the day or night would receive immediate attention.

The governor surely failed to tell this woman of Miss Duggan, the field nurse of the eastern association, a conscientious, tireless worker who lives among the Zunis, and spends her time in house to house visitations for their relief. By inquiry, she could have found that the scabby disease she noted in her visit is caused by the mother—it may be by direction of a medicine woman—placing wood ashes on the face of her new-born child, and that the physician and field nurse are making every effort to stop this custom. If this writer had but looked out from the limousine in which it is supposed she made the trip to Zuni, she would have seen many of these "broken people" riding in their own automobiles. Had she inquired as to their destination, they might have advised her that they were looking after some of the 40,000 sheep owned by them, or were harvesting their crops of corn, wheat, alfalfa, or garden produce—made possible by an expenditure of $280,758, the initial cost of an irrigation dam constructed for them by a generous Government.

She surely could have inquired of the pueblo governor about the school facilities afforded the poor Zunis. She could have looked over the sanatorium school where 80 undeveloped and undernourished Zuni children receive proper food and care, and where in less than 3 per cent of the cases, after three months' care, may leave the institution overweight. If she had cared to inquire with reference to the cost of this school, she would have been advised that more than $60,000 had been expended in converting the boarding school plant into a sanatorium, and that the meals for the institution were costing more than three times the 11 cents per day "hokum" she mentions in this article. While at the governor's home, if she had looked to the north, she would have seen one of the best-equipped day school plants in the service, where more money has been expended by the Government for the betterment of the Indian than these so-called "uplifters" ever have, or ever will expend for this purpose. Across the fence from this Government day school is the Catholic Indian School, representing an expenditure of $40,000, while just to the south of the river the Christian Reformed Society has expended an equal amount upon a school and hospital, and where adult Indians may receive hospitalization under a trained nurse when they can be persuaded to go there. If all of this article as truthfully portrays conditions on other reservations as at Zuni, it certainly reflects great credit upon the magazine which published it. * * *

Very truly yours,

G. A. TROTTER, Superintendent.

FEBRUARY 9, 1929.

Mr. G. A. TROTTER,
Zuni, N. Mex.

DEAR MR. TROTTER: I thank you very much for your letter under date of the 5th instant, respecting the article written by Vera L. Connelly, entitled "The Cry of a Broken People," which was published in the current issue of Good Housekeeping Magazine and inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the 26th of last month.

At my request investigations have been made of the Indian schools at Albuquerque and Santa Fe. A report upon the Santa Fe school is on my desk. I am awaiting the one from Albuquerque. Your letter, containing valuable data in regard to the Zuni situation, will be very helpful. I desire to secure all possible relevant data. Acting upon the permission given I shall make appropriate use of your letter.

With personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX., February 11, 1929.

Hon. E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with your recent telegrams to Supt. Reuben Perry and also to Supt. Lem A. Towers, of the Indian pueblos, the following persons were named on a committee to investigate the conditions of the Albuquerque Indian school and Indian day schools and pueblos. Personnel of the committee:

Hon. Clyde Tingley, mayor of the city of Albuquerque, N. Mex., chairman.

Mrs. George Ruoff, president New Mexico Federated Women's Clubs.

Mrs. Max Nordhaus, chairman of the Indian welfare committee of the New Mexico Federated Women's Clubs.

J. R. Guild, post commander of the Hugh A. Carlisle Post, No. 13, of the American Legion.

Dr. James R. Scott, county health officer of Bernalillo County, N. Mex.

M. E. Hickey, former judge of the district court of Bernalillo County, N. Mex.

Your committee held meetings on six different days. It had before it for interrogation 11 employees, including the superintendent, 4 persons not employees, and 27 pupils. Statements made by these persons have been transcribed into the record and are submitted herewith, together with this, your committee's report.

While your committee investigated generally, it stressed particularly the following questions:

(a) Food: To see if the pupils really go hungry.

(b) Clothing: To see if pupils have enough clothing for comfort.

(c) Punishment: To see if the punishment inflicted upon the pupil is in a cruel and inhuman manner.

(d) Health: To see if pupils received adequate medical care.

Your committee personally inspected the school, school rooms, dormitories, laundry, hospital, kitchen, and dining room, and reports them all in good condition and well managed.

FIRST, AS TO THE QUESTION OF FOOD

We found on file in the office at the school copies of menus from 1924 down to the present time, and introduced several of the menus into the record, and especially all menus for the month of March, 1927.

There is a system in vogue at the school of weighing all pupils when they enter the school and then every month thereafter. If any are underweight, that pupil gets a special diet under the direction of the school doctor.

One boy stated that he does not get enough to eat; at the same time his weight shows that in November, when he entered the school, he weighed 132¾ pounds, in December he weighed 136 pounds, and on February 7, 1929, he weighed 134 pounds. On February 5, he stated to the committee that his last weight, taken only a short time previous, was 130 pounds. The difference between 130 pounds—his weight, according to his statement taken a short time before February 5—and 134 pounds, his weight taken February 7, shows a considerable improvement in weight in a very short time, to say the least.

The weight records show an increase in weight of practically all pupils during the first three or four months after entering school in the fall.

Statements of both employees and pupils convince your committee that no pupils ever need go from the dining room hungry—good food is there and may be had for the asking.

From the statements cited and from other statements in the record forwarded herewith—especially the statements of the Rev. M. F. Cronin, a Catholic priest, and the Rev. Thomas D. New, a Baptist preacher—your committee unanimously and unhesitatingly finds, and so reports, that the pupils of the Albuquerque Indian School have enough to eat at all times.

SECOND, AS TO THE QUESTION OF CLOTHING

Your committee also reports that the pupils have enough clothing and bed clothing to keep them comfortable in all kinds of weather.

THIRD, AS TO THE QUESTION OF PUNISHMENT

While the committee was making its investigation word from an anonymous source was received to the effect that certain boys were severely punished by the disciplinarian on the 5th day of November, 1928. We followed the matter up by having those certain boys appear before us, and from their statements and also from the statements of the disciplinarian himself your committee finds that seven or eight boys were paddled on the naked flesh with the rubber sole of a hospital slipper.

Your committee can see that these boys may have "ganged up" to break the rules and have often left the grounds without permission to attend dances and that a few of them were drunk at different times, and had thus sorely taxed the patience of the school authorities, for said authorities seemed to have exhausted practically every means at their command for controllong this group of boys; your committee believes that a severe punishment was justly their due, but we can not approve of humiliating said boys in the way it was done in this isolated case. Your committee wishes to state further this is the only instance it was able to find where such punishment was ever inflicted.

Your committee asked for a statement from Mrs. Hickson, the head matron, regarding punishment of girls and also discussed that question with some of the girls, and reports that it has no criticism whatever to give of punishment inflicted upon girls, but commends the treatment received by the girls from Mrs. Hickson and other matrons.

FOURTH, AS TO THE QUESTION OF HEALTH

From a personal inspection of the hospital and the testimony of Doctor Richard, the school physician, and other employees your committee is convinced that the health of the pupils is carefully guarded and there is splendid and adequate supervision in this matter.

The two copies of bulletins of the American Indian Defense Association (Inc.) at the last of the records submitted herewith were put in as part of Superintendent Perry's statement to the committee.

Your committee wishes to state further that neither Mr. Perry nor any other employees other than the stenographer was present at any of the hearings of the committee and no pupil or employee was required to make a statement in his presence.

Your committee reports further that on the 31st day of January, 1928, it held a meeting in the living room of the girls' building at the Albuquerque Indian School with the governors, lieutenant governors, and interpreters of the pueblos of Laguna, Acoma, San Felipe, Santa Ana, Zia, Jemez, Sandia, and Isleta; there were 23 persons who made statements to your committee at this meeting where representatives of every pueblo were heard. We inquired particularly of these representatives as to their flocks, Government schools, teachers, doctors, nurses, and school buildings; we went further and asked if they, the representatives of said pueblo, had ever heard complaints against the Albuquerque Indian School made by pupils of that school or by the parents of such pupils.

One pueblo, that of San Felipe, complains about the condition of the bridge across the Rio Grande. Superintendent Towers stated that a requisition had already been made for funds to fix it.

The Sandia representative stated that they had recently—about two weeks ago—asked for a school building for that pueblo. Superintendent Towers stated that he had already recommended the building of the schoolhouse to the Indian Office and had asked authority to condemn a site.

Aside from the request for the repairs for bridge and the building of schoolhouse, your committee elicited nothing but praise from the governors, lieutenant governors, and other representatives of said pueblos.

Mrs. Reeble, a nurse at Jemez, employed by the New Mexico Association of Indian Affairs, made statements to the committee which shows conclusively close cooperation between her in the work she is doing and the Albuquerque School and also of the close cooperation and help rendered her by the school doctor and nurse.

Your committee finds that there is no dissatisfaction on the part of any of the pueblos with the treatment they are receiving from the Government, but, on the other hand, that there is much of commendation of the Government's work by said pueblos, and we respectfully cite statements of all those who came before the committee for your careful consideration.

Respectfully submitted.

Hon. SAM G. BRATTON,

United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I inclose herewith a report which we have been requested to submit to the respective chairmen of the Indian Affairs Committees of both Houses and to our delegation in Washington, with reference to the inspection that was made by the committee signing this report of the school, hospital, and sanatorium at Fort Defiance, Ariz.

I can truthfully say that there is no attempt made by this committee to "whitewash" the school or any of its affairs. We merely give the facts as they were apparent to us. Mrs. Brock is county school superintendent of McKinley County and is thoroughly familiar with school affairs. Mr. Bickel, as you personally know, is president of the W. M. Bickel Co., Indian traders, knows the Navajo for over 20 years, and his thoughts and condition. Mr. Bickel is also a member of the municipal school board of the town of Gallup. This is not the first inspection of this type that I have made, because during the year 1923, as Democratic floor leader of the State senate and a member of the finance committee, we made a number of trips of inspection through the various State institutions. Ordinarily a school or institution is "dressed up" for an inspection of this type, but the Fort Defiance school was not ready for this occasion, and was conducting its affairs in the usual manner.

The deplorable thing of the entire situation is that we are trying to civilize a nomadic, pastoral Navajo; bringing him up to the twentieth century civilized American, which may seem hopeless. He is given a meager education, or training in some industrial occupation, and then turned loose to go back to the hogan and the reservation and its blanket. The Government gives them some assistance after they leave school, but the assistance he receives is not the kind that is necessary to absorb him into public life or to push him into the world and meet the competition of the world, which would be far better training than taking him into the schools and then sending him back to the mountains or valleys on the reservation.

As I have written to you before, the urgent need is contact by the Indian with the rest of the world that requires primarily the establishment of employment agencies near the reservation so that employers of labor could go to this agency and employ Indians and the agency could furnish the employer with the Indians that he requires.

The Pueblo Indian, like the Laguna, is years ahead of the nomadic Navajo, due probably to his centralized life and domestication, but is no better workman than the Navajo. Here, we find, for example, the Santa Fe Railroad employs a number of Lagunas in its shops and roundhouses and is apparently satisfied with this type of labor. Other employers of labor say that the Navajo is a good workman, easy to handle, and when he is on the job the employer has no care with reference to housing his employee.

If the Government would establish a labor agency so that the Navajo, when he leaves either the reservation or the school, could find employment, and not be compelled to return to the reservation, it would accomplish more for the Navajo Indian than John Collier's Indian Defense Society ever will.

With kindest personal regards and hoping to see you in New Mexico soon after March 4, I am,

Yours very truly,

A. L. ZINN.

To the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs; to the Chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs; to Hon. S. G. Bratton, Hon. Bronson Cutting, Senators, and Hon. A. G. Simms, Congressman from New Mexico, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, were requested to serve as a committee by the officials in charge of the sanatorium, school, and hospital at Fort Defiance, State of Arizona, for the purpose of investigating the true conditions of affairs at this school, sanatorium, and hospital, and more especially with reference to the food, clothing, and treatment accorded to the children and other inmates at this school, sanatorium, and hospital.

This committee left Gallup Monday morning, February 11, 1929, and arrived at Fort Defiance for the purpose of making this investigation at 11.45 a. m. We were escorted through the main dining room immediately after 12 o'clock, at which time the children were eating their noonday meal. We found that there are at the present time 492 children. Each and every one of these are trachoma patients. This school being solely at the present time a trachoma school, which disease is prevalent among the Navajo Indians. The children at this school are sent from all parts of the Navajo Reservation and not confined exclusively to the southern jurisdiction. Other than the Navajos, we found there two Hopi and one Laguna Indian, making this exclusively a Navajo school, however.

We discovered the menu, which is hereto attached and made a part of this report, and which menu was prepared by the domestic-science teacher at the school on the Wednesday prior to our visit, and is submitted to the cook on the Friday prior to our visit for the week ensuing the preparation of said menu. The food that was served at the noonday meal to the children conformed to the menu outlined. We can state that the school was not "dressed" for our visit, and the meal was prepared according to the menu and not because of our expected visit, inasmuch as the menu was prepared without the expectation of our visit and the cook was not informed of our coming until the evening before we arrived. We found all the children sufficiently nourished and apparently progressing in physical strength considering their condition. Those that were underweight were kept at a separate table on a special diet, a copy of which special menu is hereto attached and made a part of this report. The children that were underweight were, in addition to being put on the separate diet, required to take an afternoon nap or rest, and we found them in their respective dormitories in the afternoon taking the required rest. We also found that the children had ample food and were permitted to eat all they reasonably care for.

An examination of the dormitories showed them to be clean and well kept, well lighted, with plenty of sunshine and properly ventilated. We also found that each bed was equipped with from three to five woolen blankets. The rooms were properly heated and on the day we were there it was one of the coldest days that this section has experienced, and no one complained of the lack of either covers at night or sufficient heat to keep them warm during all times they were in the dormitories.

We found that the children who were in the first three grades were not required to do any detail work with the exception of errands. The children of the upper grades, that is the fourth, fifth, and sixth grades, were assigned to detail duties. During the morning they were in the academic classrooms and in the afternoon in the industrial classrooms. The girls were instructed in domestic science, including sewing, mending, and the proper care of the home, and the boys were designated to work in the shoe and harness shop where they learned that trade, and in the carpenter work, farming, and some work in the laundry.

Here a digression should be made to state that the children were assigned to work which was in conformity with their physical capacity, inasmuch as most of these children in the fourth, fifth, and sixth grades are between the ages of 14 and 15 years.

The sanatorium, where the tuberculosis patients were kept, was exceptionally well suited with reference to sunshine and ventilation. All patients were well taken care of, and had their own kitchen, dining room, and the place was exceptionally clean.

The hospital contained 30 cots, and during our visit there were 36 patients in the hospital, which made the same crowded. The place was clean and apparently all patients were being well taken care of.

There is a new hospital just being completed at a cost of upwards of $50,000, which is a model of its kind, being exceptionally well built, and the large wards, as well as the small ones, are well ventilated, and when the furniture is installed and all equipment in place it will probably accommodate all that the institution ought to care for for a number of years.

This post attracts Navajos from all parts of the reservation and many come there for treatment who might well go to some hospital nearer their particular residence, but they prefer to come to Fort Defiance for treatment.

During the fiscal year ending June, 1928, there were 5,210 people, including the pupils in school, who were examined for trachoma at this post, and 2,338 of these were found positive. Including the trachoma examinations there were 19,386 patients given dispensary treatment or out-patient treatment during that year. The total number of Navajos within this particular jurisdiction are estimated at 12,852. The great number of examinations are due to the fact that the Indians from other jurisdictions come to this particular post for medical examinations and dispensary treatment.

The amount allotted to this particular jurisdiction for this fiscal year is $750,000, and an estimate is made by the officials that the amount expended for food per pupil is 42 cents. This expenditure, of course, is based upon the total cost, which includes the cost of hauling and freighting food from the nearest point of shipment, which is Gallup, N. Mex.

We are informed that the per capita expenditure for food at this point is greater than at other schools, due to the cost of the above-mentioned hauling and freighting.

Two members of your committee are officials in school work; that is, Mrs. Brock, one member, is the county school superintendent of McKinley County, N. Mex., and Mr. Bickel, one of the undersigned, is a member of the municipal school board at Gallup, N. Mex. The total number of children in the county schools of McKinley County is approximately 1,200, and the total expenditure for maintenance of the county schools is approximately $80,000. Of the $750,000 allotted to the Fort Defiance jurisdiction, approximately $110,000 is spent for the education and care of less than 500 Indian pupils. This is merely given as a comparative cost for the committee to draw its own conclusions.

We found that the Indian children were apparently happy and satisfied; in fact, more satisfied at the school than on the reservation; that they were given treatment equal to any other school of like type within the knowledge of the members of this committee. We found that all of the children were well and comfortably clothed. We found from statements of the officials and conversation with others, that none of the children were overworked or in any way suffered physical punishments. We found that the discipline was maintained not through corporal punishment but by depriving the culpable of certain social privileges.

Two members of your committee know the Navajo Indians, their tribal customs and mode of living for more than 20 years, and one member for approximately 4 years, and, with such knowledge of their environment and capacity to receive education and training, believe that the school at Fort Defiance is well managed, properly conducted, and that the care and treatment of these children is far superior to the treatment and care accorded to many others in like condition.

The statistical reports are in the file of the Indian Bureau, where the amount expended and the number of children administered to and cared for can be obtained by the committee, from which they can draw their own conclusions.

We would recommend that milk and eggs be provided in sufficient quantities for the children if a qualified dietician recommends it. It is not the amount of food that should be taken into consideration by the committee, as the question of the proper food sufficient to keep these children in a healthy condition, to be recommended by some responsible dietician, considering the origin and life of these children. The Navajos are not accustomed to milk from cows. They are accustomed to goat milk, and the meat they prefer is mutton, but that is not for the determination of this committee. The same might be said of the necessity of eggs for the children.

A great many of the employees in charge of the children are Indians, not necessarily of the same tride as the children, but nevertheless either full or part Indian blood, and have an understanding of their own people superior to the white man.

Respectfully submitted.

MRS. H. F. BROCK.

GALLUP, N. MEX., February 12, 1929.

COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Upon request of Mr. Oscar B. Berkness, the senior clerk of the Eastern Navajo School at Crownpoint, N. Mex., the undersigned committee, all of whom reside in Gallup, made an inspection of the Eastern Navajo Indian schools on February 11, 1929, and were requested to submit a report of this inspection not later than February 12. The principal features to be investigated were the food and clothing furnished the children and the condition of the dormitories and school as a whole.

We visited the school on Monday, February 11, arriving there at about noon. In the absence of Mr. Samuel F. Stacher, the superintendent, Mr. Berkness took us in charge, and we witnessed the students of the institution at their noonday meal. At the present time there are 360 pupils enrolled, of which number 335 reported for dinner. The dining room was in charge of the disciplinarian, Mr. Juan M. Herrera, and Miss Annie Weber, matron of the dining room. The dining room is equipped with small tables, six children sitting at each. The meal consisted of roast beef, steamed carrots, hominy, boiled potatoes, raw onions, hot rolls, and chocolate pudding. A period of 20 minutes was allowed for the meal, and by talking with a number of the pupils and watching them at this meal it is very evident that they enjoy their food, which seemed to be well cooked and prepared, and they had plenty of it, as there was food left at all of the tables when the meal was finished.

In entering and leaving the dining room, the students marched in companies and were very orderly in entering and leaving the dining room as well as during the meal. Two adults were also there, having come from the reservation to visit their children. This seems to be permitted and as the parents are allowed to visit their children at any time that it does not interfere with students' duties, they seem to take advantage of the privilege and generally arrive during the middle of the day and are given their lunch without charge.

The dining room is about 35 by 100 feet, well lighted and ventilated.

After the children left the dining room, those who were detailed to clear the tables did so in a very orderly manner in not to exceed 10 minutes. These students take the dishes and have them scraped and stacked on a table from which the dishwashers take same. They are washed thoroughly with hot, soapy water and rinsed in hot, clear water. They are then taken from this water, placed on a table, from which the dining room girls take the dishes and dry them with a clean tea towel. No tea towel is used more than once without being washed. After the dishes are dried, the tables are set in uniform order. Floors are swept and polished each morning, the floor being oiled once a week. Windows are washed once a week, walls are brushed down, and window shades are also dusted weekly. The windows of the dining room are lowered from the top and raised from the bottom before each meal.

The following is the menu for the week commencing February 11:

Monday

Breakfast: Oatmeal and milk, sirup, bread, cereal, and coffee.
Dinner: Boiled beef and gravy, raw onions, creamed carrots, chocolate pudding, bread, and water.
Supper: Hash, fruit, fried potatoes, corn bread, and water.

Tuesday

Breakfast: Rice and milk, hash, sirup, bread, and coffee.
Dinner: Roast beef and brown potatoes, creamed onions, pickled beets, rice pudding, bread, and water.
Supper: Fried hominy, peach dumplings, bread, and water.

Wednesday

Breakfast: Bacon, gravy, sirup, bread, and water.

Dinner: Boiled mutton and vegetables, boiled potatoes, and raw onions.

Supper: Macaroni, stew, prunes, bread, ginger cake, and water.

Thursday

Breakfast: Oatmeal and milk, prunes, meat hash, bread, and cocoa.

Dinner: Roast mutton and gravy, baked potatoes, raw carrots, pudding, corn bread, and water.

Supper: Boiled hominy and milk, fruit, cake, bread, and water.

Friday

Breakfast: Corn-meal mush, fried potatoes, sirup, bread, cereal, and coffee.

Dinner: Swiss steak and gravy, brown potatoes, raw carrots, creamed cabbage, tapioca pudding, bread, and water.

Supper: Bacon and beans, stewed apples, tomatoes, bread, and water.

Saturday

Breakfast: Oatmeal and mush, bacon, gravy, sirup, bread, cereal, and coffee.

Dinner: Boiled vegetable dinner, rice pudding, creamed cabbage, raw onions, bread, and water.

Supper: Potatoes, soup, crackers, prunes, bread, and water.

Sunday

Breakfast: Cereal, sirup, bread, and cocoa.

Dinner: Roast beef and brown gravy, mashed potatoes, cabbage slaw, corn, stewed peaches, bread, and water.

Supper: Left overs, fruit, bread, cake, and coffee.

The cooking is done by Mrs. Purns, who is a member of the Oneida Tribe, of Wisconsin, and who is a graduate from the Carlisle Indian School. She is assisted by boys from the Indian school, five helping in the mornings and five in the afternoons. These boys are on duty for five weeks, after which time other boys are used alternately in this service. Mrs. Purns does all of the cooking with the exception of the baking. The bakeshop is adjacent to the kitchen, and we found it in immaculate condition and in charge of Mr. Ance, who is a Haskell graduate. He has as assistants one boy in the morning and one in the afternoon. These boys work alternately in order to interfere with the school work as little as possible.

All refuse left from the kitchen is given to the poultry department or fed to the hogs, a number of which are being raised.

The kitchen was found to be in very much the same condition as the dining room and bakery, which were immaculate and which is the usual condition, as those in charge were given no intimation of our visit. Electrical equipment, including cookers, bread cutting and dishwashing machines, is used.

In the absence of a dairy, canned milk is used to the amount of practically six cases per week, milk being used principally for breakfast foods in the mornings.

The flour and cornmeal bins were found to be beyond criticism.

All of the five dormitories were inspected. They were not equipped with steam heat, but a new central heating plant is now being installed, which will be equipped with two 150 horsepower marine boilers, and should be adequate to heat all of the buildings at the institution. The plant is practically completed and should be ready for service not later than the 20th of this month.

In the No. 4 dormitory we noted 68 beds, size 38 inches by 72 inches, each equipped with cotton-pad mattress, two sheets, and 5 single blankets. A steel locker is furnished for each pupil. Dormitory is furnished with two Ebbinger wash fountains adjusted to size of pupils. Each basin will accommodate 10 pupils and is equipped with liquid soap, hot and cold water. There are five toilets and six shower baths.

The hospital building is fairly well equipped and contains 32 beds. There were only four patients in the hospital at the time of our visit. These were suffering from trachoma, but evidently were receiving the best of care and attention. During the epidemic of influenza which prevailed in this section recently, 240 of the pupils were affected, 126 of them being confined to their beds at one time. Of this number there was one death, resulting from pneumonia, no doubt the after effects of the influenza. This is a very good record compared to other localities that had epidemic recently and it is very evident that the students had the best of medical attention and treatment.

All of the schoolrooms were visited and were found to be well heated and fairly well ventilated, and both the teachers and students seemed to be very much interested in their work. The kindergarten was especially interesting, as from the conduct of the youngsters it is very evident that they are not intimidated in any way and have the same, or even more privileges than those attending kindergartens in other localities.

The disciplinarian seems to be a man of very good judgment, and from all that we could learn the pupils are not compelled to undergo any particular hardships when breaking any of the institution's rules. Those who run away from school are brought back and are made to walk around the campus the number of times that it would require to cover the same distance at which they were found from the school. In more severe cases the pupils are taken to Mr. Stacher, the superintendent, who uses more drastic methods, but it is reported that children are never struck or abused by any of the teachers or officials in charge.

Each child is weighed once each month and a record of such weight is kept on a form provided for same. We were supplied with the record covering the period from September to February, and in studying these records we find that in the last six months the students averaged a gain in weight of about 8 pounds. We were informed that any of the children who appeared to be undernourished were given a light lunch at recess in the morning and afternoon, which lunch consists of cocoa and crackers and raisin bread, etc.

While our investigation was rather hurried, it is very evident that those in charge, as well as the entire staff, are making a sincere effort to make conditions as pleasant as possible for all students, with the intent of improving them both mentally and physically to the greatest possible degree.

The general appearance of the students indicates that they are happy and in splendid physical condition, with the exception of those suffering from trachoma. As a suggestion we hope that at some time in the near future it will be possible to isolate those who have contracted this disease in order to reduce the spreading of same to a minimum.

Respectfully submitted.

DULCE, N. MEX., February 9, 1929.

To the Senate Committee, the House Indian Committee, the Congressional Delegation, and the Indian Office.

GENTLEMEN: In compliance with the request of Supt. C. A. Gossett, of the Jicarilla Indian Agency, the undersigned citizens of Dulce and vicinity here made investigation of the Southern Mountain Sanatorium School of this place, and wish to submit the following report:

The committee began investigation on the afternoon of February 8, 1929, at the sanatorium school, where there are 87 Jicarilla Apache Indian children of scholastic age receiving sanatorium treatment and school training.

To give you our impressions just as they were registered in our minds, we would say that we found, first of all, a group of happy children who gave us that hearty greeting and joyous reception that indicates a spontaneous feeling of contentment, for which there must be a justification.

Their free and easy manners, showing release of a perfectly normal and childlike enthusiasm toward all of our approaches, convinced us that unusual thought has been given to the spirit or morale of the institution.

We arrived prior to their evening meal which was served in our presence, which had been unannounced, and we found an extremely nourishing diet placed before them.

We found all buildings comfortable, and exceptionally sanitary; with conveniences superior to the average homes of the white citizens of our land. It was revealed upon investigation that no corporal punishment is administered, which is thoroughly consistent with the happy demeanor of the children, and our opinion that all methods used are of a very gentle and persuasive nature.

We have never witnessed a more pleasing and impressive piece of altruistic work among any people than is being done for these Indian children under the direction of Supt. C. A. Gossett, ably assisted by Dr. H. M. Cornell, one of the most capable physicians and surgeons of this section, and the various employees whose appearance and contact with the children show that loving reaction from them which can only mean that they are receiving the very best of care for body, mind, and spirit.

The children are all in splendid flesh and are being given not only this general treatment but receive careful individual attention in any emergency that might arise in any home.

Upon the second day of our investigation we returned to the school where inspection was made of every department. We found, as on the evening before, each department in a most attractive and cleanly order. The food was being prepared for the noon meal, of which we ate, and with the utmost delicacy and care; food well cooked with modern appliances and a well-balanced ration, of which there was plenty.

We wish to advise you that the success and well-being of this unit is obvious even to the casual observer, and upon investigation we find that in numerous details the general and personal welfare of the children is being pursued with a vigilance and effectiveness that makes the institution a credit, not only to the United States Indian Service, but to our Nation as well.

Hon. SAM G. BRATTON,

DEAR SIR: At the request of the Indian Office I inclose herewith a report of the committee which was appointed to inspect the Indian boarding schools at this agency.

Very truly yours,

B. P. SIX, Superintendent.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO INSPECT SAN JUAN INDIAN SCHOOLS NOS. 1 AND 2, NORTHERN NAVAJO AGENCY

(Members of committee: Mr. C. C. Mumma, was member of school board of Farmington for eight years; Mrs. H. B. Sammons, president of the First National Bank of Farmington; Mr. Elmer F. Taylor, president of the board of county commissioners, San Juan County, and president Young Stake Latter Day Saints' Church)

NORTHERN NAVAJO AGENCY,
SHIPROCK, N. MEX., February 11, 1929.

COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In response to letter dated February 2, 1929, directed to the superintendent of the Northern Navajo Indian Agency at Shiprock, N. Mex., requesting a thorough investigation of San Juan Schools Nos. 1 and 2, we, the committee, make the following report: The committee understands that it was especially desired that we investigate in the matter of the children of the boarding school being properly fed, clothed, and housed; that we investigate the medical attention given to them and the discipline of the school. We therefore confine our report to the following topics:

(1) Food and clothing.
(2) Housing.
(3) School instruction.
(4) Recreation.
(5) Medical attention.
(6) Discipline.

FOOD AND CLOTHING

We visited the kitchens and found them in a sanitary condition. The floors were clean, the cupboards neat and clean. The ingredients of the food were wholesome and the food suitable for growing children and properly prepared.

We visited the dining hall during the noon hour, and we found there was plenty of food for each child. Those who cared for a second serving received the same. All the children looked well nourished and in good physical condition. The attached menu sheets evidence the kind of food and the meals prepared since January 1, 1929, which are typical of the regular meals served. We verified the fact that this menu was followed, and we saw copies posted in the kitchens for the guidance of the cooks. In addition to the regular meals being served, any child desiring a lunch at recess in the morning and at recess in the afternoon is encouraged to go to the kitchen and be served a lunch. We consider the children well fed. We find that these children are supplied with from 70 to 80 gallons of milk per day and with fresh vegetables which are grown on the farm throughout the year.

We visited the storehouses, which contained ample supplies well arranged and properly cared for. We saw quantities of canned fruit which were put up by the children and the employees at the school.

Summarizing the matter of food, we unhesitatingly say that the supply and the nature of the food were entirely adequate for the health and growth of the children.

From observation the children all seem to be well clothed.

We visited the sewing room where we found the children making their own clothing, repairing their clothing, and mending stockings.

We found children mending their own shoes in the shoe shop.

We also visited the laundry and noticed that no girls were working in that place. We also noted that the laundry machinery appeared to be old and inadequate. Inquiry revealed the fact that this laundry machinery was purchased originally for a school of 200 pupils and that it is now doing the laundry work for approximately 400 pupils.

The children were warmly clad and suitably dressed. We questioned many children regarding the conditions of food and clothing and found a universal expression that they were well fed and well clothed. Inquiries made among children and adults at the school and agency failed to reveal a single complaint in this regard.

HOUSING

The sleeping rooms were large and airy and sunny. Each of the dormitories is accessible to sunlight at some time during the day. We found the beds clean, mattresses neat, and the dormitories are in no way overcrowded.

SCHOOL INSTRUCTION

We visited each schoolroom, covering to and including the sixth grade. We found the method of instruction and the subjects taught practically the same as taught in the schools for the white children. The committee had prepared itself with a schedule of subjects taught in each of the different grades in the schools for the white children, and found that these grades were practically the same. We found that the children were more advanced in years in the grades, but their understanding of their work in each grade compared very favorably with that of the white children. The children seemed interested, and the discipline was especially remarkable, exceeding that of the average public school.

The schoolrooms were especially well lighted and ventilated, and the instructors seemed interested in their work and seemed to take a genuine interest in the pupils. The instructors, as a whole, compare very favorably with the efficiency and ability of the teachers in the public schools in this community.

RECREATION

The committee was especially pleased to find that the recreation for the children was amply provided for. There are two large recreation halls for games and general amusement. The grounds are provided with swings and slides. During recess time and after school we found the children playing marbles, ball, and all the games that the average child is interested in. We believe these children are genuinely happy, both in their work and in their play. In addition to their recreation halls, there are provided for the children well-furnished sitting rooms. On the floors of the sitting rooms were nice Navajo blankets made by the school children and their instructors. These sitting rooms were equipped with musical instruments and provided with comfortable chairs.

These children have basketball and baseball teams and frequently compete with the teams of the schools in this section.

MEDICAL ATTENTION

Of all the departments visited, the committee found the greatest need for improvement was along the line of medical attention. This need arises from the fact that the medical force is overworked, and it is impossible to give proper attention to the demands on their time, considering the number of the pupils and the radius of the field. At the present time, the local physician is supposed to take care of the two schools, having an attendance of 400 pupils, a hospital of 60-bed capacity, and the medical needs of reservation Indians over a radius of 100 miles. There is a crying need for a doctor whose time shall be given exclusively to field work. The hospital should also be furnished with a night nurse. We found the children suffering with trachoma segregated and the doctor properly treating every pupil every day for this trouble.

We found a few tents located away from the hospital for tubercular patients, but entirely inadequate to the need.

The committee personally knows of physicians who have practically given their lives to the medical work at this school and agency, but it is the opinion of the committee that it is not possible for any one physician to do justice to this field, as the scope is too large and the number to be cared for too great.

We found that the children were weighed upon entering school and once a month thereafter and a chart or record kept in each schoolroom as to the findings of same. Whenever a child is found underweight, the attention of the physician is called. The general condition of the children seemed to be that the weight was normal or above for those who had been in school for a considerable time. We found several of the children underweight who had just recently been brought in from the reservation.

The details of personal cleanliness are not overlooked, as evidenced by toothbrush drills, shower baths, individual brushes and combs, and neatly kept lockers.

DISCIPLINE

From reliable investigation which we made, we were unable to find where any child was unjustly punished or placed under improper discipline. Discipline had as its main object industry, and this was noted both at work and play.

The discipline in the schoolroom was particularly good, the children being very respectful and well behaved. The committee also noted that during school hours every child was in his proper place in school and not loitering on the school grounds. The committee would be very much pleased if they could state that the same discipline that they found on visiting this school was maintained in the white schools of San Juan County.

In conclusion, we, the committee, make the following recommendations:

(1) We recommend new equipment for the laundry, as the present machinery is old and inadequate.

(2) We recommend the extension of the lighting service from Farmington to this school, so that the hospital could be furnished with 24-hour service, and so that a great deal of the machinery at the school could be electrically operated.

(3) We recommend that a night nurse be added to the present hospital force.

(4) We recommend that an additional physician for field work be added to the present force.

(5) We recommend that a tubercular sanatorium be provided for the reservation Indians.

In closing this report, this committee can not refrain from adding that each and every member has known this school intimately from the date of its inception to the present time. We have watched its growth closely; we have personally and intimately known its superintendents and can conscientiously say that this school stands high in our estimation from the standpoint of real service to the Navajo Indian—educational, physical, commercial, and financial. The superintendents have had at all times the interests of the Navajo at heart and the school to-day reflects their efforts.

Very respectfully,

C. C. MUMMA.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRATTON. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Directly I am much interested in the Indian schools as to one phase of them only. It seems to me to be indefensible to take children 8 or 9 years of age away from their parents and transport them 100 or 150 miles and keep them through all the formative years in schools. Does the Senator agree with me or does he not?

Mr. BRATTON. I disagree with the Senator from Arkansas about that matter. I believe that it not only contributes to the rapid development of the Indians into the fabric of American civilization to take them from the reservation during the formative period and keep them in well-conducted schools, but it is conducive to their improvement physically as well as morally and intellectually.

Mr. CARAWAY. What impresses me is that the mothers of these children love their children and the children love their mothers just as if they were not Indians. I think it is so inhuman that I can not make up my mind that civilization ought to be priced so high.

Mr. BRATTON. I do not assume to speak in regard to conditions in other States, but in my own State instead of taking the children from their parents against their will, the parents almost without exception are anxious to have their children received and educated in the Indian schools and with the result that the schools are overrun with applications from parents tendering their children.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to address myself briefly to the resolution now before the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, following the discussion regarding the investigation of Indian affairs I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD copies of certain letters and telegrams regarding Indian affairs in Arizona.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters and telegrams are as follows:

WINSLOW, ARIZ., February 14, 1929.

Hon. C. H. BURKE,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.:

Herewith copy of telegram sent to chairman Senate investigating committee of Indian affairs, care Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, United States Senator. Due to close proximity of Leupp Indian Agency and school committee of our chamber yesterday went unannounced to Leupp and conducted inspection of conditions. We take pleasure reporting we found conditions excellent and 350 children were just seating themselves to dinner when we arrived. We venture to say that many white children do not fare as well as these Indian children, who had all food they wanted and told us they were well satisfied with food and treatment received. We also visited school rooms and dormitories and hospital and found excellent conditions prevailing. This information from citizens of northern Arizona interested in welfare of Indians is passed on to you for what it is worth, as we are prompted to such by a recent magazine article and knowing that you are in session we believe that you will find on proper investigation that Leupp is model school and agency and does not deserve criticism that may have been directed against it. While we have not visited other agencies farther north, we are satisfied, from contact with others who have, that similar conditions prevail.

WINSLOW CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By C. L. GIRAGI,
President, Publishers Winslow Daily Mail.

COOLIDGE DAM

The Coolidge Dam is completed. It was authorized by the act of Congress approved June 7, 1924, and will form a lake 25 miles long with a capacity of 1,300,000 acre-feet.

The dam is situated 8 miles west of the San Carlos Apache Indian Agency. The reservoir, when filled, will submerge the present agency building and 14 miles of railroad track belonging to the Southern Pacific Railway.

The dam, of multiple-dome type, consists of three huge domes and is the only example of this type ever constructed. It will rise 250 feet above the bedrock and will span the canyon from wall to wall, a distance of 600 feet, with a huge spillway at each end. It was designed by and is being built under the direction of the engineers of the United States Indian Irrigation Service.

In keeping with the name bestowed upon it by Congress the engineers strove to make it both safe and economical. It has a maximum of strength and a minimum of material. Compressive stresses were welcomed and tensil avoided as much as possible.

The waters impounded behind this unique dam will be used to irrigate the fertile lands of the Pima Indians, who have lived on the banks of the Gila for centuries and who have never been at war with white men. Their white neighbors will also benefit from these waters, and in a few years 100,000 acres, much of which is now desert, will be producing crops in an abundance that will astonish those who are not familiar with the productivity of Arizona soil and sunshine.

The waters released from the Coolidge Dam flow down a canyon for 60 miles and are then turned out by the Ashurst-Hayden diversion dam and irrigate the section embracing Florence Casa Grande and the Indian reservation.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Charles H. Burke, and the Assistant Commissioner, Mr. E. B. Meritt, in urging the construction of this dam, displayed wisdom and sagacity and indicated that they were fully aware of the duty the Nation owed to the Pima Indians.

PARKER, ARIZ., February 14, 1929.

GENTLEMEN: We have the honor of submitting herewith the report of the committee in regard to conditions in the Colorado River Indian Boarding School at Parker, Ariz., which school is maintained by the United States Indian Bureau for the education of the Mojave and Chemehueva Indians.

An inspection was made through visits by this committee to the various departments, where the Indian children were observed at mealtime, at work, and at play; through interviewing many Indian parents whose children are in attendance at the school; by interviewing white people on or near the reservation who have been living within this reservation for many years; and through personal knowledge of the members of this committee who have been residents of Parker and vicinity for some years past. The Indian school is just 1 mile from the town of Parker, Ariz. The report follows:

I

One visit was made on February 10, 1929, by this committee, at which time we observed the children in the dining hall. The children filed into the hall in an orderly manner, took their seats at the different tables, and said grace. The dinner was on the tables, at the head of which an older child was seated. This child took the lead in serving and bringing in second helpings for those who cared for them. A copy of the menu is herewith attached for your inspection. This menu was followed on the day of the committee's visit. There was plenty of well-cooked and nicely prepared food for everyone. Individual members of this committee had made previous visits and have always found the menu followed and everything just as orderly. The employees nor any of the children knew when any of these visits were to be made, so nothing was especially prepared for us.

The children have a minimum of a quart of milk per day per child. This milk is clean and free from flies. In fact, there were no flies in the dining room or the room where the food was prepared. Vegetables are furnished from the garden during season, while out of season vegetables are purchased for table use.

The supplies in the commissary indicate that this menu is followed throughout the week. All of the supplies in the commissary are kept in the best of order. When you step into this department you might well imagine you were in a very neatly arranged general merchandise store. The supply of flour, which is kept in a separate little room of this commissary, is carefully screened in. It is kept clean and free from mice.

II

The clothing worn by the Indian school children during schooltime and out of school is sensible and substantial. The boys' clothing is purchased ready made in large quantities and is kept clean and neat.

The girls' clothing is made in the domestic-science department. The girls are taught to do this work, and they seem to take pride in their ability to sew.

The clothing worn by both boys and girls is in good condition, and there is a plentiful supply of changes neatly piled in the lockers. There is also a supply of material for clothes in the commissary to be made up when needed.

Each child has a change of shoes for dress wear, and there is a supply of shoes in the commissary as well. This committee is in a position to take notice of these Indian school children every day, and the conditions mentioned concerning them are true at all times.

III

The boys' dormitory and beds are clean and comfortable. The beds are made by the boys themselves under the supervision of the matron. The building at the present time is in good repair and well painted. But this building is a little small to provide for a reading room and a place where those who wish may sit and read or study. A sleeping porch added to this building would provide ample room.

The same conditions, as far as cleanliness and neatness is concerned, were found in the girls' dormitory. Here there is an addition being made for the purpose of providing more sleeping room. Some repairs are necessary on the floors soon, as same are badly worn, but the committee noticed that carpenters were at work on the building, and all that is best will likely be done.

The opinion of the committee concerning the condition of these dormitories is that they are kept in very good condition, both from the standpoint of health and comfort.

IV

The children have a very healthy appearance. The health charts kept at the school indicate that all children are weighed regularly every month. Children whose weights and measurements do not meet the standard are given bread and milk between meals. Those who are in industrial work of any kind are relieved if their condition demands it, and it is for their best interests that they be excused. Tubercular cases are sent to the sanitarium at Phoenix, Ariz., where they can have the proper care and attention for that disease. In case the parents object too strenuously to this the children are sent home. Most cases go to the sanitarium.

Dr. A. I. Nettle, who has been with the service here for 18 years, is a vivacious, energetic, and faithful physician. The observations of this committee—that is, the individuals composing this committee, covering years of observation—is that these children receive the best of medical attention. Indian parents tell us that their children are well cared for.

A visit to the dairy revealed the fact that the milch cows are well fed and properly cared for. The cows' udders were washed and dried with a clean towel before milking. The milking was done by some of the larger boys, under the supervision of an overseer.

The barn was clean and dry; no refuse was to be found. No unsanitary condition exists there. There is no place for flies to breed. The cows are regularly tested for tuberculosis and great care is taken to prevent the contraction and spread of this disease.

The horse barn is kept clean and orderly. There is a place for everything and everything is in its place. The harnesses and tools are hung up; the whole place has the atmosphere of order and care.

The garden which supplies the green vegetables for table use is free from weeds. Beets, radishes, onions, carrots, turnips, spinach, and mustard are now growing in the garden. The farmer who cares for the garden, farm, and cows is an experienced gardener and farmer and is actually busy on the farm and garden.

VI

This committee has made a thorough investigation of the treatment of the Indian school children at this place. In the schoolroom the teachers are found to be efficient; modern methods are used; and the results are as good as can be expected from the type of pupil, which type, it is found, is not able to go much beyond the sixth grade, as a rule.

On the playground spontaneous play is the kind of exercise encouraged, such as basket ball and baseball. Some formal exercises are practiced, but this is not carried to excess.

The children have the average free time allowed to most children of to-day.

Current reports concerning some schools that the children are mistreated, underfed, poorly clothed, cruelly punished, chained, whipped, and handcuffed to promote discipline can not truthfully be applied to this Indian school at this time. When punishment is necessary, attendance at the "movie" or at social or home affairs is denied the child, providing an earnest talk between supervisor and pupil does not suffice. Small children have been sometimes spanked in the good old-fashioned way.

VII

Through living within the reservation at this place and meeting the Indians almost every day, we are thoroughly familiar with the activities on the reservation at this place, in general, and the practices seem very satisfactory. Lands are not leased which Indians will farm, as we have heard is the practice in some places.

In fact, your committee feels that the school and reservation here is conducted in such a manner that it might well be used as an example anywhere.

The superintendent in charge at this time is a fine Christian character and one of the finest types of men that it has been our privilege to know. He is very conscientious in his work, and we feel that as long as he is in charge here you need have no uneasiness as to the work. Whatever is done will be for the best interests of all concerned.

Respectfully submitted.

GENTLEMEN: A committee of Globe men, chosen by the Globe Luncheon Club and Chamber of Commerce, composed of W. A. Sullivan, secretary of the Globe Chamber of Commerce and manager of the Mine Supply & Hardware Co., as chairman; the Hon. C. C. Faries, judge of the superior court of Gila County, member of the Globe Rotary Club and Chamber of Commerce; Charles L. Walker, manager of the J. C. Penney Co., director of the Globe Lions Club, and member of the chamber of commerce; F. A. Shaffer, attorney in Globe and district governor Forty-third District Rotary Clubs, and member of the chamber of commerce; and Ralph E. Herron, editor of the Arizona Record and member of the chamber of commerce, as members of this committee.

The committee left Globe at 11 o'clock Monday, February 11, to visit and inspect the Indian school at Rice. Upon arriving there they were met by Mr. W. E. Snook, school principal, and Manuel Victor, one of the Apache Indians, who accompanied them on their entire tour of inspection.

BOYS' DORMITORY

The committee first inspected the boys' dormitory. There were two groups of rooms, one for the smaller boys and one for the larger boys. They found the entire place to be clean, well ventilated, and roomy. The general appearance of the building as a whole was good.

BOYS' LAVATORY

This room was equipped with shower baths and other equipment and found to be in a good sanitary condition.

DINING ROOM, KITCHEN, BAKERY, AND STOREROOM

The committee arrived in the dining room as the children were assembling for the noonday meal and inspected the dining room, passing on into the kitchen, bakery, and storeroom. In the kitchen they found the food for that meal ready to be served. This particular meal consisted of mashed potatoes, hash, brown gravy, rice, bread, tomatoes, rice pudding, and all the fresh sweet milk they wanted to drink. Menus for the past two weeks were inspected and found to be similar to the one being served. The committee found the various rooms inspected to be clean and sanitary. They then went back to the dining room and were served the same food for their dinner and in the same manner as the Indian children then eating. The food was wholesome, good, nourishing, well prepared, and thoroughly cooked, and each child was given all the food and milk he cared for. The children were also given plenty of time for their meal.

GIRLS' DORMITORY AND LAVATORY

The committee next inspected the girls' dormitory and found two groups of rooms, one used for the younger girls and one for the older girls. They found both groups of rooms to be clean, sanitary, and very neatly kept. They also inspected one of the beds and found the linen clean, with good mattresses and springs on the beds. The bed linen is changed every Saturday. The general appearance of the various rooms was exceptionally good. In this building was also found the girls' wash room and shower baths, with hot and cold water. This room was also kept in a sanitary condition. While we found the wash room and shower room in good shape, we have been advised that new equipment has been purchased and is ready to be installed.

SEWING ROOM

We found this room equipped with a number of good, serviceable sewing machines and work tables. We were told by Mr. Snook that while the Government purchases the materials, the girls make their own uniforms, and several completed uniforms were hanging on the racks in the room.

LAUNDRY

In this building we found a large steam-operated cylindrical washer, an extractor, and a mangle. On the lines outside this building was part of the wash for this day, which was found to be clean and white. We found that the working conditions in this laundry were very satisfactory. Some of the equipment in this room has been in use for a number of years and is about to be replaced with new, electrically operated, up-to-date equipment.

COMMISSARY

The committee next inspected the commissary where the supplies for the school are kept. In inspection of the various boxes containing foods we found them to contain high-grade brands. We also saw a goodly supply of clothing for the children, including work shirts, hats, shoes, etc. We found this building to be kept in a neat orderly manner and well stocked.

HOSPITAL

The committee next inspected the hospital building, going into the various wards, operating room, dispensary, etc. We found the wards well kept, beds neatly made, very clean, and sanitary. The operating room is well lighted and very fully equipped. The dispensary is well equipped with necessities for a hospital.

SCHOOLROOMS

The next building inspected was the school building, where we found the classes in session. The main point which impressed the committee in their inspection of the school was the happy frame of mind of the children. They seemed well fed, well nourished, healthy, and bright. In each of the various classrooms inspected the weight charts were carefully noted, which showed a high per cent of increase in the weights of the various children. We also noted that the children in the lower grades were being taught the difference between what is good and what is bad in foods. The rooms were found to be well kept, very sanitary, and well lighted. We also found the personnel of the teaching staff to compare favorably with the local public schools.

CONCLUSION

The committee was then taken by Mr. Roy Bradley, superintendent of construction, to see the new school building and auditorium, hospital, etc. These buildings were found to be well constructed and will compare very favorably with similar structures in this city.

The school building, which is built in a U shape, containing three classrooms and a teachers' room on each side with a large assembly hall and gymnasium on the end, will give the children lots of sunlight and plenty of fresh air, and would be a credit to any group of school buildings in the State of Arizona.

We want to commend the principal, Mr. W. E. Snook, for the very efficient manner in which this school is conducted, and the condition of the various buildings inspected.

Respectfully submitted.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES INDIAN FIELD SERVICE,
Pima Indian Agency, Sacaton, Ariz., February 11, 1929.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: There is transmitted herewith at the request of the Indian Office a copy of a joint report prepared and submitted by Mr. J. F. Brown, Rev. Gerard Brenneke, and Rev. Dirk Lay, covering conditions at the Pima Boarding School, Pima Indian Reservation, Sacaton, Ariz.

Mr. Brown is one of the foremost citizens of Pinal County, president of the Arizona Southwest National Bank of Tucson, Casa Grande, Bisbee, and Douglas, and a former State senator.

Rev. Gerard Brenneke is a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, dean of the Catholic organization of the Pima Indian Reservation, where he has resided for the past five or six years, and the superintendent of a large boarding school. He is a man entirely qualified to pass judgment on boarding-school matters of any nature whatsoever.

Rev. Dirk Lay, D. D., as a Presbyterian missionary to the Pima Indians, has spent 18 years of his life in one continuous, vigorous, and effective effort to shield the Pima Indians from injustice, regardless of the source from which such injustice might come. He is outspoken and aggressive. He knows conditions, past and present, at the Pima Boarding School probably better than any other man. He visits the school practically every day, mingling with employees and pupils. No one could possibly be better qualified to pass judgment as to conditions. No one would be quicker to condemn were these conditions, or any of them, deserving of adverse criticism.

The original of this report is filed in the Indian Office.

Most sincerely,

A. H. KNEALE,
Superintendent.

PIMA INDIAN AGENCY,
Sacaton, Ariz., February 9, 1929.

Supt. A. H. KNEALE,
Pima Indian Agency, Sacaton, Ariz.

SIR: As per your request, we submit herewith the result of our investigation, as follows:

We made a thorough inspection of the entire school plant at Sacaton and have found the conditions of the best.

The bakeshop was in A-1 shape. We insepcted the bread, pies, and cake and found all wholesome and well baked.

The committee visited the dining room during all three meals to-day and found good and sufficient food and a variety, well cooked and well prepared. We examined the menu for the past week and found it varied and well planned.

The kitchen was immaculately clean, everything in orderly condition, under the direction of a splendid Indian cook.

We inspected the meat shop and the meat. It was fresh and well taken care of. The meat shop itself was very clean.

The table is supplied with vegetables from the school garden, which is well stocked and ready for further crops. We inspected the dairy and everything was sanitary. It produced 102 gallons a day during the past week, of which all except 15 gallons a day went to the school and hospital. Fifteen pounds of butter are made daily, all of which is used by the school.

The children are well clothed and housed.

We inspected the hospital and found it in fair shape. Repairs are at present being made.

All the children are inspected regularly and receive proper medical attention.

During Mr. Smith's time here (he is now in his fourth year) there has not been one single case of cruel punishment heard of.

On the inspection of the commissary we found all food and supplies well stored and in perfect order.

The constructive criticism which we would offer is that more dining-room space is needed at once. Likewise, there should be more dormitory room. In our judgment, better fire escapes should be provided at once on the girls' building.

Sincerely yours,

THE COMMITTEE,
J. F. BROWN.
FR. GERARD BRENNEKE.
Rev. DIRK LAY.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

The resolution (S. Res. 311) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 193, agreed to on May 3, 1928, authorizing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to investigate the choice of postmasters in presidential offices, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the end of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress.

EXPENSES OF GOVERNMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 5648) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes" approved March 4, 1913, as amended, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the bill should be explained. Its purpose does not appear on the face of it. It seems to be a very important bill and deals with elements to be taken into consideration in the fixing of rates by the Public Utilities Commission.

Mr. CAPPER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What are the changes made in the existing law?

Mr. CAPPER. It clarifies the existing law. It has been worked out very carefully by the Public Utilities Committee of the Federated Citizens' Association, and after their report had been presented to our committee, the Public Utilities Commission appeared before the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia and the bill was perfected to make it satisfactory to the commissioners as well as to the citizens.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time allotted under the unanimous-consent agreement for the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar having expired, the Chair now lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing the acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes.

BATTLE FIELDS IN VICINITY OF RICHMOND, VA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 15655) to provide for the study, investigation, and survey, for commemorative purposes, of battle fields in the vicinity of Richmond, Va., was read twice by its title.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the House of Representatives passed that bill last night. The Senate on yesterday afternoon passed a bill similar in every respect. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may now proceed to the consideration of the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GLASS. I have no objection, and yield to my colleague for that purpose only.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to have made studies, investigations, and surveys of the battle fields in the vicinity of Richmond, in the Commonwealth of Virginia, including the battle field of Cold Harbor, Va., for the purpose of preparing and submitting to Congress a general plan and such detailed project as may be required for properly commemorating such battle fields and other adjacent points of historical and military interest, in accordance with the classification set forth in House Report No. 1071, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session.

SEC. 2. To enable the Secretary of War to carry out the provisions of this act, including the payment of mileage of officers of the Army and actual expenses of civilian employees traveling on duty in connection with the studies, investigations, and surveys, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,800, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended for the purposes of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CUSTOMS APPEALS, CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to present a conference report and have it acted on at this time, if the Senator from Virginia will yield to me for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GLASS. I yield for that purpose only.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask the Senator from Nebraska what is the nature of the conference report?

Mr. NORRIS. I may present the conference report as a matter of privilege, but I am asking action on it. It does not involve a very serious matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska presents a conference report which will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6687) entitled "An act to change the title of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

G. W. NORRIS,
CHAS W. WATERMAN,
T. J. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEORGE S. GRAHAM,
SAMUEL C. MAJOR,
ANDREW J. HICKEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What will be the result if the conference report shall be agreed to, I ask the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. The bill proposes to give to the United States Court of Customs Appeals some jurisdiction in patent appeals as well as in customs cases. It also proposes to change the title of the Court of Customs Appeals. It is not thought they have enough to do and should this legislation be enacted it will give them a little more business and will, to that extent, relieve the other courts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska for the consideration of the report if its consideration will not lead to a lengthy discussion.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXAMINATION AND RATING OF FLYING SCHOOLS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5350) entitled "To amend the air commerce act of 1926 with reference to the examination and rating of schools giving instruction in flying," which were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "necessary"; and on page 1, line 9, after the word "instructors," to insert—

The examinations and ratings provided for in this paragraph shall only be made upon request of the owners or representatives of the air navigation facilities or schools.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

OLIVER C. MACEY AND MARGUERITE MACEY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BRUCE and Mr. NYE addressed the Chair.

Mr. GLASS. I yield first to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. I was going to ask the Senator from Virginia to yield, but I yield to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], who I understand desires to present a conference report.

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota to present a conference report.

Mr. NYE. I present the conference report which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1648) entitled "An act for the relief of Oliver C. Macey and Marguerite Macey," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said House amendment insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Oliver C. Macey, of Anne Arundel County, Maryland, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 in full compensation for the death of his infant daughter, Eleanor Macey, who was killed December 14, 1925, by reason of the negligence of the operator of a United States Navy commissary truck.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized and directed to pay to Marguerite Macey out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $1,250, in full compensation for personal injuries, medical and funeral expenses, and loss of automobile, which resulted by reason of the negligence of the operator of a United States Navy commissary truck."

And the House agree to the same.

THOMAS F. BAYARD,
GERALD P. NYE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
CHARLES L. UNDERHILL,
JOHN C. BOX,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

LAND TITLES IN TEXAS AND OKLAHOMA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 196) authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to take steps in an effort to protect citizens of the United States in their equitable titles to land embraced in territory to be transferred from the State of Oklahoma to the State of Texas and from the State of Texas to the State of Oklahoma, as per decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Oklahoma v. Texas (1926, 272 U. S. 21, p. 38), and to give the consent of Congress to said States to enter into a compact with each other and with the United States relating to such subject matter, which were to strike out the preamble; on page 5, to strike out lines 19 to 22, inclusive, and insert:

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States be authorized, and he is hereby requested, to confer with the Governor of the State of Texas and with the Governor of the State of New Mexico to ascertain if negotiations will be entertained to the end that an agreement may be reached between the United States, the State of Texas, and the State of New Mexico, as to the terms upon which said parties mentioned and in interest will accept the land, if any, transferred or to be transferred to each said party by the authority of the final decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in the action styled New Mexico v. Texas (vol. 276, p. 557, U. S. Sup. Ct. Repts.).

SEC. 4. In the event the Governor of the State of Texas and the Governor of the State of New Mexico, acting for their respective States, agree to confer with the United States relative to the subject matter mentioned and described in section 1 hereof, the consent of Congress is hereby given to the said State of Texas and to the said State of New Mexico to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement respecting the matter in this act mentioned, and the President is herein authorized and requested to proceed with such conference and to formulate and suggest a compact or agreement to be presented to the Congress and to the Legislatures of the State of Texas and the State of New Mexico for ratification and if, and when, ratified by each said contracting party, then each said party herein mentioned is hereby authorized to proceed to comply with the obligations in said compact or agreement assumed.

SEC. 5. No such compact or agreement shall be binding or obligatory upon either of the parties herein mentioned unless and until such compact or agreement has been ratified by the legislatures of each of said States affected and mentioned herein and by the Congress of the United States.

And to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to take steps in an effort to protect citizens of the United States in their equitable titles to land embraced in territory to be transferred from the State of Oklahoma to the State of Texas and from the State of Texas to the State of Oklahoma as per decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Oklahoma v. Texas (1926, 272 U. S. 21, p. 38) and from the State of New Mexico to the State of Texas and from the State of Texas to the State of New Mexico as per decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of New Mexico v. Texas (vol. 276, p. 557, U. S. Sup. Ct. Repts.), and to give the consent of Congress to said States to enter into compacts with each other and with the United States relating to such subject matter."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

ANDREW T. BAILEY

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama for that purpose with the distinct understanding that there will be no discussion of the matter.

Mr. BLACK. I simply desire to ask for the immediate consideration of the measure which I desire to report by reason of the fact that this is probably the only chance the bill will have to pass.

The bill relates to an exceedingly tragic case and its consideration will not take over a minute.

Mr. GLASS. Will the Senator state the case?

Mr. BLACK. The case is that of a convict who was in the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta who performed service for the Government in exposing some very bad conspirators. They got him under their control and blinded him with lye.

The department has recommended the passage of this bill. It originally allowed him $90 per month for life, but the amount has been reduced to $50 per month.

Mr. GLASS. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection the report will be received.

Mr. BLACK. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 5766) for the relief of Andrew T. Bailey, and I submit a report (No. 1927) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendment of the Committee on Claims was in line 6, after the words "sum of" to strike out "$90" and insert "$50," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Andrew T. Bailey, during his natural life, the sum of $50 per month, to date from the passage of this act, as compensation for the loss of the sight of both eyes while serving as a trusty at the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., said monthly payments to be paid through the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE TO AUDIT AND CONTROL CONTINGENT EXPENSES

Mr. DENEEN. Out of order I report various and sundry resolutions from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and I ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration. They will lead to no debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and the resolutions will be considered in order.

INVESTIGATIONS BY THE FINANCE COMMITTEE

The resolution (S. Res. 335) submitted by Mr. SMOOT, February 21, 1929, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance or any subcommittee thereof be, and hereby is, authorized to sit during the sessions of recesses of the Seventy-first Congress at such times and places as they may deem advisable; to make investigations into internal revenue, customs, currency, and coinage matters, and other matters within its jurisdiction, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents relating thereto as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary; and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such expert, stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary; and all of the expenses of such committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and the committee is authorized to order such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

LANDS CEDED TO THE UNITED STATES BY MEXICO

The resolution (S. Res. 329) submitted by Mr. BRATTON on February 15, 1929, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 291, agreed to January 7, 1929, authorizing and directing the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any subcommittee thereof, to investigate the cession of lands by the Government of Mexico to the United States, as fully set forth in said resolution, hereby is continued and extended in full force and effect until the end of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress, and that $5,000, in addition to the amount heretofore authorized, hereby is authorized to be expended from the contingent fund of the Senate in furtherance of the purposes of said resolution.

PRESERVATION OF THE NIAGARA FALLS

The resolution (S. Res. 333) submitted by Mr. BORAH on February 20, 1929, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized and directed during the sessions, recesses, or adjourned periods of the Seventy-first Congress to investigate the subject of the convention and protocol between the United States and His Majesty the King of Great Britain for the preservation and improvement of the scenic beauty of the Niagara Falls and rapids, concluded at Ottawa on January 2, 1929.

For the purposes of this resolution such committee or subcommittees is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, to employ such stenographic and other assistance, to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of such stenographic service to report such hearings and testimony shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of such committee or subcommittee, which shall not exceed $2,500, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers properly approved.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

The resolution (S. Res. 336) submitted by Mr. McNARY on February 23, 1929, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-first Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

NATIONAL PARKS

The resolution (S. Res. 316) submitted by Mr. ASHURST on January 29, 1929, was read and considered by unanimous consent. The resolution had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment on page 2, line 5, after the word "Senate," to insert "and shall not exceed $12,500," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the advisability of establishing certain additional national parks and the proposed changes in, boundary revisions of, and matters relating to other national parks. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution such committee or subcommittee is hereby authorized to sit, act, and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of witnesses; to require the production of books, papers, documents, and other evidence; and to administer such oaths and to take such testimony and make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic service to report such hearings shall not exceed 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of such committee or subcommittee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and shall not exceed $12,500. The committee or subcommittee shall make a report as to its findings during the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress, together with recommendations for such legislation as it deems necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Is that the resolution in which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is interested?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it is not.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CLAIMS OF NORTHWESTERN BANDS OF SHOSHONE INDIANS

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. I will yield to the Senator from North Dakota if he has a matter that will not require discussion.

Mr. FRAZIER. I submit a conference report on Senate bill 710 and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered at this time. The matters in disagreement between the two Houses have been composed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 710) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Northwestern Bands of Shoshone Indians may have against the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3 and 4, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the words "for the benefit of any" and before the words "of said Indians" insert the words "band or bands," so as to make the amendment read: "Any payment which may have been made by the United States, including gratuities for the benefit of any band or bands of said Indians or for their support and civilization, shall not operate as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as a set-off in said suit"; and the House agree to the same.

LYNN J. FRAZIER,
THOS. D. SCHALL,
HENRY F. ASHURST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SCOTT LEAVITT,
W. H. SPROUL,
JOHN M. EVANS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

ROAD CONSTRUCTION IN LATIN-AMERICAN REPUBLICS

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. ODDIE. I ask the Senator from Virginia if he will yield for a few minutes in order that I may call up a bill which I think can be passed without much debate.

Mr. GLASS. I will not yield for any matter that is going to require discussion, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. ODDIE. I will be willing to drop the matter if the bill can not be disposed of in a few minutes.

Mr. GLASS. Very well, I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Order of Business 825, being the bill (S. 1718) to authorize the President to detail engineers of the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture to assist the Governments of the Latin-American Republics in highway matters. The bill has been indorsed by the Bureau of Public Roads and practically every road organization in the United States. It has been before the Senate for some time. I think the bill can be disposed of in a few minutes.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I really think that is a matter of so much importance that it can not properly be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. GLASS. If it is going to create discussion, I will ask that the bill go over.

Mr. ODDIE. The Senator from Utah had some objections to the bill, but I think in a few minutes he can be convinced as to its propriety.

Mr. BRUCE. There are several other Senators who object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

BRONZE TABLETS IN ANDERSONVILLE NATIONAL CEMETERY, GA.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent, with the permission of the Senator from Virginia, to report and have considered a bill authorizing the Women's Relief Corps to renew the iron markers in the Andersonville National Cemetery with bronze markers of the same type. The tablets contain, respectively, Lincoln's Gettysburg Address and General Logan's Memorial Day Order No. 11. The present cast-iron markers are worn out, and the Women's Relief Corps asks permission to replace them with proper bronze design. The bill is reported unanimously from the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. GLASS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 15330) authorizing acceptance by the United States Government from the Women's Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, of proposed gifts of bronze tablets to be placed in Andersonville National Cemetery, in Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept from the Woman's Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, a gift of bronze tablets, containing Lincoln's Gettysburg address, and Logan's Memorial Day Order

No. 11, to be placed on the grounds of the Andersonville National Cemetery in the State of Georgia, all expenses incident to the erection to be paid by the Woman's Relief Corps.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW JERSEY SENATORIAL ELECTION

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GLASS. For what purpose?

Mr. McNARY. On a privileged matter. A few days ago on behalf of the Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures in senatorial primaries and elections I filed a report in connection with the primary campaign in the State of New Jersey last spring. The report is on the table, and, inasmuch as the Vare case has been disposed of this morning, I am sure there will be no objection to the consideration of the report submitted by me. Being a privileged question, I ask that it be submitted to the Senate, and I move its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report being a privileged matter, it is laid before the Senate, and the question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have not seen the report and have not read a line of it, and there are a number of Senators who are absent at this time.

Mr. McNARY. The report is very brief. If the Senator from Wisconsin has not had an opportunity to read the report, I will be glad to ask that the clerk read it.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I had the honor to serve with the Senator from Oregon on the committee and the report is entirely satisfactory. I think it is conformable to the facts, and there could be no other report in the light of the evidence.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; the report comes with the unanimous report of the special committee. I ask that the report may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the report (No. 1861) submitted by Mr. McNARY from the special committee investigating expenditures in senatorial primaries and general elections on February 22, 1929, as follows:

On the 16th day of May, 1928, the Senate of the United States passed the following resolution:

"Senate Resolution 232

"Resolved, That the special committee of five, consisting of three Members selected from the majority political party, of whom one is a Progressive Republican, and of two Members from the minority political party appointed by the President of the Senate, and which special committee was created by the adoption of Senate Resolution 195 on May 19, 1926, and January 11, 1927, of Senate Resolution 324, by the first and second sessions of Congress (Sixty-ninth) is hereby authorized and instructed immediately to investigate what moneys, emoluments, rewards, or things of value, including agreements or understandings of support for appointment or election to office, have been promised, contributed, made, or expended, or shall hereafter be promised, contributed, expended, or made, by any person, firm, corporation, or committee, organization, or association, to influence the nomination of any person as a candidate of any political party or organization for membership in the United States Senate, or to contribute to or promote the election of any person as a Member of the United States Senate from the State of New Jersey at the general election to be held in November, 1928. Said committee shall report the names of the persons, firms, or corporations, or committees, organizations, or associations, that have made or shall hereafter make such promises, subscriptions, advancements, or payments, and the amount of them severally contributed or promised as aforesaid, including the method of expenditure of said sums or the method of performance of said agreements, together with all facts in relation thereto.

"Said committee is hereby empowered to sit and act at such time or times and at such place or places as it may deem necessary; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of witnesses, the production of books, papers, and documents; and to do such other acts as may be necessary in the matter of said investigation.

"The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

"Said committee shall promptly report to the Senate the facts by it ascertained."

Thereafter, because of the pressing engagements of certain members of the committee and the consequent inability of the full committee to sit and take evidence, the following subcommittee was appointed to hear the case: CHARLES L. McNARY and WILLIAM H. KING.

The said subcommittee held four hearings—on June 4, 5, 11, and 13, 1928.

There were called before the subcommittee substantially all of the candidates for the office of United States Senator from New Jersey, subject to the primary held on the 15th day of May, 1928, which resulted in the nomination of Hamilton Fish Kean as the Republican candidate, and EDWARD I. EDWARDS as the Democratic candidate. Senator EDWARDS was unopposed in the primary and no charge of any irregularity was made in connection with his campaign. The other candidates for the Republican nomination were ex-Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, ex-Governor E. C. Stokes, Mr. Edward Gray, and Mrs. Lillian F. Feickert. All of these candidates were called and heard by the subcommittee.

The subcommittee likewise heard the testimony and received the accounts of receipts and expenditures of the campaign managers of the respective candidates.

The laws of New Jersey provide that no more than $50,000 may be expended by or on behalf of a candidate for any State or national office at either a primary or general election.

There was no evidence of any character produced which would indicate that any of the candidates for United States Senator expended more than the statutory allowance.

Beyond certain statements made by newspapers and general charges by candidates during the heat of the campaign, which were unsupported by any evidence, that a great deal of money had been expended, chiefly in northern New Jersey and Atlantic City, there were no allegations of specific instances of election fraud. The subcommittee inquired carefully into these charges, and the committee is of the opinion that, while probably made in good faith, they were without substance and wholly unsupported by any testimony or evidence whatsoever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report is adopted.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. BROOKHART, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1994) to amend section 5197 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and for other purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

ASSISTANT IN SENATE DOCUMENT ROOM

Mr. WATSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 342), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint an assistant in the Senate document room, at a compensation of $1,800 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, until the end of the Seventy-first Congress.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1981) thereon. I should like at some time to-morrow, at the pleasure of the Senate, to call up the bill for disposal.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND RULES

Mr. BARKLEY submitted the following notice, which was read:

Pursuant to the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 1 of rule 16, for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz, on page 63, after line 6, insert the following:

"Rural sanitation: For additional amounts for special studies of, and demonstration work in, rural sanitation, including personal services, the sum of $130,500: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for demonstration work in rural sanitation in any community unless the State, county, or municipality in which the community is located agrees to pay one-half the expenses of such demonstration work."

PRINTING OF VARIOUS DOCUMENTS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. GLASS. For what purpose?

Mr. CAPPER. I desire to make several reports from the Committee on Printing. They will not require any discussion.

Mr. GLASS. Very well; I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. CAPPER. At the request of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], the chairman of the Printing Committee, who is absent on account of illness, I report back favorably House Concurrent Resolution 57, House Concurrent Resolution 56, and House Concurrent Resolution 37.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the reports will be received.

CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY

Mr. CAPPER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 57, to provide for the printing of the first edition of the Congressional Directory of the first session of the Seventy-first Congress.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That an edition of the Congressional Directory for the first session of the Seventy-first Congress be compiled, prepared, indexed, and published under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, as provided for in section 73 of the printing act approved January 12, 1895.

STATUES OF HENRY CLAY AND DR. EPHRAIM M'DOWELL

Mr. CAPPER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 56, to provide for the printing and binding of the proceedings in Congress and in Statuary Hall at the unveiling upon the acceptance of the statues of Henry Clay and Dr. Ephraim McDowell, presented by the State of Kentucky, and for the disposition of the 2,500 copies authorized to be printed.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statues of Henry Clay and Dr. Ephraim McDowell, presented by the State of Kentucky, 5,000 copies of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Kentucky.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure suitable illustrations to be bound with these proceedings.

HEARINGS ON STABILIZATION OF PRICE LEVEL OF COMMODITIES

Mr. CAPPER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 37, to print 3,000 additional copies of the hearings during the Sixty-ninth Congress on the bill (H. R. 7895) relating to the stabilization of the price level of commodities.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Printing, with amendments.

The amendments were, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "five"; and at the end of line 8, before the word "relating," to insert: "and 5,000 additional copies of the hearings held during the Seventieth Congress on the bill (H. R. 11806) both"; so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the printing act, approved March 1, 1907 (U. S. C., title 44, p. 154), the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives is empowered to have printed for its use 5,000 additional copies of the hearings held before such committee during the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, on the bill (H. R. 7895) and 5,000 additional copies of the hearings held during the Seventieth Congress on the bill (H. R. 11806) both relating to the stabilization of the price level of commodities.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES, EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. BORAH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14679) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment No. 1 and also recede from its amendment to the title.

WM. E. BORAH,
CHAS. W. WATERMAN,
T. J. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

GEORGE S. GRAHAM,
HATTON W. SUMNERS,
F. H. LAGUARDIA,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

CALLING OF THE ROLL

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edwards	King	Sheppard
Barkley	Fess	McKellar	Shortridge
Bayard	Fletcher	McMaster	Simmons
Bingham	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Black	George	Mayfield	Smoot
Blaine	Gerry	Metcalf	Steck

Dale	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Deneen	Jones	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Dill	Kendrick	Sackett	Watson
Edge	Keyes	Schall	Wheeler

Mr. WATERMAN. My colleague the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] is detained at home on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. NYE. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] on account of serious illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

FARMERS' PRODUCE MARKET

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing the acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has the floor.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. I simply want to have sent to the desk and have read three brief telegrams relating to the pending bill.

Mr. GLASS. I suggest that the Senator have them inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. BRUCE. They are too good.

Mr. GLASS. I could match them with a dozen others. It is just consuming time.

Mr. BRUCE. I will not do it if the Senator objects, of course. They are very brief, and I should like to have them read.

Mr. GLASS. Have them inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the telegrams will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRUCE. If the Senator will yield just a moment further, I should like to have the clerk retain those telegrams so that I may read them myself when I make some remarks on the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the junior Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The pending amendment to this bill is an amendment offered by me. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, consent is granted for the withdrawal of the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. GLASS. I move the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 6, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the acquirement of such site or any other site in lieu thereof shall be subject to the prior approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and the superintendent of markets, or a majority thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senate that I hope none of these amendments will be adopted, for the simple reason that that would involve further action on the part of the House, and at this late date of the session that would be impossible. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Virginia if I understood him correctly that if these amendments are put on they will change the House bill?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. And if the bill passes as it comes from the House it is through?

Mr. GLASS. Yes. The amendment of the bill will make it impossible to enact any legislation at all.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, may I say just a word to explain my amendment?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, there is very strong opposition in the District of Columbia to the location of the farmers' market in the southwest. I should say the sentiment of the consumers of the city is overwhelming in opposition to the bill as it is now before the Senate.

I have been appealed to in the last 30 days by the representatives of nearly all of the leading civic and citizens' associations. The Federated Citizens' Associations are unanimously opposed to the proposition as it is now before the Senate. The General Federation of Women's Clubs, representing the women's organizations of the city, have appealed for an amendment to the bill, so that a more central location might be obtained. The Central Labor Union has come to the Capitol, represented by a very strong committee of that organization, and appealed to me and appealed to other Members of the Senate to have the bill amended, protesting in most vigorous terms against the proposed location in the southwest as being inconvenient from the standpoint of the consumer and inaccessible to any considerable number of the people of the District.

A very large percentage of the farmers who are interested in this measure are opposed to this location. In the hearings before our committee it was shown that at least 80 per cent of the farmers objected to the southwest location.

Since then many of them have given evidence of their opposition by moving to a more central site, such as the Convention Hall Market. In my opinion, it would be inconvenient to the consumers of the city, it would be inconvenient to the farmers, and the taxpayers of the city I know are almost overwhelmingly opposed to the expenditure of $300,000 for a farmers' market, or a retail market, away off in the southwest part of the city.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, of course, I utterly deny the accuracy of the statements made by the Senator from Kansas. So far as the record shows, the overwhelming sentiment of the taxpayers of this community is in favor of the bill we are called upon now to consider. The action of certain associations was a negative rather than an affirmative action as to the geographical location of a market. The meetings held by these associations were literally attenuated and nonrepresentative, the whole thing engineered by a single individual.

With respect to this amendment I may say here now that this bill has received the almost unanimous indorsement of the District of Columbia Committee of the other branch of Congress, after searching hearings, held over an extended period. It received an overwhelming majority in the House.

The southwest site has received specific indorsement of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia. It has received the unmistakable approval of the National Fine Arts Commission. It has received the approval of every director of traffic in the District of Columbia for the last three years. It has received the overwhelming approval of the District of Columbia Grocers' Society, in whose membership are embraced 200 retail stores. It has received the approval of the Southwest Citizens' Association, the Trinidad Citizens' Association, the Barry Farm Citizens' Association, the Southeast Washington Citizens' Association, the Du Pont Circle Citizens' Association, the Park View Citizens' Association, the Arlington Citizens' Association, the Washington City Club, the Twentieth Century Club, the Southwest Business Men's Association, and of practically every hotel located in Washington; and the hotels are the largest patrons of the proposed market. It received the approval of Harvey's Restaurant, the Wallace Cafés, the Old Dutch Market, and Cornwell & Co. It has received the approval of a majority of the produce commission merchants of the city of Washington. So that the statement made by the Senator from Kansas is not borne out by the record.

Now, I am ready for a vote on this proposed amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the average man who finds himself beaten in any cause is willing to resort to any proposition that will extricate him from his difficulty. That is the meaning of this proposed amendment. There has been an investigation of this matter over and over again within the last three years. There is not a fact to be ascertained that is not already now known. The whole thing has been reviewed, repeatedly reviewed, and as I indicated a little while ago, the proposed southwest site has been approved over and over again by the representative and interested bodies of the District of Columbia.

A moment ago the Senator from Maryland said the Fine Arts Commission was not in favor of this site. I hold in my hand a letter on the stationery of the Commission of Fine Arts, dated January 27 of last year, addressed to Mr. Wrisley Brown, as follows:

MY DEAR MR. BROWN: As requested by you, I am writing to say that the legislation providing for the elimination of grade crossings within the District of Columbia was designed to permit the use of lands in southwest Washington for commercial purposes.

The plans of 1901 for the improvement of the city of Washington recognized this situation, and in the treatment of the Mall provision was made for the crossing of that space by north and south bound traffic. Nothing in these plans and nothing in any subsequent plans has changed the situation. On the contrary, the provision made for an open plaza on the west of the Capitol and Second Street, for the opening of Ninth Street through the Mall, and also for the opening of Fifteenth Street, was indorsed by the commission. These plans are still being adhered to.

That letter was written to Major Brown in response to a protest against the southwest market site upon the plea that it would interfere with the program for the beautification of the Mall.

It has been stated here by the Senators from Maryland that the board of efficiency had reported against this southwest site. How accurate that is the Senate may judge from a simple statement of the facts.

After the House Committee on the District of Columbia had officially reported in favor of this southwest site, one attaché of the Bureau of Efficiency, to wit, a man who had been a zealot for the Patterson-tract site and opposed to the southwest site, made a survey of his own and reported it unofficially, and after the matter had been officially determined by the District Committee, and it is that report, and no report from the Bureau of Efficiency officially sanctioned by the bureau, that the Senator from Maryland speaks of.

Mr. TYDINGS rose.

Mr. GLASS. I am willing to be interrupted.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will just wait one minute, I will read him the unanimous report signed by the Bureau of Efficiency and verified by a letter showing, after a survey, that they are unalterably opposed to his proposition. Does the Senator want me to get that and read it?

Mr. GLASS. There is no such report as that in the record.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator want me to get that report?

Mr. GLASS. Of course I want the Senator to get it. I want him to verify every statement made here.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not a fact also that the Senator said that Colonel Brown—I think he is called—of that commission is for it, and did not Colonel Brown come and tell the Senator he was not for it, though the Senator made that statement on the floor?

Mr. GLASS. He did not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Did not the Senator then say you could not believe him; he did not know which side he was on?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Brown came to me and told me he was not against the southwest site.

Mr. TYDINGS. Did he not write the Senator a letter, a copy of which I have, telling the Senator he was against it after that?

Mr. GLASS. He wrote me a letter which made the matter dubious, and I told him I would not trust him to state any proposition.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, the Senator is like King David—in his haste he calls all men liars.

Mr. GLASS. No; I do not do anything of the kind, and that exemplifies the accuracy of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. I say the Senator's statements are most grossly partisan——

Mr. GLASS. I decline to be interrupted by the Senator if he is going to affront me with such unparliamentary language.

Mr. BRUCE. If the Senator will allow me for a moment——

Mr. GLASS. No; I will not allow the Senator for a moment.

Mr. BRUCE. Then I will allow myself.

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator wants to affront me, he must do it in his own time.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator does not select any time for affronts, because he is always affronting.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Maryland is now out of order as he usually is.

I have stated the exact facts in the case, that the so-called report from the Bureau of Efficiency presented here yesterday by the senior Senator from Maryland was not an official report of that bureau, but it was the partisan report of an attaché of that bureau who, in his capacity as a citizen of the District of Columbia, had been an unreasoning zealot in the advocacy of a certain site behind which are marshalled all the real-estate speculators of this syndicate. It was not an official report of the Bureau of Efficiency.

So yesterday the senior Senator from Maryland presented here what purported to be a report from the National Park and Planning Commission of the District of Columbia. Within the last hour and a half Mr. Frederick A. Delano, one of the outstanding members of that commission, told me in the anteroom of the Senate Chamber that the commission had adopted no report against the southwest site. What the Senator from Maryland presented was the individual opinion of an Army officer characterized by his superior, General Jadwin, as without economic information on the subject.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator want the report from the Bureau of Efficiency? Would he like me to read it?

Mr. GLASS. No; the Senator can read it in his own time.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thought so.

Mr. GLASS. With these statements I am perfectly willing to vote on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER].

Mr. BRUCE. The fact that the National Capital Park and Planning Commission was opposed to the southwest site and the fact that the United States Bureau of Efficiency also was opposed to that site are evidenced by the report of the minority of the House committee which dealt with the question which we are now discussing. I ask Senators to listen to me for just a moment. In that minority report it was said:

Seventh. We believe that the recommendation of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission deserves primary consideration. After making a careful study of the principal sites involved, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, assisted by representatives from the United States Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Markets in the District, and the foremost landscape architects and consulting engineers in this country, recommended the site next to the Eckington yards as their preference.

That is to say, the Eckington site, north of Pennsylvania Avenue. I can only suppose that there was a time when the Senator from Virginia was familiar with what I am reading, but that he has since forgotten it.

Then the minority report just mentioned in connection with the conclusion reached by the United States Bureau of Efficiency which, mind you, made a most painstaking and exhaustive study of the whole situation, goes on to quote the conclusions of that bureau as follows:

Twelve reasons are given in a summary of this report why the farmers' produce market should not be located south of Pennsylvania Avenue. These are as follows:

1. Because nearly every customer of this market would be compelled to go through the down-town congested zone of the city to reach the market.

An excellent reason surely for not placing the market on the southwest site.

2. Because every farmer coming into the city from the north and west will have to go through the down-town congested zone of the city.

3. Because the Federal development of the Mall triangle will further add to the congestion of the so-called down-town congested zone.

4. Because there are only four north-and-south highways running through the Mall that would be convenient to southwest sites Nos. 1 and 2, viz, Sixth, Seventh, Twelfth, and Fourteenth Streets.

All of these are certainly most excellent reasons, too, why the southwest site should not be selected as the site for the market, I respectfully submit to the Senate.

5. Because it is impossible to extend either Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, or Thirteenth Streets through the Mall on account of existing public buildings or projected ones.

6. Because the Federal building program for the Mall triangle will undoubtedly necessitate the changing of existing car tracks and the rerouting of all street-car lines traversing this area.

7. Because four-fifths of the entire population of the District of Columbia live north of Pennsylvania Avenue.

8. Because more than nine-tenths of the hotels and boarding houses, more than four-fifths of the restaurants and lunch rooms, and more than three-fourths of the retail grocery stores are located north of Pennsylvania Avenue.

9. Because the future expansion of the city—in population and in the number of hotels and boarding houses, restaurants and lunch rooms, and retail grocery stores—will in a large measure be north of Pennsylvania Avenue.

10. Because at least 20 per cent of the business of the farmers' produce market is a retail business, which, in a large measure, would be lost to the farmers if the market is located in southwest Washington. This retail business amounts to more than $600,000 per year.

11. Because it would send through the Mall triangle and the Mall a lot of objectionable traffic.

12. Because the southwest area lacks in street-car facilities as compared with other sections of the city.

So we find embodied in this report of the minority of the House committee which dealt with the pending bill, conclusions of both the National Park and Planning Commission, and the United States Bureau of Efficiency adverse to the southwest site.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. There seems to be a dispute between the Senator from Virginia and the junior Senator from Maryland as to the number of civic bodies and organizations of the District of Columbia which are opposed to the southwest site. Can the senior Senator from Maryland enlighten the Senate about that matter?

Mr. BRUCE. I have already repeatedly called attention to the fact that no less than 55 civic organizations in the city of Washington have expressed their disapproval of the southwest site and asked that a site for the farmers' market be chosen north of Pennsylvania Avenue.

One of the associations which the Senator from Virginia cites as approving the southwest site is the Southwest Improvement Association. In other words, he lets us know that the Dutch have captured Holland. Of course, everyone down in the southwest portion of Washington and its environment favors the southwest site. That is natural enough. That is only human. But Senators who have any familiarity at all with the map of Washington do not require, it seems to me, any expert conclusion from any commission or administrative body to make up their minds that the southwest site is an entirely improper site for the farmers' market. There it is far away in the southern portion of the city, a mile—if I am not mistaken, though I do not know the exact distance—perhaps a mile and a half distant from Pennsylvania Avenue. Most of the fresh vegetable produce that comes into the city each day comes from the north and northeast, and if the southwest site should be selected as the site for the farmers' market, all the farmers would have to traverse the city and go down to its extreme southwest section in order to market their wares.

I think we ought to be able to discuss this question without any acrimony and even without any excessive enthusiasm. So far as I know there is no reason why the Senator from Virginia should feel any truly extraordinary interest in the result of this debate. Certainly there is no reason why I should. I am simply trying to discharge my duty as I see it to the people of my own State who have, it is needless to say, strong claims on my support of any proposition in which they may be so deeply interested as they are in the pending proposition.

But the fact is, that with the exception of such farmers as the Pennsylvania Railroad has been able by assiduous coaxing to bring into disapproval of this bill since its discussion last spring, all the farmers of Virginia, the District of Columbia, and Maryland who furnish Washington with fresh vegetable produce are opposed to the southwest site and are asking Congress to give its approval to some site north of Pennsylvania Avenue.

I hold in my hand at this time three telegrams which I received this morning and which seem to me very significant as indicating the extent of the popular opposition to the pending bill. First of all here is a telegram from the United Farmers Market Associations. I ask Senators to listen to it as showing what the farmers who bring fresh vegetable produce from day to day to the city of Washington desire as the site for the farmers' market:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 25, 1929.

Senator WILLIAM CABELL BRUCE,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Passage Stalker bill waste of public money. Violates will of public and the farmers serving Washington. Four hundred farmers signed up for new produce market now open at Fifth and K Streets NW. New site satisfactory to public and farmers.

UNITED FARMERS' MARKET ASSOCIATION,
By J. F. WATSON, McLean, Va., Secretary.

That is to say, these farmers, wearied with waiting for the selection of some site for the farmers' market, have now taken the bit into their own teeth and have gone to one of the sites north of Pennsylvania Avenue, to which they have always desired to go. They are at Convention Hall now, as I understand it, marketing their garden products. I have read the first telegram. The second is from H. A. Friday, and reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 26, 1929.

Fight hard to defeat Stalker bill. Farmers and customers will not patronize southwest site. Unjust expenditure of taxpayers' money.

H. A. FRIDAY.

The third telegram is from N. J. Ward, president Washington Branch, National League of Commission Merchants. He states:

The citizens of Washington are united in their opposition to Stalker bill; 55 citizens associations denounced it.

That confirms, of course, the statement that I have just made to the Senate, that 55 civic organizations of this city are opposed to the passage of the pending bill. The telegram continues:

The farmers will not patronize the southwest site under any conditions. We commission merchants are unalterably opposed to it. Why don't you do your duty to the people of Washington and defeat this bill?

Of course, the Washington branch of the national league is hardly justified in addressing such language as that to me, in view of the fact that I am doing everything in my power to defeat the pending bill. And that I propose to do until the end, bitter or sweet. So, with great respect to the Senator from Virginia, I think he overstates his case when he would have the Senate believe that a considerably body of public opinion outside of the southwest section of Washington and the railroad interests which cluster about the southwest site is in favor of the southwest site.

It is inconceivable that the owners or proprietors of hotels, restaurants, lunch rooms, boarding houses, or lodging houses would prefer the southwest site, which is remote from the places where their business transactions are carried on, to a site north of Pennsylvania Avenue, where the real business and social center of the city is. I have yet to see any convincing evidence that they are. It was really a source of astonishment to me when I recollect the facility with which signatures to petitions and remonstrances may be obtained that the Senator from Virginia has not been more successful in obtaining support for the southwest site.

Bearing in mind the fact that practically all the market-garden farmers are opposed to it, that 55 of the civic organizations of the city are opposed to it, and that the great majority of the residents of Washington generally, so far as I can judge, are opposed to it, it does seem to me that it was incumbent upon the Senator from Virginia to bring forward a most convincing list of signatures in favor of the southwest site. I submit that he has not done it and that the weight of the evidence in this case is in favor of the contention of the farmers.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the countless protests against the location described in the House bill convince me that the southwest site is almost as unpopular with the people of the District of Columbia as a Democratic candidate for office is with the people of West Virginia. [Laughter.] Since the people of the District have neither vote nor voice in their government, let us at least permit them to have a market site that will not subject them to unspeakable inconvenience. What could be fairer than the amendment that has been proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]? It simply requires that the chosen site shall be approved by those who ought to be best qualified to render an intelligent decision in the case.

As a member of the District Committee, I am convinced that 75 per cent of the people of Washington are unalterably opposed to the southwest site. In the circumstances, it would be an unpardonable outrage for the Senate to force that site upon them. Therefore, in a spirit of fairness to the people of the District of Columbia, let me urge the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned I am quite ready for a vote on the amendment, except that I wish to repeat that what purports to be a report of the National Park and Planning Commission read here is not a report of the National Park and Planning Commission, which has never acted on this subject, as the text of the record itself shows, but is a report made to the National Park and Planning Commission but never acted upon by that commission. What appears textually in the record was confirmed, as I stated a little more than an hour ago, by Mr. Frederick A. Delano, one of the outstanding members of the National Park and Planning Commission. How Senators can persist in the statement that the overwhelming sentiment of the District of Columbia is against the southwest site is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I served as a member of the Senate committee which examined into this matter, and the thing that impressed me was that which the Senator has just intimated, that the overwhelming sentiment of the community is in favor of the southwest site. It is the logical site; it is at the place where fish and other commodities are brought into the District. I certainly gained the impression from listening patiently through several long hearings that that was the sentiment of the community. There were certain selfish interests that talked about other locations in the city, but, so far as the citizens are concerned, the hotel men, the boarding-house keepers, and those who buy produce in the market, it seems to me that the sentiment was overwhelmingly in favor of the southwest site.

Mr. GLASS. It seemed so to me, and as concrete evidence of popular sentiment there was filed with the committee, as the Senator from New York will recall, a referendum on the subject of the market site, taken over a given period of time by a morning newspaper here, the Washington Post. The city editor of that newspaper certified to us that the vote was taken by the Post without prejudice to any site and was conducted in a perfectly impartial manner, all residents of the city being given an opportunity to register their choice. Of the nearly 30,000 votes cast in that referendum, 19,316 were cast for the southwest site; 9,440 were cast for the mid-city site; 59 for the Eckington site; and 82 for all other sites.

In view of that popular referendum—the only referendum of which we have any knowledge—how Senators may persist in saying that the popular sentiment of the District is against the southwest site is beyond my comprehension.

It is not material to the question whether the Bureau of Efficiency reported for or against the site, but, as a matter of record, I have given a true recital of what happened. After the House committee had overwhelminghly voted for this southwest site and reported in favor of it, an attaché of the Bureau of Efficiency reported to a minority member of the House committee his conclusions upon a review of the matter, which were adverse to the southwest site. The Senator from New York will recall that when Mr. Driscoll, of the District, representing various civic organizations, was before our subcommittee he made the explicit statement that those organizations voted for the mid-city site, the selection of which was precluded by the very resolution under which we were acting because its cost so far exceeded the amount of money authorized to be expended for a site. I asked Mr. Driscoll the particular question if the civic associations had determined the question as between the southwest site and some other site than the mid-city site, which he was advocating, what would have been the result, and he said it was problematic.

So that even the action of these associations, not against the southwest site but in favor of the impossible mid-city site, may be taken into consideration. It does not mean that they are opposed to the southwest site and in favor of this syndicated Patterson tract site which has caused all this trouble; but it means that if they could have their way they would select this mid-city site, which is precluded almost by the very text of the original bill of the Senate authorizing the purchase of a site for the market.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. GLASS. All right; let us vote, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER].

Mr. TYDINGS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DILL. What is the amendment?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to have the amendment stated before it is voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 6, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the acquirement of such site or any other site in lieu thereof shall be subject to the prior approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and the superintendent of markets, or a majority thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this amendment the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]; but I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I expect to vote. I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SCHALL (when Mr. SHIPSTEAD's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is seriously ill.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senators from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST and Mr. HAYDEN], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] are necessarily detained on official business.

Mr. STEPHENS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily detained from the Senate, attending the funeral of a friend. If present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—29

Bayard	Dill	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Blaine	Frazier	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Gerry	Oddie	Tydings
Broussard	Goff	Pine	Walsh, Mass.
Bruce	Hawes	Ransdell	Wheeler

So Mr. CAPPER's amendment was rejected.

[Mr. TYDINGS addressed the Senate but withheld his speech from the RECORD.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Bingham	Blease	Brookhart
Barkley	Black	Borah	Broussard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names and a quorum is present.

DAM OR DAMS IN NECHES RIVER, TEX.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, out of order, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5857) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a dam or dams in Neches River, Tex. I ask the attention of the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MAYFIELD] to the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 16612) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of dam or dams in Neches River, Tex., was read twice by its title.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, since the House bill just laid before the Senate is similar to the one reported by my colleague the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], I ask unanimous consent to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill and that it may be considered at this time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask whether the Senate bill has been reported from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It has been reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been reported from the Committee on Commerce by the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Is there objection to the request of the junior Senator from Texas to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16612) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of dam or dams in Neches River, Tex., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Neches Canal Co., Neches Water Co., Beaumont Irrigating Co., the city of Beaumont, Tex., or the city of Port Arthur, Tex., or any one or more of them, to construct a dam or dams across the Neches River, at points suitable to the interests of navigation, above the city of Beaumont, Tex.: Provided, That the work on such dam or dams shall not be commenced until the plans therefor have been filed with and approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army: And provided further, That this act shall not be construed to authorize the use of such dam to develop water power or generate hydroelectric energy.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 5857 will be indefinitely postponed.

ST. CLAIR RIVER BRIDGE, PORT HURON, MICH.

Mr. VANDENBERG. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5847) authorizing Maynard T. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich., and I submit a report (No. 1977) thereon.

The bridge will connect Port Huron and Sarnia, Ontario. Immediate attention to the matter is very essential, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Michigan is that bill in the same terms as the bill which has heretofore been passed?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is in identical terms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce and improve the Postal Service, Maynard D. Smith, of Port Huron, Mich., his heirs, successors, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Clair River, so far as the United States has jurisdiction over the waters of such river, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between a point at or near the city of Port Huron, St. Clair County, State of Michigan, and a point at or near the city of Sarnia, Province of Ontario, Dominion of Canada, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and in so far as Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, or assigns, may act in the Dominion of Canada, subject also to the approval of the proper authorities thereof.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of Michigan needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State of Michigan, upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. Such bridge shall be constructed in accordance with the standard specifications adopted by the American Association of State Highway Officials. During the construction of such bridge all work thereon shall be subject to inspection and approval by the State Highway Department of Michigan.

SEC. 5. The said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, shall not encumber said bridge by the issue of stocks, bonds, notes, mortgages, debentures, or other evidences of indebtedness in an amount which, including all previous encumbrances, whether retired or still outstanding, shall at any time exceed in the aggregate the cost as reported to and determined by the Secretary of War in accordance with section 8 hereof. Not less than two-thirds of all encumbrances or securities other than preferred stock issued against said bridge shall be first mortgage bonds, and not more than one-third may be debentures. None of said bonds issued against said bridge shall be sold for less than 92 per cent of their par value nor bear interest at a fixed rate in excess of 6½ per cent per annum. None of said debentures issued against said bridge shall be sold for less than 90 per cent of their par value nor bear interest at a fixed rate in excess of 7 per cent per annum. Any preferred stock issued shall be at par plus accrued dividend, shall represent value, and shall be entitled to cumulative dividends at not to exceed 7 per cent per annum.

SEC. 6. The proceeds from tolls charged for the use of such bridge shall be used: First, to pay the maintenance, repair, and operation costs; second, to pay dividends or interest on outstanding preferred stocks, bonds, notes, mortgages, debentures, or other obligations issued by the said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns; and third, 20 per cent of any funds then remaining shall be retained by the said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, and the other 80 per cent thereof shall be applied by said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, in the purchase and retirement in accordance with section 5 hereof of said bonds, debentures, preferred stock, or other outstanding obligations legally incurred against said bridge. At the close of the fiscal year, when all bonds, debentures, preferred stock, or other obligations legally incurred against said bridge shall have been retired in accordance herewith such bridge and the approaches thereto and all structures, property, property rights, and franchises, so far as the same are located within the United States, shall be conveyed by the said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, without cost or expense, to the State of Michigan or to such municipality or agency of the State of Michigan as the legislature of said State may designate, and, so far as the same is situated within the Dominion of Canada, shall be conveyed, without cost or expense, to the Dominion of Canada or to such Province, municipality, or agency thereof as the Dominion of Canada may designate; and all right, title, and interest of said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, therein shall then cease and determine. After said outstanding obligations of the said Maynard D. Smith have been retired, said 80 per cent of the net earnings shall be held by said Maynard D. Smith, and half thereof shall be turned over to the State of Michigan, or its designated municipality or agency, and half to the Dominion of Canada, or its designated municipality or agency, at the same time as the bridge is turned over. The rates of toll, if any, shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. If said bridge shall not have become the property of the State of Michigan and the Dominion of Canada, or such agencies as may be authorized by them, in accordance with the provisions of this section, within 20 years after the date that it is completed and formally opened to traffic, the said State of Michigan and the Dominion of Canada, or such agencies as may be authorized by them, shall have the additional right at any time thereafter to acquire said bridge by purchase and retirement, at par plus accrued interest or dividends, of the legally authorized obligations then outstanding against same.

SEC. 7. The said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, shall keep an accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the bridge, the daily traffic, and the tolls collected, and shall annually submit to the State Highway Department of Michigan and to the Department of Public Highways of the Province of Ontario a sworn itemized statement showing the traffic, the tolls collected, the maintenance, repair, and operation costs, the net earnings, interest, and dividend payments, and the stock, bonds, notes, mortgages, debentures, or other obligations retired during the preceding fiscal year. The State Highway Department of Michigan and the Department of Public Highways of Ontario shall have access at any time to all records, files, and books of the said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns. The mayor of the city of Port Huron, State of Michigan, and the mayor of the city of Sarnia, Province of Ontario, Dominion of Canada, ex officio, shall be entitled to receive notice of and attend meetings of the board of directors of any company or corporation now existing or hereafter organized and having the control and operation of said bridge.

SEC. 8. The said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the Highway Department of the State of Michigan a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches; the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real or other property; interest during construction; and the actual financing costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the total of said items. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the Highway Department of the State of Michigan shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs, and determine the accuracy of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual costs of constructing and financing such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction and financing thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the costs of the construction and financing of the bridge shall be conclusive for all purposes mentioned in this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake. A report of the maintenance, repair, and operation costs of said bridge shall be submitted by the said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, at the end of each 6-month period to the State Highway Department of Michigan and to the Department of Public Highways of the Province of Ontario, Dominion of Canada. If any class of expenditures therein is disapproved by said highway departments, or either of them, such class of expenditures shall not thereafter, without approval, be an obligation payable out of the proceeds of tolls collected for the use of such bridge. Reconstruction or betterment costs in excess of $10,000 in any fiscal year must be submitted to and be approved as necessary and reasonable by the State Highway Department of Michigan and the Department of Public Highways of the Province of Ontario prior to incurring the expenditures therefor, and all betterment and reconstruction costs, duly approved if such approval is required, and actually made, may be added to the cost of the bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War in accordance with the provisions of this section, and in order to meet the cost thereof additional obligations or encumbrances not in excess of the amount approved for such reconstruction and betterments actually made plus necessary financing costs, not exceeding 10 per cent, may be issued against said bridge.

SEC. 9. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same, subject to the terms and conditions of this act, as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 10. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FARMERS' PRODUCE MARKET

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing the acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes.

[Mr. TYDINGS addressed the Senate but withheld his speech from the RECORD.]

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I think a quorum ought to be present to hear what the Senator is saying about this matter. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum, if the Senator will yield for that purpose.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield, provided I may continue after a quorum has been obtained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edwards	King	Shortridge
Barkley	Fess	McKellar	Simmons
Bayard	Fletcher	McMaster	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN SYSTEM

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, on January 28 and 30 and February 2 and 11 I submitted certain articles in reference to the farm loan bank investigation. I now submit certain other articles, and ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

[From the New Republic, New York, February 20, 1929]

SO THIS IS FARM RELIEF FINANCE!

HOW THE POLITICIANS BETRAY THE FARMERS

By Gertrude Mathews Shilby

The United States is in banking up to its ears. Losses running into many millions of dollars have occurred in Federal intermediate credit banks, capitalized by the Government, and the farmers' own land banks, operated but not owned by the Government. Yet repeated demands to investigate these losses have been sidetracked in Congress. Senator HOWELL (Republican) entered a resolution in 1924, a Treasury auditor having previously testified that eight hundred and eighty millions in farmers' land bank funds had escaped Treasury audit, and proof having appeared that the Federal Farm Loan Board had set up an account with moneys detached from these funds in a private Washington bank, disbursing some $37,000 over one signature without vouchers or receipts. No action was taken, although, according to Treasury analysts, this Federal board possesses dangerous power through its dual functions of management and supervision, a condition which is inconsistent with safety.

Last spring, as a result of known losses of one million in the Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia, S. C., and other unannounced losses in the farmers' land banks, and also the private joint-stock land banks (all three are supervised by the Federal Farm Loan Board), Senator BLEASE (Democrat) demanded investigation in that district, which includes Florida, Georgia, and the Carolinas.

The president of two of the Columbia banks, the Intermediate and the Farmers' Land Bank, was H. C. Arnold, whose qualifications for the responsibilities of banking appear slight. He had formerly been deputy warden of the Atlanta Penitentiary. The two first-mentioned banks, run by the same board, have assets of $80,000,000. The Senator's resolution was pigeonholed, after the Farm Loan Board had defended Arnold before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, and certain new appointments were made—but late in 1928 the board accepted Mr. Arnold's resignation.

Senator BLEASE renewed his demand at the beginning of the current session, citing the fact that losses in the farmers' land banks would run to millions, mentioning an alleged confession made by Arnold two years ago, as well as a defalcation for which one employee had been sent to jail, two unexplained suicides of cashiers, and other embarrassing incidents. Senator CARAWAY, complaining that Arkansas farmers could not get loans, offered to support the resolution if it were broadened to include the St. Louis district. WHEELER, of Montana, made a similar offer if the Spokane district were covered. On January 28, the broadened resolution was introduced, including the whole system and the Federal Farm Loan Board.

The inquiry is now more important than ever, because of a recent attempt by politically appointed executives of the land banks to shift the burden of liabilities to the farmer-stockholders. The law is based on mutual aid. In the past, the banks holding the assets have, as the act stipulates, borne the losses, distributing them among associations. This is reasonable; one area may be prosperous, one depressed; but all pull together.

In December some four hundred associations in the Berkeley district were asked to sign an agreement, of dubious legality, by which each association was thereafter to assume its own losses. At first glance this seems perhaps mere accounting. But in practice it invites dangerous consequences. Farmers belonging to financially embarrassed associations may soon find themselves facing bankruptcy. Each farmer is compelled to buy stock in the land bank to 5 per cent of the amount he borrows. His stock has double liability. If the association he must join gets into hot water, members can be compelled to pay 10 per cent of the amount of their loans. This is enough, when farm incomes are low, to ruin many. California raisin growers are suffering from depression.

One association refused to sign this agreement because its losses would be increased twelve fold, and for years it had borne its share of common losses. Other associations were misled by plausible representations, and gave up their legal birthright.

Attorneys for the several banks and the Federal board conferred on this plan and are understood to have authorized a standard type of agreement which all banks are to persuade their associations to sign. Why do they advise this? Presumably because, if the present huge losses of the banks were transferred to the associations, whose books nobody except inside examiners ever see, the books of the banks would be clear. The financial statements of the banks might once more be miraculously improved, under Eugene Meyer's régime, as they were by the sudden reversal of policy in estimating assets adopted last March. Investors might be inveigled into buying bonds more liberally. The figures would appear to justify continued political control. And the losses would, in effect, be concealed.

Yet this procedure is so certain to check the growth of the system, if it does not cause its gradual death, that one wonders where the idea originated in the political-financial community. Mutual aid is practically abandoned. Lone handed, instead of cooperatively, the associations must fight out their battles.

How can embarrassed associations persuade new farmers to take their loans from the system when associations with delinquencies and losses may not distribute dividends? Why should farmers join, purchase stock with double liability and the added risk of political management, when loans are easily available elsewhere at only slightly higher interest? If associations have no hope of canceling losses out of the gains of new business, and farmers everywhere become frightened when certain stockholders are called upon to meet their liability, the system will fall into disuse. To be sure, it can be kept nominally alive for some years—that is, jobs can be saved. But as soon as it becomes inactive, interest rates on mortgage loans will inevitably rise. Are administrators unaware of these implications? The pending resolution is highly important.

There are plenty of figures available to justify the claim that the farm-loan system is sound in theory. But figures are not enough. Men and farmsteads are involved, and their protection requires a thorough investigation to discover what old principles and new safeguards should be invoked. Government bureaucracies, operating any business, have well-known faults. And in the handling of huge sums of money for lending these faults become magnified. We have not yet forgotten the disaster of the Bank of the United States. Our modern rural-credit systems multiply the unhappy chances of that early venture a millionfold. Why, then, does not Congress investigate?

Politics!

Since political appointees control the raising of $1,300,000,000 to finance the farmers, the allocating of this money geographically, and the lending of it in small sums, many fat perquisites have grown up, which render this huge land-bank machine a new dollar force in American politics. Some of the hidden emplacements are as unsuspected by the public as those for German World War guns. In political hands insidious capacities have been developed. The whole machine is out of the control of the farmer stockholders, whose money is being spent by officeholders, whose farmsteads—worth two or three billions—are pooled as the basis for credit, and whose very independence may prove to be at stake. Burdened with debt, subject to policies which may be merely the result of incompetence, and with recourse only to Congress, which has so far proved insensitive to appeal, where do the farmers come out? Or do they?

Considering the powers of the machine which raises the funds. The Federal land banks issue bonds two or three times a year—subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board—to be sold to the general public. Valuable privileges, of course, inhere in the control of the sale of these securities. For 11 years one syndicate of investment houses has had exclusive, preferential control. The members of this syndicate include the National City Co.; Harris, Forbes; the Guaranty Trust; Lee, Higginson; Brown Bros.; and Alexander Brown & Sons, of Baltimore.

An Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, C. G. Dewey, has testified that the rate of interest on these bonds is developed by these investment houses underwriting the bond sale. The law automatically fixes the rate of interest paid by farmers for their loans at 1 per cent higher than the rate paid to investors for use of their money; therefore the syndicate has the power to develop the farmers' interest rate. Furthermore, the syndicate influences, if it does not determine, the amount and time of issue of these bonds. To maintain the supposed nation-wide distribution, it has organized a secondary syndicate. Membership in this subsidiary is never divulged nor is any account given of the sales made by it. But the first and second syndicates together have held a virtual monopoly of the bond sale. The Federal land banks and their fiscal agent have sold directly a very small percentage. Outside houses must secure bonds, if customers want them and any are available, from syndicate members. Thus the syndicate has enjoyed a virtual mastery of the terms, and the amount and time of funds allowed to flow through the farmers' system: this is contrary to the intent of the law, which granted the bonds tax-exempt to help farmers secure the best terms, the lowest interest, the amounts they needed, and independent control of their own financial arrangements.

The financial credit community may, as H. G. Wells suggests, have no mind. But certainly its behavior, when it is deemed necessary to sustain interest rates, indicates that at least it has instinct—overpowering instinct. Presumably, the whole banking world opposed the farm loan act for the reason that, if nonprofit or cooperative banks succeeded in lowering the farmers' interest rates, other groups than farmers might demand equal privileges, including tax exemption, from Congress.

And when the act passed, despite this opposition, it was surely not wholly accidental that the first political appointees were men who, as the first annual report shows, had no conception of the character of cooperative credit. In organizing, they laid down policies which to-day tend to prevent stockholder control of even the local farm-loan associations.

The problem of selling these bonds called for genuine ability. Mr. Griswold, of Alexander Brown & Sons, saw financial advantages in this job; obviously, if the bonds were properly introduced, their sale might run to hundreds of millions, and the commissions, although low, would at least guarantee a steady business. Financiers, once convinced, displayed tardy patriotism. Exclusive, preferential control was granted. Perhaps no one, at that time, could have dreamed all that this might one day mean.

But observe what has happened. The law contemplated the widest possible distribution of stockholders among small investors (hence the small denominations of bonds), and a method of distribution that would make these securities available continuously.

Instead, the sale has been periodic; large customers of the syndicate took most of the offerings; there has been a narrow distribution among corporations and individuals with incomes in the higher tax registers. Since these bonds are tax exempt, it is possible for such buyers, as Eugene Meyer has testified, to save 13½ per cent on their income taxes. Efficiently enough, the syndicate has sold twelve hundred millions of land-bank bonds, yet certainly the law did not contemplate that income-tax evaders should be able to get them easily, while small investors, unless they happened to be syndicate customers, obtained them only by special effort.

For many years this exclusive arrangement between the banks and the syndicate was maintained without contracts, first by the Federal board, and later by the fiscal agent, Charles E. Lobdell, former farm loan commissioner, who resigned December 31, 1928. The control of this vast business was left to personal agreements, awarded by political appointees. Were Treasury certificates or Government bonds disposed of in this manner, bitter criticism would be provoked, no matter how reliable the firms which benefited. And criticism is no less deserved here, for, under this system, the Government has assumed somewhat the position of a trustee toward the farmers' banks. What redress, without legal contracts, have stockholders in case of error or dishonesty? Without the taking of competitive bids for the privilege of handling such bond-sale contracts, how do stockholders, or the board, know that the distribution could not be made cheaper or the money secured elsewhere at lower cost?

Active hostility to this system still flourishes in various quarters of the banking world, notably, of course, among the old-line mortgage group. It appears to be startling news, however, that the leading rival of the primary syndicate, Kuhn, Loeb & Co., has, from the first, consistently refused to sell farm-loan bonds. Presumably this boycott is shared by houses sympathetic in financial policy, or otherwise allied, to Kuhn, Loeb. That firm "does not advise Federal land-bank bonds" for investors. Its heads have never believed in the principles of the system. Since they can scarcely be held less patriotic than the "Morgan group," why this disbelief? Is it merely a coincidence that they do not participate in the primary syndicate?

It can now be clearly seen that the fiscal policies approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board have left the stockholders in a position of helplessness. Yet the officeholders, who let out the bond-selling privileges, have seemed satisfied, provided there was no danger of losing their jobs. The investment firms who secured exclusive, preferential control have been content. Neither wished the contractless understanding to be disturbed; for what might not happen if the stockholders took over the management? In considering what did happen to the stockholders, these facts must not be lost sight of. It is ever interesting to reflect on the contrast between the congenital distrust of farmers shown by politicians and the pathetic trust of farmers in the Government, whatever its representatives.

For four years political administrators fended off trouble. By 1919 farmer-stockholders of the banks were entitled to elect the directors of most of their district land banks and to begin managing them. These directors, a clear two-thirds majority, were to set fiscal policy, including that for bond-sale arrangements, subject to the Federal Farm Loan Board's approval. Yet no elections were called. When the farmers and their organizations investigated, they discovered that during the war an amendment had been slipped through which deprived stockholders of the right to operate their own banks. When the Treasury, anxious to keep farm-loan bonds out of the way of Liberties, had secured power to buy a hundred millions of Federal land-bank securities, a clause had been inserted providing that the temporary boards of the banks—all political appointees—should remain in office as long as the Treasury held any land-bank bonds.

Dissatisfaction became acute, and the Federal board realized that new action was necessary. Amendments were prepared, introduced, and effectively supported before the House depriving the stockholders permanently of their clear majority control, substituting a camouflage of fifty-fifty control by which the farmers were to elect three members, and the Federeal board to appoint four, to each district land-bank board.

To assure the enactment of this provision, another neat device was employed: A conference committee slipped this rewriting of the farm loan act, which the Senate had not had a chance to consider, between two bills which had already passed both Houses. The head of the conference committee, Senator McLEAN, on reporting the compromise measure, omitted to inform the Senate of the real import of Title III. Undiscussed and unread, the measure advocated by the Farm Loan Board became law. According to Senator FLETCHER, its real effect was a quasi confiscation of farmers' property rights in the land banks. It left these stockholders the only owners of enterprises in the United States who had no control of their own concerns, a right declared by the Supreme Court to be vested in the ownership of stock. At last, after six years free from disturbance by stockholders, the first elections of directors were held—but became the source of fresh grievances, because of indefensible redistricting and electioneering methods countenanced by the board.

What a perversion of good intentions! Congress, benignly wishing to help agriculture, had granted a great liberty, by which farmers were to gain the leverage of credit. Politicians seized this power. Financiers gained and held prized privileges, which counteracted the good that real leverage might have achieved for the farmers. Congress, in short, having thoughtfully given, carelessly took away, and the stockholders now find themselves practically incapable of disturbing appointees or affecting fiscal policies.

The financiers develop the interest rate. Political administrators deflate land values through the very land banks themselves in tune with the prevalent conviction that prices must go down. As a result, many farm families lose their farmsteads, which are their only means of livelihood. It is a national situation; but can the political-financial community be investigated?

Meanwhile, there is another ugly aspect of the matter: The amount of bonds sold to provide funds to lend through this system has materially decreased year by year since 1923. In 1927 some eighty million dollars (as against $225,000,000 in 1923) were actually loaned by land banks to farmers. Applicants in all sections of the country were in desperate need of large loans at the lowest possible interest, but many of them could not be supplied. This was precisely what Senator CARAWAY complained of in his own bailiwick.

Now, consider certain parallel facts: As these funds diminished year by year the joint stocks steadily outloaned the Federals. Mr. Melvin E. Traylor, head of the American Bankers' Association, is heavily interested in joint-stock land banks. In fact, the whole system competes with the Federals. With the farmers' own system slowed up, the private joint stocks had a free hand to get more business. Their rates, of course, are higher.

When questioned concerning the apparent limitation of the Federal land banks' issue and sale of bonds, members of the Farm Loan Board have evasively suggested that the saturation point for the sale of land-bank securities on the market had perhaps been reached.

But this was not the case in 1927, when the farmers only got 82,000,000; for 177,000,000 were actually sold. The other ninety-odd million were used to buy back from the Treasury and retire the bonds bought during the war.

Why, with farm distress still prevalent, should the administration have been moved to sell out? If the handsome figures provided by the banks and the Federal board have been honest, why should the Government have withdrawn while agriculture was admittedly still in need of every help it could get? Had the Government held on, the farmers might have secured at least that 90,000,000 at a low interest. Who advised the Government to unload? What apprehension prompted it—or was this, too, merely a case of muddling through?

The Federal Farm Loan Board, of which Eugene Meyer has for 18 months been the head, must approve the fiscal policies of the Federal land banks and Federal intermediates. It must approve every issue of joint-stock securities. Will this limitation of good-term credit to farmers go on? Will the recovering joint stocks again outloan Federals? Will exclusive, contractless, secret agreements govern the sale of farmers' land-bank securities?

It is rumored that more money is to be spent in advertising Federal land-bank bonds. Will the new arrangements, made by whoever takes over the fiscal agent's duties, continue to feed Wall Street and starve Main Street? The first step to be desired is independence for the stockholders of the Federal land banks, and the restoration to them of the once guaranteed, and certainly deserved, control of their own credit pool.

NO TAXES ON GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

The Supreme Court of South Dakota has just ruled that farms taken over by that State's rural credits board are tax exempt. This, of course, is in line with established practice, for no taxes are ever paid on either city, county, State, or National property.

JUST LIKE FEDERAL FARM-LOAN SYSTEM

It might be well, however, for advocates of governmental operation of various projects to be reminded of this fact and to have pointed out to them that each step in this direction means higher taxes for property that is privately owned.

TAXPAYERS FOOT THE POLITICIAN'S BILL

Practically every penny of governmental funds comes from taxation and the money for the construction of Government-owned barges, elevators, etc., would come out of the pockets of taxpayers just as surely and as definitely as would money for the construction of jails, courthouses, State capitals, or new buildings for the various departments in Washington. Furthermore, Government ownership automatically removes the land, buildings, boats, etc., from the list of property that may be taxed, thus adding to the burden on that which remains.

WOULD IT WORK?

Senator SMOOT is reporting that President-elect Hoover is against the equalization-fee principle for the relief of agriculture, and the expected plan of salvation consists in stabilizing the markets through the use of Government funds.

Through the backing of the United States Treasury much wheat, corn, cotton, tobacco, and a hundred other products could be temporarily taken off the markets. Such a procedure, however, would not permanently remove a pound of any one of them from the channels of trade. Buyers would naturally know what was being done and would govern their bids and their purchases accordingly.

Taking a hundred million or even a billion dollars' worth of our agricultural products off the market in this way might, of course, produce a shortage and thus temporarily bring about higher prices. Eventually, however, they would have to be sold at the supply and demand level, and in the meanwhile they would be "eating their heads off" through deterioration, storage charges, insurance, vermin infestation, etc.

MORE POLITICAL BUNK HANDED OUT

Representative LETTS, of Iowa, in the recent discussion of a bill introduced by him during the last session of Congress, which provides for Government construction and operation of warehouses and elevators on the Mississippi River above St. Louis, said:

"I admit that it puts the Government in business, a thing not to be desired, and yet if the Government is justified in owning and operating a barge line, it is justified in carrying on another business which is necessarily an auxiliary to it."

POLITICIANS KNOW BETTER—WHY NOT ACT INTELLIGENTLY?

In the statement quoted there is again emphasized the point we have frequently made in discussing the subject of the Government in business. Practically every Member of Congress who proposes anything of this character, prefaces its introduction with the remark that he is definitely opposed to having the Government engage in the numerous activities that have, from time to time, been proposed, but that "this one is different."

As to the specific proposal to have the Government own and operate elevators along the Mississippi, why not have them also along the Missouri, the Ohio, the Tennessee, the Columbia, and a hundred other navigable streams as well as along the Great Lakes and our various barge canals? And then why stop with having the Government simply operate these elevators?

WHY NOT WHOLESALE SOCIALISM?

Wouldn't it be equally logical to have the Government buy and sell the grain, and then to mill it and finally to bake our bread for us? We all buy bread and the most of us would like to be able to regularly purchase a good pound loaf for a nickel.

Of course we are all human and if we think the Government could engage in this activity or that one, with profit to us, we are naturally for it. We see the direct benefit and give the matter no further thought.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD, TOO!

The most of us vividly recall what a tremendously costly experiment governmental operation of the railways during the World War turned out to be. Many of us know that we are paying, through increased taxes, for the operation of the merchant marine and some of us know that we are similarly contributing to the Alaskan Railroad and to the Federal Barge Line.

POLITICIANS JUGGLE FACTS TO SUIT THEIR OWN CASE

The trouble is, however, that we do not know how much our contribution really amounts to in the aggregate for all of these governmental activities, and because we do not know, we fail to appreciate the real size of the burden.

YOU CAN'T PASS THE BUCK—YOU PAY

Perhaps the average business man thinks he is passing all of this burden on to his customers, but as one of this country's 120,000,000 ultimate consumers, he is paying his share just as the rest of us are.

We pay some of it in everything that we eat, everything that we drink, and everything that we wear. Some of it is included in our bills for heat, light, and power, some in what we pay for transportation, and some of it is even included in the price paid for the casket in which we are finally laid away.

IT MEANS RUIN TO PRIVATE BUSINESS

Furthermore, every encroachment of the Government means trouble and perhaps ruin for private business with which it comes into competition. With its almost limitless resources and with no necessity for making a profit, the Government can soon put the most powerful private enterprise out of business if Congress or any of the administrative departments so decree it.

JOB JUMPERS MULTIPLY UNDER POLITICAL MANAGEMENT

Another danger arises from the necessary increase in governmental employees. It is conservatively estimated that about 1 out of every 10 of our inhabitants is now either directly or indirectly dependent upon some branch of government, either city, county, State, or National, for support.

The private enterprises in which the United States is already engaged have added thousands of men and women to governmental pay rolls. The proposed operation of elevators along the Mississippi and the Missouri would not only add thousands more but it would also put the country permanently into their operation as well as the operation of the barge line.

The people living along these streams would doubtless be glad to have continued operation of the barge line by the Government, for that would mean lower rates for them. As 75 per cent of our total population must always depend upon the railroads, however, the plan would mean higher transportation charges for three-fourths of our people, and they would also have to pay their share of the increased taxes thus made necessary.

The whole problem is a tremendously big one which has apparently been given but little thought, except perhaps by those who would be benefited, and the time for the others to "put on their thinking caps" is at hand.

GOVERNMENTAL EXPENSES

Figures made public by the Treasury Department show that for the first half of the fiscal year 1929 there was an increase of more than $111,500,000 in governmental expenses.

POLITICS IN THE FARM LOAN SYSTEM

By Gertrude Mathews Shelby

The phrase "politic economy"—Professor Soddy's description of unscientific current attempts to regulate economics through politics—might have been coined to fit certain functions of our farm-loan policy. Consider the extraordinary powers of the land-bank system, which parcels out from one to two hundred million dollars a year in loans to farmers. The operation of these banks requires some 2,000 persons, exclusive of joint-stock bank positions; the total number of employees has not been made public. Yet none of these 2,000 places enjoys the protection of civil service. Certainly there is no other plum tree of patronage in our Government that is so tempting, with the exception of post offices, and post offices lack the attraction of funds to distribute.

By the farm loan act the President is empowered to put this system under the classified service. "The exception of the Federal Farm Loan Board from the rules of classified service is indefensible," says Mayers, an authority on the subject, in his book The Federal Service. "Nothing regarding the field forces offers any reason for modifying this characterization. Should an appointment to such a position as that of appraiser be made for political reasons, the appointee would be peculiarly subject to improper influence, a danger particularly to be guarded against in this service."

In his acceptance speech Herbert Hoover said: "Our civil service has proved a great national boon. Appointive office, both north, south, east, and west, must be based solely on merit, character, and reputation in the community in which the appointee is to serve." As President, will Mr. Hoover deny to farmers who own the stock of the Federal land banks, and to taxpayers, who paid in the Treasury funds used to capitalize the intermediate-credit banks, the benefit of this great national boon?

Nothing less than an Executive order will protect the country from certain obvious abuses of political banking. Without the maintenance of the strictest standards of selection, based on competitive examinations, lame ducks are sure to be consigned to any system as a haven—witness the old Pensions Bureau.

In no service are safeguards against this sort of thing more important than in this greatest of all our banking systems. Possible loans influenced by political considerations, and even waste merely due to incompetence, are hazardous alike for investors, stockholders, and citizens. It should be remembered that obligations are outstanding to the extent of $1,250,000,000, described by the Supreme Court as "Government instrumentalities" and sold under that guaranty.

Yet, in some degree, nepotism has existed in the land-bank machinery from the first. Members of the Farm Loan Board, of the district land banks' boards, of the Senate, and even a President have obtained jobs for relatives and friends who were not qualified by previous experience for the sort of work to which they were assigned.

Patronage is now, to be sure, more circumspect that when President Harding put his cousin, a retired minister, into the Farm Loan Bureau as reviewing appraiser. Nor is it quite so crude as when Lobdell, former farm loan commissioner, admitted that his two sons, a cousin, an old friend, his wife's former dressmaker, and the dressmaker's nephew were all on the pay roll. In 1926 the Federal board gravely passed resolutions discouraging nepotism in the 12 land banks, which employ some 800 persons. Some men were dropped, among them the cousin of a certain bank president. Certain others not related to present officials upon the circumstances of whose appointments time had laid a covering hand were retained; among them the treasurer of a great bank. The fiscal agency for the banks appears not to have been affected by these resolutions. Until the end of 1928, Lobdell headed that organization, with a salary of $25,000 a year, which would not be possible under classified service. The approval of all his policies by the Federal board was necessary. One of the young Lobdells was employed in this agency until the summer of 1928.

The Federal board itself would also seem to have been an exception to the rule. It can not claim a clean record while it remains true, as it does, that not even the best-qualified mortgage banker could get a job as president of a Federal land bank unless he is backed by senatorial influence. Examples of this sort of nepotism are not lacking. The son-in-law of one of Mr. Hoover's most important advisors is head of a great division of the Federal bureau. His rise in the system has been amazingly rapid, and he now enjoys the same salary as the Secretary of the Treasury. He came to the system quite green. His ability to handle the political phases of his job is unquestioned, but certain stockholders feel very differently about his competence as a judge of risks. Again, the nephew of a member of Mr. Hoover's Cabinet has long been an examiner in the system. Removing him on the ground of alleged incompetence was considered, but the idea was abandoned on the ground that it would be "politically inexpedient."

Until two years ago, when the Treasury began to name examiners and other appointees to the Federal bureau, these places had been considered senatorial patronage for both Republican and Democratic Members of the upper House. The political appointees who served as examiners were either so few or in some cases so conspicuously incompetent that improvement in the situation was imperative. The Treasury has recently required examiners to pass tests, but the freedom of appointment is still sufficient to allow plenty of loopholes for the unqualified person with the right sort of influence.

Appraisers are as important as examiners, and their incompetence has been terribly expensive. Eugene Meyer, testifying before a congressional committee, stated that the troubles of the system were by no means all attributable to the agricultural depression. "When the receiver of a bank says that a lot of loans were made in that bank as agricultural loans on lands that were agricultural lands—loans which never should have been made—that has nothing to do with agriculture," he said, and added: "It was enough of a factor to put one bank in receivership." He referred to the Spokane bank, but he also said that "I do not think the Spokane territory has any more or greater problems than the Berkeley territory or other territories." There has also been acute trouble in Columbia and St. Paul.

Berkeley's troubles, while the least of the four mentioned, illustrate well the conflict between politics and sound banking. The bank serves four States, California, Nevada, Arizona, and Utah. In the last named, several thousand loans "went bad." Foreclosures were made on farms worth, at the present conservative valuations, $500,000. This amount represented two-thirds of the Berkeley bank's land holdings as of six months ago. This disgraceful record of bad appraisal was made despite the fact that several of the appraisers who passed the loans were from Utah. It is impossible to avoid the question: How did such grossly incompetent appraisers get into the system? Did somebody exercise political "pull" on their behalf; and if so, who?

These loans were made despite the fact that three or four members of the Berkeley District Land Bank Board have always been from Utah; in 1928 there were four, which is a majority of the board. Two appraisers are to-day from Utah and pass on loans in that State. For some time a relative of a Utah Senator was district reviewing appraiser, and several years ago he was appointed to a post of authority in Washington. It is not surprising that Utah is credited with having more than her share of available funds to lend. Long ago the farm loan system abandoned the attempt to supply loans on every approved application. If there is not enough to go around—and there never is—the banks may reject applications outright or, perhaps, fail to grant enough money to satisfy the borrower. The money is unequally allotted between districts, according to alleged need; the banks then divide between States or parts of States. A powerful Senator may be a good go-getter; a large share loaned in his territory might mean votes, or even the difference between keeping and losing his seat. Perhaps he says nothing; if he has proved himself useful in Congress, to the board and the banks, it may not be unnatural for those in authority to allow a large quota of funds—of course, without favoritism—to his district. Or, perhaps, this little pig actually goes to market, regardless of others who get none. For he reasons that it may be useful to have appointed men to jobs in the money mart.

Now, State pride alone might be a factor in unjust distribution of money, possibly resulting later in losses. If so, with 48 proud States, heaven help the farmers who own these banks! Yet the method of making loans, with stockholders not in control and civil service lacking, shows no adequate protection against that sort of thing nor against possible political-spoils considerations. When a local farm-loan association recommends a loan, a Federal appraiser is sent to examine the land; he in turn recommends whether to reject the loan or, if to grant it, in what amount. The reviewing appraiser for the district then has his chance. Bank officials may rule out a specific loan or entire areas. But, if approved, applications are forwarded to Washington. The Farm Loan Bureau's reviewing appraisers make the final decision, subject to the approval of the board itself.

Similarly prejudiced appointees in the field force of appraisers on the bank's staff and in the Washington bureau might constitute a line-up which would effectively sidetrack farm-loan welfare. If such officeholders, who are not directly responsible to stockholders, happen to be grateful to politicians who have got them their jobs, is it not probable that sentimental or political considerations might affect both the division of funds between States and possibly also the granting of specific loans?

While loans on good lands were refused in California, asserts the California Farm Bureau Federation, Utah loans, on poorer lands, were generously granted; $15 more per acre was loaned by the Berkeley Bank in Utah than conservative joint stocks averaged. Certainly losses piled up. Of 199 risks judged by a Mr. Cardon, 5 per cent are said to have gone bad. His assistant, Hatch, reported in 1924, "* * * * it is undoubtedly true that we have loaned too much per acre." And J. W. Paxman, appraiser, also wrote, in 1924, regarding three specific Utah loans, of $5.13, $7.81, and $11.86 per acre, "The lands were once dry-farmed—at least, about 280 acres of them. They haven't been farmed in the past three years, and are of no value except for grazing. Such lands, fenced, would ordinarily sell for $3 to $5 an acre, but under present conditions it is very doubtful if a purchaser could be found who would give $1 an acre for them." Yet, in 1925, despite the separate reports of 1924 by Hatch and Paxman, the average loaned by the Berkeley Bank in Utah rose from $64 to $65 per acre.

If it were not for the division of places between the Republicans and Democrats, bad conditions could long ago have been greatly improved. But even now, when reform is proposed, some legislator is sure to run protesting to the party leader, saying, in effect, "We must keep still about this system—remember that there are a billion and a quarter of bonds out. And besides, I got So-and-so his place, and he must be protected."

As they have found themselves secure, the leaders of the land bank machine have become more aggressive. They have used their influence to affect legislation. The land bank presidents maintain a legislative committee to recommend congressional action. Members of this committee, whether in Washington, or at home in their banks, have developed means of pushing bills they favor and blocking those they fear—of course, in the name of the stockholders. Thanks to a number of Democratic appointees who are grateful to the administration for their daily bread and cake, the land bank machine seems to have been in an excellent position recently to pull the donkey's leg for the benefit of the Republican elephant. Certain Senators, appealed to by Democrats whose appointments they have indorsed, appear to stop or go as this legislative committee suggests. Consequently, bills which might correct glaring abuses are never reported, while frequently legislation adverse to stockholders' interest is enacted; or appointments are confirmed when nominees are unqualified. Bipartisan influence, amounting to party coalition in defense of the existing régime, has grown amazingly strong.

Furthermore, in various districts the land bank machine maintains federations of the key men of local associations, the secretary-treasurers. By the policy of the board and banks, these are usually not stockholders but outsiders, local business men.

If the legislative committee and the bank advocate or oppose certain action, it often happens that letters and wires pile up on the desks of certain committee members in Washington. Hearing from the boys in the associations back home, the Members naturally may be influenced in their decisions. The land-bank machine has used a shrewd technique to get what it wants from Congress, and the Federal board itself sometimes takes the lead.

Even while the amounts for lending have decreased, the expenses of this system have steadily swelled. To operate the Washington bureau the Federal Farm Loan Board levies assessments upon the banks—land, intermediate, and joint stocks—proportionately. Estimates must be submitted to the Director of the Budget and Congress appropriates, but since it is not taxpayers' money, Congress only in effect ratifies board action. For the operation of the Federal land banks—again no total figures are available—estimates bring the amount above $2,000,000 annually. It appears that the expenses exceed the legal amount of 1 per cent spread allowed for operation under this act. It is notably negligent of the Federal Farm Loan Board not to supply Congress and stockholders annually with all the needed figures by which the administrators' consistency with the law and with actual services rendered might be judged.

Mr. Hoover has farmers' and taxpayers' immediate relief, if not their ultimate protection, in his own hands. On March 5, if he wished, he could issue an Executive order. Besides his advocacy of civil service for appointees, he acknowledges agriculture to be our most urgent economic problem; he also deplores indifference to public corruption. Only less important than the farmer's income is his outgo for interest and amortization on his mortgages. To neglect this important phase of farm relief would expose Mr. Hoover's sincerity to challenge.

The greatest threat in the farm loan system, to farmers and citizens alike, comes in its management. The banks depend on the character and skill of the men who run them, and the character and degree of supervision exercised over their acts. The institution as it stands suffers from inherent weaknesses. With the exception of Indians, minors, and wards of the State, no groups is so helpless as the 500,000 farmers who turned for assistance to the land banks which were to have been their deliverance.

It is highly improbable that the board will recommend even that the Federal employees of the system should be put under civil service. Mr. Meyer has praised several recent appointments on the ground that men have been chosen who could not have been induced to take office at the rates of pay possible under civil service. Appointment has some advantages, in the hands of honest and competent men; but for a system such as this, handling colossal funds, the civil-service principle is unquestionably superior.

The basic remedy lies in taking the entire rural credit system out of politics. To be sure, this would not be a simple matter, since the Government owns the intermediate banks. If the Government is compelled to remain in the banking business, it might logically go further into business, buy out the farmers who own the Federal land banks, harmonize these banks with the intermediate, and attempt a really social control of credit, assuming all responsibility.

The other course is to pass Senator HOWELL'S pending bill to return the control and management of their own land banks to the stockholders. But to do that, without making good the losses which have occurred under political control, would be to hand the farmers another gold brick. Once they secured control, the stockholders could pay for the application of able minds to bank problems; with justice done, the farmers may still enjoy the advantages to be derived from liberalization of credit, advantages which they earned when they took the risk of pooling practically all their possessions in this great venture.

[Excerpt from letter of a director of a farm loan association, February 16, 1929]

STRANGLE SYSTEM OBJECT OF FARM LOAN BOARD

I have been much interested in the farm-loan system from its inception, partly because I am personally acquainted with its personnel. I believe the plan is a good thing for the farmers. I have followed with care all that has been mentioned in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and have come to the conclusion that there is a systematic attempt to strangle the system after it has been used for political purposes.

ONLY DEPENDABLE LACKEYS ARE NAMED

Associations of our State formed a federation last year to handle any problems that might arise. * * * The policy of the Farm Loan Board seems to be to appoint only men they can rely on to do their bidding as directors, appraisers, or field representatives, and hold these men responsible for any revolt of the associations.

ILLEGAL LIABILITY PROPOSED BY BOARD

The copy of the so-called agreement by associations and the Berkeley Bank is interesting. The associations may sign it, but they are foolish if they do, for while they now lose dividends, they would incur additional liability if they enter into this contract.

FARMER STOCKHOLDERS SHOULD ORGANIZE

My opinion has been for a long time that the only redress we (the stockholders) can expect to obtain will be by personal appeals to Members of Congress by their constituents.

LESS AND LESS LOANS AVAILABLE

In 1926 this association sent forward 30 applications. The bank granted 18.

In 1927 we submitted 47 and the bank granted 22.

In 1928 we sent in 19 and the bank granted 7.

In addition to the rejections appearing above the association had 4, 5, and 4 rejected for corresponding years.

I am trusting that the system may become of more benefit to the farmer, either by investigation or other action by Congress.

AN EXPERT SPEAKS THE TRUTH ABOUT FARM LOAN SYSTEM

James B. Morman, for years with the Farm Loan Board, in his book about the farm-loan system, published by Macmillan's, says:

"As a result of the political development of the Federal farm-loan system, it is without question the most gigantic spoils system in the United States. It is a runaway star in the rural-credits constellation. It is at present beyond the control of the Government and of Congress—an exploiter of the public as taxpayers and of the farmers as stockholders. * * * The enormous profits have been wrung from the small income of farmers and are being used to enlarge the bank accounts of political appointees who are thus enabled to clothe themselves in purple and fine linen and fare sumptuously every day while many of the farmer borrowers and their families are lacking in the simplest things required to maintain the standard of living of the poorest American home."

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE NEAR MOUNDSVILLE, W. VA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4778) authorizing the Moundsville Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at or near the city of Moundsville, W. Va., which were on page 3, line 10, to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten"; on page 6, after line 5, to insert:

SEC. 8. All contracts made in connection with the construction of the bridge authorized by this act and which shall involve the expenditure of more than $5,000, shall be let by competitive bidding. Such contracts shall be advertised for a reasonable time in some newspaper of general circulation published in the States in which the bridge is located and in the vicinity thereof; sealed bids shall be required, and the contracts shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. Verified copies or abstracts of all bids received and of the bid or bids accepted shall be promptly furnished to the highway departments of the States in which such bridge is located. A failure to comply in good faith with the provisions of this section shall render null and void any contract made in violation thereof, and the Secretary of War may, after hearings, order the suspension of all work upon such bridge until the provisions of this section shall have been fully complied with.

And on page 6, line 6, strike out "8" and insert "9".

Mr. NEELY. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

TETON NATIONAL PARK, S. DAK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4385) to establish the Teton National Park in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORBECK. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House, ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. NORBECK, Mr. NYE, and Mr. KENDRICK conferees on the part of the Senate.

EMPLOYMENT OF ENGINEERS AND ECONOMISTS ON RECLAMATION WORK

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4528) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to employ engineers and economists for consultation purposes on important reclamation work, which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "not to exceed three" and insert "five"; on page 1, lines 6 and 7, to strike out "on any project,"; and on page 2, line 1, to strike out "$3,500" and insert "$5,000."

Mr. MCNARY. In the absence of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], who is detained on account of illness and at his request, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

TRIBAL FUNDS OF INDIANS ON KLAMATH RESERVATION, OREG.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4517) appropriating tribal funds of Indians residing on the Klamath Reservation, Oreg., to pay expenses of the general council and business committee, and for other purposes, which was to amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the appropriation of tribal funds of Indians residing on the Klamath Reservation, Oreg., to pay expenses of the general council and business committee, and for other purposes."

Mr. MCNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF POSTMASTERS AND ACTING POSTMASTERS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5255) for the relief of present and former postmasters and acting postmasters, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That postmasters and acting postmasters are authorized, when in the judgment of the Postmaster General the needs and interests of the Postal Service require, to employ mail messengers and other postal employees in a dual capacity, or to assign extra duties to such mail messengers and other employees; and, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1763, 1764, and 1765 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 58, 69, and 70), compensation shall be paid to such mail messengers and other employees for such services if the total compensation actually paid for all services does not exceed $2,000 for any one fiscal year.

SEC. 2. The Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to (1) allow credit in the accounts of present and former postmasters and acting postmasters for payments made by them, prior to the date of the enactment of this act, to mail messengers, postal employees, and other employees of the United States employed in post offices contrary to the provisions of sections 1763, 1764, and 1765 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 58, 69, and 70), section 3850 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 52), and section 226 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, as amended (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 356); and (2) pay to such mail messengers, postal employees, and such other employees an amount equal to the sums refunded by them or deducted from balances due them prior to the date of the enactment of this act, under the laws referred to in subdivision (1) of this section.

SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. MOSES. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITION OF LANDS TO BOISE NATIONAL FOREST

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1577) to add certain lands to the Boise National Forest, Idaho.

Mr. MCNARY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MCNARY, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. SMITH conferees on the part of the Senate.

REGULATION OF NAVIGATION ON THE GREAT LAKES

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5095) to amend section 1, rule 3, subdivision (e), of an act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters, enacted February 8, 1895, as amended May 17, 1928, which was on page 1, line 7, after the figure "1928" to insert: "(U. S. C. title 33, sec. 252)."

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

FARMERS' PRODUCE MARKET

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing the acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am again going to appeal to the fairness of the Senate in the moment that I shall speak as to whether or not it is fairer to the people of Washington to support an amendment to the bill which will permit some impartial commission to make a survey of all of the sites and select the best one, rather than to take this one which, according to the way I see it, has no merit and very little, if any, official sanction from any source whatsoever. I shall prepare such an amendment as that in the hope that the fairness of the proposition will appeal to the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, there has been a great deal of interest taken by the farm people and by the business interests in the location of this market. I have a letter or two to which I wish to refer. One is on the letterhead of W. H. Harrison & Co. (Inc.), commission merchant, dated January 18, 1929, in which the writer says:

This letter is sent to you to protest against the passing of H. R. 8298 now pending before the Senate. This bill provides for the locating of a wholesale farmers' market in the southwest section of this city.

We, the undersigned business men of the city of Washington, who handle 85 per cent of the perishable food products shipped to this city and who are taxpayers in this community, protest against this legislation as being favorable to a few and unfavorable to a majority of the citizens of Washington. Realizing that we must move our business to make room for the Federal building program we made a complete survey of the situation, assisted by Mr. George B. Ford, vice president, Technical Advisory Corporation, and past president of the American City Planning Institute.

This analysis proved that a location nearer the center of population permitting more economical distribution would benefit the Washington public. Mr. Ford's report is available and will be furnished to you upon request.

I do not know that there is need to read the rest of the letter, but it is signed by apparently some of the biggest commission firms in the city, such as William H. Harrison Co., Thomas A. Cannon, W. Charles Heitmuller Co., N. J. Ward & Co. (Inc.), and others. It is signed by 16 commission firms who claim they handle 85 per cent of the perishable farm and vegetable products that come to the city of Washington.

Mr. President, it seems to me——

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to ask if he is aware of the fact that that is the Mr. Harrison who heads the real-estate syndicate which has an option on the Patterson tract on which he proposes to make money? Is not that the same Mr. Harrison?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not know about that, but the letter states that the tract known as the Patterson tract is one where provisions were made to get it after the hearings had been held on the so-called Stalker bill, and apparently it has nothing to do with this proposition at all.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, it has everything to do with it.

Mr. FRAZIER. I can not agree with the Senator on that point. I am frank to say that I think the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. has more to do with it than any real-estate firm.

Mr. President, I have a telegram signed by the United Market Farmers' Association. It is dated February 26, and reads:

Fight hard to defeat Stalker bill. Farmers and customers will not patronize southwest site. Unjust expenditure of taxpayers' money.

Mr. President, a number of delegations of farmers and representatives of farmers' organizations of Maryland and Virginia have called at my office in relation to this measure. From what I can understand from those farmers, who represent the bulk of the farmers bringing their produce to Washington for sale, in my opinion it will be impossible to force a market down in the southwest part of the city. The market of necessity must go farther north into the business part of the city. I think it would be an absolute waste of Government money and of the taxpayers' money to spend $300,000 for the proposed location of the market on the water front, where it will not be used by the bulk of the farmers who produce the products which sell on the market. The market should be located where the people will buy and where the merchants will buy, and not down on the water front.

I do not care to make any further statement except to say that I have a letter from the director of cooperative extension work in agriculture and home economics of the University of Maryland opposing the southwest site for the market; also a letter from N. J. Ward & Co. in opposition to the southwest site. It seems to me absolutely absurd to locate a market where apparently the bulk of the farmers who produce the products that will be sold there are in opposition to it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I desire to give notice that I shall offer a new amendment, reading as follows:

Provided, however, That the acquirement of such site or any other site in lieu thereof shall be subject to the prior approval of a commission composed of three persons appointed by the President of the United States.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that he was going to permit me to name them.

Mr. TYDINGS. I offered to do so, but the Senator let the opportunity pass without acceptance.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no; I accepted the Senator's proposition. [Laughter.] I ask for a vote on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I said I desired to serve notice that I intended to offer such an amendment. I have not as yet offered it.

Mr. GLASS. Then I suggest that we have a vote on the bill.

INVESTIGATION OF POWER COMPANIES

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there have been almost daily, when the Federal Trade Commission were in session investigating the alleged Power Trust, disclosures of vast importance in which the entire country would be interested if they understood what they were. I have had called to my attention some evidence adduced there recently, pertaining particularly to Alabama, which I think is exceedingly interesting in a national way.

I am about to read extracts from the Mobile (Ala.) Register, in which the headlines read:

Columns of two Alabama newspapers used at will in spreading propaganda. "News" issues are scorned by Register. Bradley's letter says Thompson papers did not print A. P. C. Bureau bulletins.

"A. P. C.," I take it, means the Alabama Power Co.

Advertiser-News used power company matter.

Montgomery and Birmingham dailies are branded as "unfailing mediums."

Reports sent officials.

Former propagandist says school superintendents were on mailing list.

That is under a Washington date line of January 10, and what I am reading now is a Washington dispatch:

(By Hubert Baughn, chief Washington bureau, register and associated newspapers)

WASHINGTON, January 10.—Among the exhibits which went into the record of the Power Trust investigation with Leon C. Bradley's testimony to-day was a letter which the former Alabama Power Co. propagandist wrote on April 22, 1924, to Gen. Walter E. Bare, Alabama manager of the Southern Bell Telephone Co., in which he divided the daily newspapers of the State—into two distinct groups—those which printed as editorial matter the power propaganda furnished by his bureau and those which did not. The letter emphatically placed the Mobile Register and its associated newspapers in the latter group.

That is, the State of Alabama—

That is, the Mobile newspapers did not print as editorial matter the propaganda sent out by Mr. Leon C. Bradley, whose testimony was being taken, and who is a propagandist of the Power Trust in Alabama. There will be some reference made to these Mobile newspapers later. I repeat, the two classes of those newspapers in Alabama were—

Those which printed as editorial matter the power propaganda furnished by his bureau and those which did not. The letter emphatically placed the Mobile Register and its associated newspapers in the latter group while the Montgomery Advertiser and Birmingham News were held up as unfailing mediums for the dissemination of Power Trust propaganda.

Bradley's letter to General Bare was a review of the activity of the propaganda bureau in sending out a so-called "news bulletin" once a week to the newspapers of the State.

USE PRACTICALLY NOTHING

"Among the larger dailies of the cities," it said, "the four Thompson papers use practically nothing from our bulletin."

As I understand—and I notice that both the Senators from Alabama honor me with their presence and attention, and if I am wrong, I would like to be corrected—as I understand, included in the four Thompson newspapers are these Mobile newspapers that have refused to publish the propaganda of the Power Trust. Am I correct about that?

Mr. BLACK. There are four Thompson newspapers—one in Mobile, one in Montgomery, one in Florence, and one in Sheffield.

Mr. NORRIS. The so-called Thompson newspapers referred to in this dispatch are the four newspapers printed in those four cities of Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I continue the reading:

The Montgomery Advertiser and the Birmingham News use it every week in their interview columns on the editorial page, crediting some to other people.

After leaving the witness stand—

The last statement I have read is a quotation from the witness, Mr. Bradley, who was their representative—

Bradley told the Register correspondent that the interview columns to which he referred were the News and Interview column in the Birmingham News and the Passing Throng of the Montgomery Advertiser.

Chief Counsel Healy, of the Federal Trade Commission, drew from Bradley the admission that about 6,000 copies of the propaganda bulletin were issued weekly, and that all county school superintendents of the State, all public libraries, and scores of State, county, and city officials were on his mailing list.

Although Healy put Bradley through a long and vigorous cross-examination, he overlooked to question him regarding the undercover activity of the power company in opposition to school bond issues submitted to the voters of Alabama soon after adjournment of the last session of the legislature. Bradley directed publicity for the interests which waged a bitter fight against the school-expansion program.

As I understand, in Alabama a bond issue was submitted to the people in order to secure funds to expand the educational system of the State, and the power companies, through the leadership of this propagandist, Mr. Bradley, took a very active part in opposition to the proposed expansion of the public schools.

In another column in the same newspaper there is an article written by Mr. Baughn, who is the chief Washington representative of the Mobile Register and associated newspapers, from which I read this:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 10.—How the Alabama Power Co. used the editorial columns of the Birmingham News and Montgomery Advertiser at will was related to the Federal Trade Commission in sensational testimony to-day by Leon C. Bradley, former director of the propaganda bureau of the Alabama wing of the Power Trust.

In a letter to Thomas W. Martin, president of the power company, Bradley reported in 1926 that he "did not even have to leave his office" to get Power Trust editorials in the Birmingham News and that during a 12 months' period no less than 75 propaganda items prepared by his bureau were published on the editorial page of the Montgomery Advertiser.

I ought perhaps to digress here to say—it is no news to the Members of the Senate, however—that in Alabama is located Muscle Shoals; this fight in the State of Alabama has clustered around the question of Muscle Shoals, and during the last 8 or 10 years that Muscle Shoals has been before Congress, the Alabama Power Co. has always been an active participant as well as having its correlated organizations, its subsidiaries, and other companies interlocking with it, constituting altogether the great Power Trust.

Bradley wrote Martin—

Remember, now, that Bradley was a representative of the Power Trust, the one who had charge of the propaganda and operated its bureau, and Martin was president of the Alabama Power Co.—

Bradley wrote Martin in the same letter that he was "constantly furnishing information and propaganda advantageous to the utilities, to newspapers, and members of the public-service commission" and that his bureau also served as a clearing house for propaganda issued by the National Electric Light Association. This letter, taken from the files of Bradley's office, was identified by him to-day and made a part of the record.

Bradley testified that his bureau spent $46,390 from October, 1922, to May, 1926. The Alabama Power Co. and the Birmingham Electric Co. were the principal contributors, but the Montgomery Light & Power Co., the Southern Bell Telephone Co., and the Alabama Water Co. were other contributors.

QUIZZED TWO HOURS

Robert Healy, chief counsel for the Trade Commission, examined Bradley for two hours and brought to light numerous propaganda activities of the power interests in Alabama. Bradley told of handling publicity for the power company for three weeks in the spring of 1927, when the company was seeking to gain control of the municipal light plant in Dothan. He said he wrote more than 100 articles and furnished them to the Dothan Eagle.

Here is a question from Mr. Healy, attorney:

"Were the articles published as advertising matter?" Healy asked.

"No; the Eagle wanted the power company to get the Dothan plant and were glad to print my articles as news items," Bradley answered.

Bradley admitted to Healy that the Dothan Eagle did not tell its readers that the "news items" were being paid for by the power company, but he said the other newspaper in Dothan, the Wiregrass Journal, "told the public about it the day after I started my series of articles."

SURVEY UNFINISHED

Bradley, when questioned regarding the activities of the power company in schools and colleges of the State, testified that the secret survey of textbooks which he started several years ago was never completed. He said he found "the situation was not as bad as it had been reported." Bradley said he knew nothing about the operation of the Alabama radio station formerly owned by the power company, but Healey sought to show that it had been used for propaganda purposes prior to its donation to Auburn in 1925. A letter to Healy from W. J. Baldwin, director of publicity for the power company, denied this.

Healy brought out that Bradley worked with C. A. Beasley, Washington lobbyist of the power company, on Muscle Shoals and kept up a running fire of propaganda throughout the State in favor of the power trust's bid. Bradley admitted he made use of certain newspapers in this campaign.

I wonder if Senators remember the contest that went on for quite a number of years, in which this activity on the part of the Power Trust in its efforts to control the action of Congress in regard to Muscle Shoals was manifested, and is still going on, I may say. I wonder if Senators have forgotten it. We did not always know where these things came from; we did not always know who the propagandists were; but, little by little, the investigation of the Federal Trade Commission is disclosing the identity of some of these men.

For instance, let me repeat, Healy brought out the fact that the activities of Leon Bradley, whose letter I am going to read and who was referred to in the article which I have read, were paid for, as he says in his testimony they were, by the power companies. We did not know about that. Most of the Senators are acquainted with Mr. Beasley, who, we understood, was friendly to the Alabama Power Co., and is one of its Washington representatives. We did not know of the assistance he was getting from the man who was heading the propaganda bureau down in Alabama in his efforts to defeat any action on the part of Congress that would retain in the people of the United States the title to that valuable property, built and constructed by the taxpayers' money, at Muscle Shoals; but this discloses it. This shows it.

The dispatch which I have just read referred to a letter that Mr. Bradley wrote to the president of the Alabama Power Co. I am going to read that letter. It is part of the files of the Federal Trade Commission in this investigation that has been going on. It is directed to Mr. Thomas W. Martin, president of the Alabama Power Co., Birmingham, Ala.

DEAR SIR: You will be interested in these two editorials from the Birmingham News of Saturday and Sunday.

I am sorry I have not those two Birmingham News editorials. They undoubtedly were part of the propaganda that Mr. Bradley was preparing and publishing; and the readers of those papers had no idea that this material was prepared by the paid representative of the power company.

The only difference between these editorials and hundreds of others which have appeared in the Alabama newspapers since I have been conducting this bureau is that I had the name of the bureau mentioned in these so there could be no misunderstanding as to who had put them in.

I have always suggested to the newspapers wherever possible to avoid mentioning my name or the name of the bureau, as anyone who understands publicity and politics knows it is more effective if the article appears to the reader to emanate from the newspaper itself rather than from some utility source.

It might interest you to know that there have been more than 75 separate articles on the editorial page of the Montgomery Advertiser during the past 12 months regarding public utilities which were taken verbatim from our news bulletin. The number in the weekly papers runs into hundreds.

Think of that, Senators! Here is one paper which he mentions in the letter—a confidential letter from the hired man to the boss, telling what his work is, and what he is doing—and he says that "There have been more than 75 separate articles on the editorial page of the Montgomery Advertiser during the past 12 months regarding public utilities," and that those 75 articles "were taken verbatim from our news bulletin. The number in the weekly papers runs into hundreds."

The letter continues:

I am constantly furnishing information and propaganda advantageous to the utilities, not only to newspapers and members of the public service commission, but to other organizations as well. I also serve as a clearing house for Alabama utilities information for the National Electric Light Association and similar organizations.

Very truly yours,

LEON C. BRADLEY, Director.

Note that he is "constantly furnishing information and propaganda advantageous to the public utilities." To whom does he furnish it? He says, "not only to newspapers"—it is not only these newspapers that are printing without the change of a single word his editorials and these articles that he writes—"but I am sending them to others." Who are they? "Members of the public service commission."

That is one of the places where in the end the Power Trust poisons the minds of the people of the country. They are supplying with their material the commissions whose duty it is to regulate electric power and light rates; the commissions that are supposed to stand between the people and the Power Trust; the commissions that are doing the regulating of to-day, that the power companies and their adherents all admire so much. They are all in favor of regulation of electric-light rates; and, in order to regulate the electric-light rates, this shows how they regulate the regulator. These commissions, in the main honest and sincere, elected to public positions for the purpose of regulating the rates charged by the public utilities undoubtedly intending in the majority of cases to do what is right between the utilities and the people, are not only faced daily, weekly, monthly, and yearly with this propaganda prepared by the Power Trust, but in every contest they are faced with the ablest experts and the ablest attorneys that money can secure, while the public sometimes is not represented at all, and often is represented in a very inferior way.

In view of the fact that they are subjected constantly to that kind of pressure, that kind of a strain, is it any wonder that finally the Power Trust will be able to handle the commissions, even without the commissions ever knowing that they are being handled and controlled?

That is the failure of regulation. It is expecting of commissions more than humanity can stand. They are all human beings; and, even though they start out with a fair-minded view, they will wind up after a while with the viewpoint of the Power Trust.

They send this propaganda not only to the public-service commissions but to other organizations as well; and then this man says:

I also serve as a clearing house * * * for the National Electric Light Association.

Mr. President, going back again to these papers—the Thompson papers—the four of them in Alabama that were condemned by the Power Trust because they refused to publish their material four newspapers that bravely stood up for the rights of the people, and refused to be controlled by this propaganda—they had a newspaper in Mobile; and here is a letter showing how, when the Power Trust were not able to handle this paper in Mobile as they handled the papers named in other cities and other places, they started out to publish a new paper in Mobile.

Here is a letter written to Mr. Hubert Baugham by Mr. Frederick I. Thompson, who, as I understand—and again I shall be glad to be corrected if I am wrong—is one of the owners or managers of these so-called Thompson papers in Alabama. I want to read the letter. He says in this letter:

I do not wish to personally pass information, but you are at perfect liberty to use me as your authority for the statements made to you, which you can convey to anyone you desire, that the situation is this:

Immediately following the development before the Federal Trade Commission, with which you are familiar, that Thomas W. Martin, president of the Alabama Power Co., had secretly employed a professor of economics of the University of Alabama without even the knowledge of the president of the university himself; and the testimony of Leon C. Bradley, the propagandist of the Alabama Power Co., that he could get editorial matter in the Birmingham News without leaving his office, and that he obtained 75 different articles in the Montgomery Advertiser in one year, but that he could not get his matter in the "Thompson newspapers," Mr. Logan Martin, brother of Thomas W. Martin, and Mr. Thomas Martin himself, working through Thomas M. Stevens, an attorney of Mobile who does legal work for them, and D. P. Bestor, a director of the power company and president of the First National Bank of Mobile, with T. K. Jackson, vice president of the Alabama Power Co., proceeded to organize to publish a newspaper in Mobile.

Mr. Bestor, in addition to being a director in the power company and president of the First National bank, is recognized as one of the large stockholders in the Merchants National Bank, whose president is Mr. Ernest F. Ladd; and these two banks practically control the only remaining financial institution in Mobile, the Mobile National Bank, whose president is W. B. Taylor.

These bankers had initial meetings in the First National Bank building with Mr. R. B. Chandler of Birmingham, who is known to represent the interest of Martins, identified with the Alabama Power Co. as president and as general counsel. Following this organization to proceed with the plans for launching the new newspaper, these bankers sent for and called on various merchants in Mobile, to whom they advanced, in season, the current accommodations accorded merchants by banks. It is of specific information that they forced, to what extent of threat I do not know, certain merchants against their will, to agree to advertise in the paper yet unborn, at an advertising rate higher than that of the established papers.

As you know, I am not interested in the competition that would thus be promoted. Contrarily, it is felt by me and our organization that a power company organ, under such auspices, would serve to reemphasize the character and independence of our newspapers, their freedom from invisible and corrupt corporate control, and in the long run, be of substantial advancement to our newspaper properties.

But it is obviously a fact that the issue raised is one of broad national concern. It is understandable how in some smaller fields, or even fields larger than Mobile, where there was a publisher who sought honestly and in best judgment to run an independent newspaper and serve the public rather than a private interest, that he might be subjected, by threat of competition, because he would not be financially strong enough to resist it.

That statement of a broad public policy, it seems to me, must stand without the possibility of successful contradiction. In this particular case the newspaper was financially able to stand the opposition that was undertaken, and which I believe was never, in fact, consummated. But, as the writer says in this letter, there are thousands and thousands of others who would not be able to resist, under those circumstances, and would have to submit to the power trust or go to the wall.

I read further from this letter:

Fortunately for us, and fortunately also for the confidence that people appear to have in our newspapers, we are not in such position to be intimidated or injured materially by a power-company organ, or the organ of any private interest seeking to coercively control a public journal. That aspect appears to me to be of moment and concern.

I write you thus fully so that you will be informed of all the facts, and you have full authority to quote me as being responsible for these statements.

With regards,

FREDERICK I. THOMPSON.

Mr. President, this is only an incident, this is only one thing out of thousands that are being brought out almost daily by this investigation. Alabama is no exception. The same thing is going on practically everywhere else in the United States. The same methods are being employed to intimidate and coerce and to force and to mislead everywhere in the United States by the representatives of this great Power Trust.

We have seen in the past what they have done, and what they attempted to do in the city of Washington. We have had disclosed to us the hundreds of thousands of dollars they have spent to control this body. We have seen how they have fought from the beginning, daily, weekly, monthly, and yearly, every step that has ever been undertaken by representatives and committees of this body to save for the people of the United States the investment made at Muscle Shoals with the taxpayers' money.

I felt that I would be justified in taking up this much time of the Senate for the purpose of laying before the Senate these disclosures, which, it seems to me, ought to excite the interest and the condemnation of all liberty-loving citizens everywhere.

FARMERS' PRODUCE MARKET

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing the acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment at this point to the market bill which has been under discussion this afternoon, so that it may be printed and be available for consideration to-morrow when the bill comes up. The amendment provides——

Mr. GLASS. Would not the Senator like to have a vote on it now?

Mr. TYDINGS. The amendment provides that no site shall be selected until that site has been passed upon by three persons selected by the President of the United States. I did not think I could get a more impartial commission in any other manner than by the method I have suggested, and for that reason I have put it up to the President to name the commission.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, of course, everybody who is familiar with this market problem knows perfectly well that the number of sites available for market purposes is very limited, and these sites have over and over and over again been investigated in every aspect of the question, both as to their availability and as to their value, so that they may be brought within the limits of the authorization of the bill, and, of course, I shall oppose the proposed amendment of the Senator from Maryland, because these questions have repeatedly been passed upon by various bodies.

I did not rise for the purpose of saying that, however. Unless we are going to have a vote on this bill, and that speedily, I am going to continue on with its consideration to-night, and as far into the night as I may be able to hold a quorum here. I am perfectly willing, and have been, to give a reasonable time for discussion.

Mr. President, I propose a unanimous-consent agreement substantially to this effect, that beginning to-morrow at 1 o'clock we shall resume consideration of the unfinished business, and that at half past 2 o'clock debate on the bill and all amendments thereto shall be limited to 10 minutes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in order to clear up any possible misunderstanding, I think the Senator means that there will be 10 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on any amendment, so that if a Senator wanted to speak on the bill he could speak 10 minutes on the bill, and also 10 minutes on any amendment. Is that right?

Mr. GLASS. I would rather it would be 10 minutes on the bill and the amendments thereto, because I think that is enough, but if the Senator is disposed to insist upon the other I shall not object to that interpretation of the request.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall not interpose any objection, but I would appreciate it, if the Senator has any idea, if he would let me know about how much time he expects to consume between 1 o'clock and 2.30 to-morrow, if any.

Mr. GLASS. That I can not tell, beyond saying confidently that I will not consume half as much time as the Senator has consumed to-day.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is very witty, but I would rather get down——

Mr. GLASS. That is not witty; it is a fact, and it looks a little unreasonable to me——

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not objecting.

Mr. GLASS. That a Senator who has spoken approximately two hours on the bill to-day should seek by suggestion to put a limitation upon what I may say.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not mean to suggest any limitation but I was asking the Senator in absolute good faith if he could give me an approximate idea, with no thought of holding him to the rigid letter, so that I could see what position our forces would be in, so to speak.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator has not any forces.

Mr. TYDINGS. I started out with 7, I had 29 to-day, and am hoping to add to them to-morrow.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me just a moment, I would like to suggest to my colleague that he would have 20 minutes anyhow, 10 minutes on the bill, and 10 minutes on the amendment he has just offered, and so would any other Senator, if there is any one else who would desire to speak, even if there is no such assurance given to the Senator by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator that question because I happen to know that two or three Senators wish to speak against the bill, in good faith.

Mr. GLASS. Or against time, which?

Mr. TYDINGS. They could not speak against time if the unanimous-consent agreement went into effect.

Mr. GLASS. I am unwilling to say how long I shall take on the bill. I shall certainly not consume time unnecessarily. If I discuss the bill at all, I will discuss the pending bill, and not some other bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. I did not understand what the unanimous-consent request was. There are two or three Senators interested who are not here now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been granted yet.

Mr. BLACK. There are several who are not here who might be interested in the matter, and if there is to be a unanimous-consent agreement, I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the Senator that I am not proposing a time for voting on the bill.

Mr. BLACK. I did not understand just what it was.

Mr. GLASS. I am not proposing a time for voting on the bill. My proposal was for a unanimous-consent agreement that the unfinished business be taken up to-morrow at 1 o'clock. The Senator will understand that I could have it taken up at 11 o'clock, but I wanted to afford two hours for the calendar to-morrow if possible. I propose that the unfinished business be taken up at 1 o'clock, and that at half past 2 o'clock speeches on the bill and on amendments thereto be limited to 10 minutes.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, does not the Senator want to include in the request a provision that each Senator may speak but once on the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. And on each amendment.

Mr. GLASS. On the bill and each amendment.

Mr. SACKETT. That ought to be included in the unanimous-consent request, then.

Mr. TYDINGS. But a Senator could speak once on each amendment.

Mr. SACKETT. Once on each amendment and once on the bill.

Mr. GLASS. That, it seems to me, gives ample opportunity for anyone who wants further to discuss the bill, and I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. If there is objection to it, I shall insist upon going on to-night.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that its consideration be resumed at 1 o'clock p. m. to-morrow, and that after the hour of 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. no Senator may speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, what hour is fixed?

Mr. GLASS. Half-past 2 to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I dislike to object, but I want to suggest to the Senator from Virginia that we have had a great deal of dissatisfaction with cutting off general debate as proposed. His proposal will allow only an hour and a half, and we would have substantially only 20 minutes for debate thereafter. I suggest to the Senator that he postpone the hour until at least half past 3. I would like really to have it 4 o'clock.

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator prefers to go on to-night I am perfectly willing to carry the bill on through to-night.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will permit another suggestion, where there is only an hour and a half for general debate I have observed that some Senator takes the floor and discusses some other question than the unfinished business or the business that is before the Senate, and then other Senators are deprived of an opportunity for general debate.

Mr. GLASS. Very well, I will make it 3.30 then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

The unanimous-consent agreement as entered into is as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that its consideration be resumed at 1 p. m. to-morrow, and that after the hour of 3.30 p. m. no Senator may speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment thereto.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16714) "making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8 and 20.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 14, 16, 18, and 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$170,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$12,240,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$230,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment number 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$31,430,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 1, 13, 15, and 17.

FREDERICK HALE,
L. C. PHIPPS,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

BURTON L. FRENCH,
GUY U. HARDY,
JOHN TABER,
W. A. AYRES,
W. B. OLIVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. I will have to object to that to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the effect of that be to displace the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; it will not; because the unfinished business is already laid aside.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the motion prevails and then we do not finish consideration of the conference report to-night, which is not at all improbable; what will happen when we reach 1 o'clock to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report is privileged business anyway.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that while a conference report is privileged to the extent that it can be presented at any time, the only way by which a conference report can be taken up is by unanimous consent or a vote of the Senate.

I would like to say to the Senator from Maine that I am objecting to taking up the conference report to-night because there are several Senators who are interested in it who have asked me and others to see what it is. I do not know what the conference report is, and I want an opportunity to examine it. There may not be two minutes delay to-morrow if I can have an opportunity to look into it to-night, but if I am to be denied the right even to read it——

Mr. HALE. I am entirely willing to explain it now.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. The Senator can explain it, and that may be satisfactory; but it may not be. I think on an important bill of this kind the Senator ought not to object to having it go over one day.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the form of the report is such that the Senator from Nebraska could not know what is in it unless he knows the various amendments by number.

Mr. NORRIS. I will have to get the bill and look them up.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Maine is ready to explain the report.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GLASS. Can a conference report supersede a unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no unanimous-consent agreement to adjourn or recess to-night. None has been entered into.

Mr. GLASS. I am talking about to-morrow. Suppose consideration of the conference report has not been concluded by 1 o'clock to-morrow, what becomes of the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate would then proceed under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. There are quite a number of amendments to the naval appropriation bill. Some of them are somewhat involved and some of them are quite lengthy. It strikes me that on a bill as important as that the Senator from Maine ought not to expect the Senate to proceed too hurriedly. If even only one Member of the Senate wants to look into the conference report, he should have at least a few hours to do it. Of course, I do not mean to disparage any explanation the Senator from Maine might make.

Mr. HALE. The conference report is very simple. We have very few amendments to the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I happen to have the bill open before me, and I see amendment No. 17 right in front of me. That would not indicate that there are so few amendments to the bill.

Mr. HALE. There are very few amendments to the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course that only demonstrates the Senator's idea of what should be done. It is different from my viewpoint. I think 17 amendments can not be designated as very few amendments. I think it is quite a number. I happen to have before me an amendment which takes up practically a whole page of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine has moved that the Senate proceed to consideration of the conference report, and that motion is not debatable.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if that be the decision of the Chair, I will appeal from it. It is after 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to read Rule XXVII on page 31 of Senate Rules and Manual, which is as follows:

REPORTS OF CONFERENCE COMMITTEES

1. The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Brookhart	Dill	Goff
Barkley	Broussard	Edge	Hale
Bingham	Bruce	Fess	Harris
Black	Capper	Frazier	Harrison
Blaine	Caraway	George	Hastings
Blease	Copeland	Gerry	Hayden

Neely	Robinson, Ind.	Swanson
Norbeck	Sackett	Thomas, Idaho
Norris	Schall	Thomas, Okla.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry. Will the Chair state the question upon which we are about to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that the Senate proceed to consideration of the conference report on House bill 16714.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when Mr. BURTON'S name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], is detained from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SCHALL (when Mr. SHIPSTEAD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is very ill and unable to be here to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who I see is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and vote "yea."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the absence on account of illness of the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. LARRAZOLO], and the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. If present those Senators would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce the general pair of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. If present they would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—50

So the motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

PERMITS AND LICENSES—COLORADO RIVER AND TRIBUTARIES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 201) restricting the Federal Power Commission from issuing or approving any permits or licenses affecting the Colorado River or any of its tributaries, except the Gila River, which was on page 1, line 10, to strike out "unless and until" and to insert "until the 5th day of March, 1930, unless prior thereto."

Mr. BRATTON obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Before action is taken on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution I desire to examine it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the House to the joint resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. BRATTON subsequently said: Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 201.

The motion was agreed to.

OFFICIAL PAPERS OF THE TERRITORIES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1168) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the collection and editing of official papers of the Territories of the United States now in the national archives," approved March 3, 1925, which were, on page 2, to strike out all after "of," where it appears the second time, in line 11, down to and including the word "copies," in line 13, and insert:

1,950 copies for the Department of State, of which 6 copies shall be delivered to each Senator and 2 copies to each Representative, and 8 copies for each State or Territory to be distributed to historical associations, commissions, museums, or libraries, and to other nondepository libraries therein designated by the governor of each State or Territory, 4 copies for the library of the Department of the Interior, and the remainder of said 1,950 shall be.

On page 2, line 21, after the word "appropriated," to insert "not more than"; and on page 2, lines 21 and 22, to strike out "the appropriations to remain available until expended."

Mr. FESS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

TROPIC EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK, FLA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4704) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and report to Congress on the advisability and practicability of establishing a national park to be known as the Tropic Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, which was, on page 2, line 2, to strike out all after the word "State" down to and including the word "purpose," in line 5, and insert the following:

including in his report full information as to the ownership, value, estimated cost to acquire, and character of the lands involved, and his opinion as to whether such areas measure up to national-park standards. Any appropriations for the National Park Service shall be available for the necessary expenses of such investigation.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

SUPPLY OF NEWSPRINT PAPER TO PUBLISHERS OF SMALL NEWSPAPERS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, in order to take as few moments as possible, I have reduced the statement which I wish to make to writing, and I ask that it may be read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask to call up Senate Resolution 337, which I introduced Saturday. This resolution authorizes the Federal Trade Commission to conduct an inquiry into the newsprint monopoly as it affects the small daily and weekly newspapers. The resolution is identical with my Resolution 292, which was referred to the Agricultural Committee and which called for the appointment of a select committee of five Senators to investigate the newsprint situation with a view to determining whether or not corrective legislation was necessary in order to insure the publishers of the smaller dailies and weeklies an adequate supply of newsprint in the future at reasonable prices.

A public hearing on the measure was held by the Senate Committee on Agriculture January 30, and the resolution favorably reported to the Senate on February 7. Because a proposed expenditure of $25,000 was covered in the resolution, it was subsequently referred to the Senate Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It was at the suggestion of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that the resolution was referred to the Agricultural Committee. I consented to this proposal because Senator FESS, in making this suggestion, said "The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has no latitude to consider the merits of resolutions other than simply to say that so much money shall or shall not be expended." The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, in favorably reporting the resolution to the Senate, definitely passed on the merits of the proposition to authorize an investigation into the newsprint situation.

At the time I introduced the resolution I believed that it would be a relatively simple matter to have the Senate authorize this inquiry, because it has always shown its sympathy to the small consumers and others who are not in the position to defend themselves against the harmful practices of monopolies. It is particularly true that the Senate of the United States has kept in mind the viewpoint of the smaller daily and weekly newspapers of this country. The Senate has in recent years authorized two sweeping investigations into the activities of the newsprint combines—one in 1917, and another in 1920. The first inquiry authorized by the Senate was conducted by the Federal Trade Commission, and resulted in indictments and a decree in the Federal courts against certain newsprint manufacturers for violation of the anti-trust law. It is these same manufacturers, more closely knit than in other years, that are the moving figures in the present newsprint monopolistic trend. The Senate itself conducted an investigation in 1920, at which time they made it clear that the smaller publishers were harmed by newsprint combines.

The newsprint resolution was reported favorably from the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry nearly three weeks ago. It did not seem logical to me that the Audit and Control Committee should hold hearings to discuss the merits of Senate Resolution 292 when the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had definitely approved the measure. It was undoubtedly an oversight on the part of the committee, but the fact was that I was not notified that a hearing would be held. I am also informed that the National Editorial Association, representing the small daily and weekly newspapers, whose representative testified at the Agricultural Committee hearings, was not notified.

The stenographic copy of the hearings before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate shows that the authorized spokesman for the newsprint manufacturers was ready and present to oppose the measure. The record of the hearing as of Saturday, February 9, contains the statement of Elisha Hanson, who appeared as the attorney for the International Paper Co. in opposition to reporting the resolution from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Mr. Hanson had previously appeared upon this same resolution before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as the attorney for the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, a group of the larger daily newspapers. At this time he declared: "We do think that this particular investigation is unnecessary." At this hearing, in response to my questions, Mr. Hanson denied that either former Senator Lenroot or himself represented the newsprint organization. He conceded that the former Senator and himself had jointly represented the International Envelope Corporation, a subsidiary of the International Paper & Power Co., in obtaining a Government contract from the Government Post Office Department in September. Later this attorney appeared before the Senate Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with reference to my Resolution 292 at a meeting of which I had not been informed and said:

> I am not appearing for the newspaper publishers this morning, but for an American manufacturer of newsprint, and I merely want to submit to the committee certain evidence along the line that if there is no control there is no monopoly.

At a subsequent meeting, to which I was invited, this attorney declared:

> I wish to say that my client in this particular instance, the International Paper Co., has nothing to fear from the proposed investigation.

If this particular company had nothing to fear, it seems peculiar that it should lead the fight against a favorable report from the Senate Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Senators, the International Paper Co. and other large producers of newsprint have every reason to fear a repetition of investigations of other years by the Senate, at which time their colors were shown. The price cutting, the pooling of orders, and the distribution of tonnage which has marked the present controversy over newsprint is only the surface battle between the gigantic combines of newsprint manufacturers. In tracing the opposition to my resolution I have made many interesting discoveries, and as a result I am cognizant of the immeasurable resources of the opposition.

I have neither the time nor the inclination to draw up a wholesale indictment against the International or other large producers of newsprint in this country and Canada. That the consumer of newsprint is placed at a disadvantage by the monopolistic tendencies is usually considered sufficient to warrant an investigation and relief. There is a wealth of information that should have been heard by a select committee, and I would have been glad to present it.

To give you an idea that there is more than the paper angle in the strongly entrenched opposition to an investigation by the Senate, I call attention to a special article from the Toronto Star of January 14, written by their New York correspondent after an investigation into the newsprint situation. The Toronto Star says under a New York date line:

> Whatever the result of the newsprint-price conference here to-day, the negotiators sitting around the table know that newsprint is not the major issue. It is hydroelectric power and empire. The issue is power, hydroelectric power, and financial power. The issue involves the ambitions of Archibald R. Graustein of New York, and J. H. Gundy, of Toronto. In conflict around the conference table here are represented two of the greatest financial groups in the world. Whatever the settlement, the insiders here feel that the result can be only a truce; an armed respite for a renewed conflict.
> On one side, represented by Mr. Graustein, is a huge United States-Canadian alliance of power and paper groups. It includes the power resources of the New England Power Association, and the International Paper Co., and its subsidiaries, producing 1,524,600 horsepower and 1,400,000 tons of paper and pulp a year. On the other side, represented by J. H. Gundy, are resources of the Holt-Gundy duumvirate, probably not so huge in point of paper and power figures, but backed by all the very holdings of the companies controlled by Sir Herbert Holt, calculated at $2,000,000,000. These include light, heat, and power plants, as well as pulp and paper mills. Financiers here seem to accept the fact as common knowledge that these two financial forces are now in line of battle over hydroelectric power.

How this struggle of financial giants over power and paper is affecting the newsprint industry is clearly outlined by the Toronto Star in the following comment:

> Many of the smaller independent companies, embarrassed by the present state of the industry and the difficulty of competing with the larger corporations, are also thought to be in a mood for mergers. Many of them could go in with either the Holt-Gundy duumvirate or with the Canadian International Paper Co., led by Archibald R. Graustein.

In all its publicity and in its financial representations to investors, the International Paper & Power Co. stresses the fact that it is unquestionably the dominating factor in the newsprint field. The Canadians concede the undisputed leadership of the International in fixing prices on markets; for the Toronto Star, under date of January 10, said:

> Since the International is the largest producer of paper in the world, with an output just twice as great as the next company in the field, namely, the Abitibi, the necessity of reaching a settlement with President Graustein is evident.

The keynote of a booklet issued by bankers, giving an analysis of the International Paper & Power Co. with its history and prospects, substantiates the story appearing in the Toronto Star, and quoted above. Discussing the dominating position of the International, bankers' statements to investors definitely point out that "no effort is being spared in order to make the company's position absolutely impregnable."

It does not require a gift of prophecy for any Member of the Senate to predict what will happen to these smaller consumers of newsprint when these large combines settle their differences and proceed to collect on the losses that have resulted from a price warfare extending over a period of five months. The bankers for the International Paper Co. promise the investing public that prices will advance, and surely they are in a position to know. The booklet prepared this month on the International Paper & Power Co. for investors says, quite significantly:

> In concluding this analysis it may again be pointed out that the International Paper Co. has not yet begun to reap the benefits of its widespread expansion and diversification. In the meantime the period of overproduction through which the paper industry is at present passing has delayed a realization of the returns which had been hoped for. As described before, however, this situation is temporary in nature; and ultimately the tremendous values of the company's paper, pulp, and power properties will produce constantly increasing revenue. The position now held by the company is unique in corporate history.

Not only is it the greatest paper company in the world, but it is now also one of the largest public-utility enterprises on this continent.

Here we have, Senators, the attorney for what is conceded as the largest and dominant paper company, and occupying a similar position in the power industry, appearing in opposition to an inquiry which has already been authorized by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry solely on its merits.

A recent dispatch from the Montreal and Toronto Star says:

Canadian newsprint manufacturers expect to be able to announce a settlement to stabilize the industry at the latest on Saturday, with a price of approximately $55.20 a ton for the mills.

Announcement of the settlement will precede by only a short time two amalgamations of paper mills that will further reduce the independent groups and be calculated to add to the stabilization of the industry. From inside sources it is learned that negotiations are under way by which the Canadian International Paper Co. will take over control of the E. B. Eddy Co. and the J. R. Booth mills. At the same time the Holt-Gundy interests are about to absorb Wayagamack, Brompton, and the St. Lawrence.

This fixed price of $55.20 will be given only to the larger newspapers who will protect themselves by contracts, and it applies only to the year 1929. What the fixed price will be in 1930 and 1931 can only be conjectured by remembering what happened a few years back, when newsprint paper to the small consumer ran up to $260 per ton. The testimony admitted by all concerned in the hearings before the Agricultural Committee on January 30 was that the smaller newspapers are now paying $95 per ton, and only a short time ago were paying $180.

I heard this morning on good authority that last Saturday the combination forming a tremendous newsprint trust of American and Canadian interests was formed, and the names thereto put upon the dotted line. Another fact is that Archibald R. Graustein, president of the International Paper Co., resigned as president of the Bathurst Pulp & Paper Co., a subsidiary of the International, and another was elected in his place to do the signing.

My Resolution 337 is identical in the wording with Resolution 292, which the Agricultural Committee reported favorably. This resolution authorizes the Federal Trade Commission to conduct the inquiry into the newsprint monopoly as it affects the small daily and weekly newspapers. The Federal Trade Commission conducted previously a similar investigation, and have much data that will be of service. It will be entirely satisfactory to me and to the friends of the smaller newspapers to have it thus referred; and I ask its immediate consideration and passage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. What is the request?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may we have the resolution reported, so that we may know what it provides?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is requested (1) to make an investigation and hold open hearings upon the question of whether any of the practices of the manufacturers and distributors of newsprint paper tend to create a monopoly in the supplying of newsprint paper to publishers of small daily and weekly newspapers or constitute a violation of the antitrust laws, and (2) to report to the Senate by filing with the Secretary thereof preliminary reports at intervals of not more than 30 days during such investigation, and, as soon as practicable, a final report to the results of such investigation and the evidence taken at such hearings, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not think there ought to be incorporated in the resolution, at any rate, a request or requirement that the Federal Trade Commission shall report every 30 days. I think if the resolution is to be agreed to, it ought to provide for a final report as soon as practicable, but I am not in favor of requiring the commission to report every 30 days.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I think the resolution is meritorious, and that the Senate should agree to it.

Mr. JONES. I do not think I have any objection to the resolution if it may be modified as I have suggested.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that it is not so very important about having a report every 30 days, and that he amend it by striking that provision out.

Mr. SCHALL. How would it be to make it 60 days?

Mr. JONES. Why not simply require a final report.

Mr. SCHALL. How would 60 days do? I would like to keep track of this thing.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I suggest that the resolution go over for a day, in order that the Senator may work it out. He can renew his request to-morrow.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think if the Senator is willing to accept that amendment, we ought to agree to the resolution now.

Mr. SCHALL. I have been working this over for a long time. I would like to have action on it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am only suggesting to the Senator that he let it go over until to-morrow, so that other Senators who are interested may discuss the terms of it with him.

Mr. SCHALL. It has been before the Committee on Agriculture and was reported favorably, and it has been discussed for months here. I would be glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Committee on Agriculture approve of requiring a report every 30 days?

Mr. SCHALL. No.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let us have it read now as it would be if amended.

Mr. SCHALL. I have not consulted them on the subject.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Was this matter reported to the Senate just now?

Mr. JONES. It was reported some time ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been on the table since February 22.

Mr. SCHALL. It was reported to the Senate in December.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think it would better go over until to-morrow. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

LOAD-LINE REGULATIONS

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, some days ago the House passed the so-called load line bill, and sent it to the Senate with quite a number of amendments. We have had a conference with reference to that bill and have come to a conclusion, and I think in justice to the House conferees I should state the situation that confronted us and what led us to the final conclusion of the conference.

The Senate passed a bill applying the load-line system to vessels engaged in the foreign trade only. The bill came back from the House with amendments which extended the legislation to the coastwise trade, with certain exceptions. That bill, as I understand it, was unanimously reported by the House committee, and it passed the House with practically a unanimous vote; so that the conferees were confronted with the proposition of extending the load-line legislation to the coastwise trade.

All the conferees and both Houses had declared in favor of extending the load-line legislation to the foreign trade. I will say that all the conferees personally are really in favor of extending the legislation to the coastwise trade. But we have these differences.

There were certain exceptions made in the bill as it passed the House by an amendment. Of course, there was controversy over those exceptions, and the controversy led, really, to the exceptions.

We appreciate, and the House conferees appreciate, the situation which confronts us now, near the close of the session, the limits of which are fixed. The House conferees, as well as the Senate conferees, came to the conclusion that under the circumstances confronting us it would be impossible to get the legislation through as it had been amended by the House, and to these amendments, I will say, the Senate conferees had substantially no objection. The exceptions made in the House, however, would cause a serious controversy in the Senate. No other compromise would avoid such controversy. The conferees would have been glad to see the legislation go further. But after considering the matter from all angles and the situation which confronts us, the House Members finally came to the conclusion that rather than have no legislation at all they would accept substantially the legislation passed by the Senate.

We have agreed to submit to the Senate practically the Senate bill as it originally passed, applying the load-line legislation to vessels engaged in the foreign trade only, excepting, also, the trade on the Great Lakes, because there is considerable controversy over that.

It was felt by all the conferees that if we should do this, the matter of extending the load-line legislation to the coastwise service should be very carefully investigated, studied, and considered as promptly as possible, in the hope that legislation dealing with this phase of the matter might be taken up early in the next session.

Pursuant to that, we did what is, of course, quite unusual for a conference committee, as I know, but it is simply expressive of the individual views of the members and is not binding upon the Senate or upon the House. We adopted a resolution in the conference, not as conferees but as individual members of the conference committee, and as expressing our individual views, as I have said, and declared our intention to promote as much as we can, and at as early a date as possible, legislation extending the load-line legislation to the coastwise trade without exception.

I think it was the unanimous opinion of individual members of the conference that there should really be no exception, but that the legislation should be extended to all classes of trade. But that will largely depend, of course, upon the investigations and studies that may be made.

Instead of the exceptions made in section 9, we put in a provision directing the Secretary of Commerce, and I think the Shipping Board, as expeditiously as possible to investigate and study the matters relating to extending the laws to the coastwise trade, and to submit a report, with such recommendation as they thought proper of legislation that should be enacted. As individuals we propose to promote that legislation as rapidly as possible. I can not commend too highly the wise, courageous, and patriotic statesmanship of the House conferees. They are entitled to great credit for the forward step we have taken in this legislation to protect life, preserve harmony between this country and her rivals on the sea, and to promote the welfare of our merchant marine.

I ask that this resolution which the conferees adopted be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

On motion, voted that it is the sense of the conferees on the part of the Senate, and of the House, that load-line legislation should be made applicable to all vessels of the United States of over 250 tons, including those operating in the foreign trade, making a voyage by sea in the coastwise and intercoastal trade, or on the Great Lakes; that the conferees have agreed to a report applying the load line only to vessels engaged in the foreign trade because of the parliamentary situation and the apparent impossibility of procuring more comprehensive legislation during the present Congress; and that the conferees advise that they will support and undertake to procure the passage of legislation in the next Congress applying load lines to all of the classes of vessels above enumerated.

Mr. NEELY subsequently said: Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator from Washington whether the conferees have eliminated an objectionable House amendment against which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT] and I protested yesterday afternoon?

Mr. JONES. That amendment is eliminated. All inclusion of the coastwise trade is eliminated in the conference report, for the reasons I have suggested.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from Nebraska would like to see the conference report before we act upon it, I shall be entirely willing to ask unanimous consent that the conference report be temporarily laid aside, and that it be taken up to-morrow morning immediately at the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. HEFLIN. How long does the Senator think it will take?

Mr. HALE. I can not see how it will take any time at all. It is a very simple report.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator can not take his report up at the conclusion of the routine morning business when we already have a unanimous-consent agreement to take another matter up.

Mr. HALE. That matter will come up after 1 o'clock, I understand.

Mr. GLASS. But we will be on the routine morning business until that time.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this unanimous-consent agreement could not interfere with the unanimous-consent agreement referred to by my colleague, which, I understand, will take effect at 1 o'clock, or at 1.30, I have forgotten which. When 1 o'clock comes, automatically the unfinished business will come before the Senate, and, as I understand it, a conference report does not go to the calendar but goes to the table.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it goes to the calendar.

Mr. BROOKHART. That would cut out the call of the calendar.

Mr. SWANSON. I think a conference report goes to the table, does it not?

Mr. SMOOT. A motion to take up a report is privileged, but the consideration of the report is not privileged.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will lie on the table.

Mr. HALE. I have asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. BLACK. I object to that if it will interfere with the call of the calendar.

Mr. HALE. It will not interfere with the unanimous-consent agreement that was entered into.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am satisfied that when the Senator from Nebraska reads the report it will not take five minutes to get the report through. Nearly all the Senate provisions are retained, and I think the Senator will agree with us in receding in the cases where we have receded.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is not getting the idea that I am making any objection, is he?

Mr. SWANSON. No. The Senator has a right to read the report, and it ought to go over so that it can be printed, but I am simply stating to the Senate that I am satisfied that when the report is read by Senators, it will not take 10 minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. HALE. I am also satisfied that it will not; and I renew my request.

Mr. MOSES. What is the request the Senator makes?

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the conference report be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report to-morrow morning immediately after the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. MOSES. Does that mean we are to adjourn to-night, and not take a recess?

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Maine wants to do that—and it is immaterial to me whether it is done or not, because I should be delighted to go on for a few hours this evening—why does he not make a motion that the Senate now take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, and then we would go right ahead with the consideration of the conference report at 11 o'clock, until 1 o'clock.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Indiana is bothered about that suggestion. He wants his radio bill to come up in the morning hour.

Mr. NORRIS. It would not take long if we should commence business with this conference report. If the Senator from Virginia is right about it, it will be finished in two or three minutes. He said that by five minutes after 11 it would be disposed of.

Mr. MOSES. There is only one Senator who can be right about it, and that is the Senator from Nebraska, because he is the one who objected.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not object; and I do not object now. I am willing to go on.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a number of Senators understood, when the agreement was entered into requested by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business at 1 o'clock to-morrow, that the calendar was to be taken up where we left off to-day and proceeded with for two hours.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator is accurate in that respect.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is not in the formal agreement entered into. In order to avoid confusion and conflict I think some arrangement should be made to complete the call of the calendar as soon as possible, otherwise we need not complete it at all, and there will be no opportunity for the consideration of Senate measures at the other end of the Capitol even where similar House bills have been reported and are on the House calendar. I am going to suggest that upon the convening of the Senate tomorrow at 11 o'clock, pursuant to the order heretofore entered, the Senate proceed with the calling of the calendar for unobjected bills, resuming consideration at the number where we left off to-day.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I had an understanding with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] that when the Senate concluded its business this evening we would ask for an adjournment, because I am very anxious in the morning hour to bring up the radio bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understood the Senator from Indiana was going to ask for an evening session to consider the radio bill.

Mr. WATSON. I was about to state that fact. After talking with the Senator from Arkansas I agreed, with the consent of the Senate of course, to have an evening session to-morrow evening for the purpose of considering the radio bill; and if that shall have been passed during the evening, then to resume the call of the calendar for unobjected bills until 11 o'clock.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I can not consent to anything that will interfere very long with consideration of the conference report. This is a matter which has to go to the House to be disposed of.

Mr. WATSON. But the proposed plan is not going to interfere with the conference report. A night session set apart for certain business will not interfere with the conference report.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator ought to know that a night session will avail nothing if we may base our judgment on the experience of the last two night sessions.

Mr. WATSON. Then we will be justified in making a motion to supplant some other measure for the consideration of the radio bill.

Mr. DILL. It seems to me the only way is to go right ahead now.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, let me submit a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator object to the proposal I submitted?

Mr. SWANSON. Oh, no.

Mr. MOSES. How many unanimous-consent requests have we before us now?

Mr. WATSON. I should like to complete my statement. The situation is such that I think we had better not adjourn to-night, but take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning and then take up these other matters in order. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas is a good one.

Mr. MOSES. Now we have two or three unanimous-consent agreements pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no unanimous-consent request now pending.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Maine has proposed one and the Senator from Arkansas has proposed one.

Mr. HALE. Under the circumstances I withdraw my request.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will modify my request at the suggestion of Senators so as to provide that the Senate shall take a recess at the conclusion of to-day's business until 11 o'clock to-morrow, and that following the conclusion of the consideration of the conference report on the naval appropriation bill the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar until the hour of 1 o'clock.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I understood when I agreed to the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] that it included the understanding that the calendar would be taken up from 11 to 1 o'clock to-morrow. That suggestion was made. If we do not take up the calendar until after the conference report is disposed of and that report should take two hours to dispose of, we will have no chance to get the bills on the calendar disposed of.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am sure it would take only a short time to dispose of the conference report. In the event that matters should take the course the Senator from Alabama has suggested they may take, we will then have to make an additional or another arrangement for consideration of bills on the calendar. I am sure the arrangement I have suggested will work out satisfactorily.

Mr. BLACK. It is all right if we can get some arrangement and if it may be understood that there will be an arrangement so that we may consider bills on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We can only make one arrangement at a time. If the Senator wants to object of course he can do so, but that still will not leave any arrangement in effect for consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar. My proposal is that just as soon as the conference report on the naval appropriation bill is out of the way, we then proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar and continue it until the hour of 1 o'clock when, under the agreement previously entered into, we are again to take up the market bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator, of course, intends that his proposal shall be worded in the usual formal language in which such agreements are worded?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, yes; to consider unobjected bills on the calendar only. That is understood. Otherwise no arrangement can be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous consent request submitted by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

REPORT OF THE NEAR EAST RELIEF

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the report of the Near East Relief, submitted pursuant to law, for the year ended December 31, 1928, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER. In accordance with the usual custom, I move that the report be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be printed as a Senate document.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION, LIGHT HOUSE SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 253)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Commerce, fiscal year 1930, amounting to $190,000, for aids to navigation, Lighthouse Service, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FUNDS COVERED INTO THE TREASURY UNDER SETTLEMENT OF WAR CLAIMS ACT (S. DOC. NO. 255)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation affecting the use of funds required to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts under the settlement of war claims act of 1928, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ENFORCEMENT OF WIRELESS COMMUNICATION LAWS (S. DOC. NO. 254)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Commerce, the fiscal year 1929, to remain available until June 30, 1930, amounting to $50,000, for enforcement of the wireless communication laws, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

EXPENSES OF THE FIFTEENTH DECENNIAL CENSUS (S. DOC. NO. 256)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation affecting an existing appropriation for the Department of Commerce (expenses of the fifteenth decennial census), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, February 26, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, above, beyond, and far away are our highest aspirations. We can not reach them now, but we feel them and believe in them. Give us grace and courage to follow their lead. Thou who givest all life, give us hearts replete with thankfulness. Allow nothing to keep us down; but may we strive to direct our admiration for all that is good and noble and all that would enrich and beautify life. O Immortal Love, within whose will righteousness and peace are forever one, pity us; reign in all hearts and bid passion to forever cease. Impress us that beyond all good is being good. Lead us on, seeing Thee who are invisible, working by faith, hope, and love; always seeking to be like the Divine Teacher until we dwell with Him. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 13060. An act to recognize the high public service rendered by Maj. Walter Reed and those associated with him in the discovery of the cause and means of transmission of yellow fever; and

H. R. 13752. An act to provide for the construction of a children's tuberculosis sanatorium.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in concurrent resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. Con. Res. 56. Concurrent resolution to provide for the printing and binding of the proceedings in Congress and in Statuary Hall of the unveiling upon the acceptance of the statues of Henry Clay and Dr. Ephraim McDowell, presented by the State of Kentucky, and for the distribution of the 2,500 copies authorized to be printed; and

H. Con. Res. 57. Concurrent resolution to provide for the printing of the first edition of the Congressional Directory of the first session of the Seventy-first Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees, with an amendment, to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill S. 2360, entitled "An act to amend section 1 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249), entitled 'An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906, entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes."'"

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 5656. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to grant a right of way for a levee through Carville Marine Hospital Reservation, La.;

S. 5746. An act to legalize the sewer outlet in the Allegheny River at Thirty-second Street, Pittsburgh, Pa.;

S. 5864. An act to provide for the study, investigation, and survey, for commemorative purposes, of battle fields in the vicinity of Richmond, Va.;

S. 5879. An act authorizing Llewellyn Evans, J. F. Hickey, and B. A. Lewis, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Puget Sound, within the county of Pierce, State of Washington, at or near a point commonly known as the Narrows; and

S. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 710. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the northwestern bands of Shoshone Indians may have against the United States; and

S. 1648. An act for the relief of Oliver C. Macey and Marguerite Macey.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 6687. An act to change the title of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14659. An act to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 5350. An act to amend the air commerce act of 1926 with reference to the examination and rating of schools giving instruction in flying; and

S. J. Res. 196. Joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to take steps in an effort to protect citizens of the United States in their equitable titles to land embraced in territory to be transferred from the State of Oklahoma to the State of Texas and from the State of Texas to the State of Oklahoma as per decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Oklahoma v. Texas (1926, 272 U. S. 21, p. 38), and to give the consent of Congress to said States to enter into a compact with each other and with the United States relating to such subject matter.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 17053) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 17053) the legislative appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read and agreed to.

ADDRESS OF HON. JAMES J. DAVIS, OF THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address by Hon. James J. Davis, Secretary of Labor, at a banquet by the Italian-American Society in Schenley Hotel, Pittsburgh, in honor of my colleague the Hon. CLYDE KELLY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Hon. James J. Davis, Secretary of Labor, at a banquet of the Italian-American Society of Pittsburgh, Pa., January 30, 1929, in honor of my colleague, Hon. CLYDE KELLY:

ADDRESS BEFORE THE ITALIAN-AMERICAN SOCIETY OF PITTSBURGH

I am always glad to meet the people of my own city. It was my privilege to live for many years in this part of the congressional district, and I have known for a long time many of the Italian people who are here before me. I well remember the day when many of you, or your parents, came to this community. And it has been a pleasure to me to watch your growth into a prominent part of the life of this section. You struck right out into every sort of activity—business and professional. You have taken an active part in the civic life about you. Numbers of you have attained the highest personal distinction, and the community has proved its respect and admiration for you all by rewarding you with a liberal measure of happiness and success.

You have found it true that America presents unlimited opportunities to all. The foreign-born have before them the same chance as any other. As I, too, came from across the seas, I know full well whereof I speak. You and I can agree that this country has been good to us. But we know also that what life offers to us here is not in the form of a gift. America insists that every man shall have his opportunity, but also that he shall work for it. The result is that when the rewards come to us we have the satisfaction of feeling that they have been well earned by personal toil and devotion to our country's ideals.

While I am here for the pleasant duty of foregathering with my many Italian friends, another reason that brings me here is to pay tribute to my distinguished friend, Congressman CLYDE KELLY, who is being honored on this occasion by the Italian banquet committee [Applause.] Congressman KELLY and I have been close personal friends for years. I have watched his progress with the greatest interest and admiration, and, from long knowledge of the man, I can say that no man in Congress has more ably represented his people than CLYDE KELLY. I can think of no higher type of public official. No man stands more favorably in the estimation of his colleagues and with the people of the Nation. What respect and affection he enjoys among his own people here I need not remind you. You know that for yourselves. [Applause.]

Congressman KELLY'S labors and services have ever been devoted to the welfare of the people. He has believed, as we believe, that American citizenship means something, that it is a badge of honor and distinction. [Applause.] His successful efforts to secure the passage of laws protecting your rights have been of great and far-reaching importance. [Applause.] It has given me the greater satisfaction to lend all the influence I possess for the enactment of one law in particular—that which protects Italian-Americans from forced military service through the draft from their native country. This has now been made impossible, under the law of our land, and to Congressman KELLY goes endless credit for his efforts in securing its enactment. [Applause.] He richly deserves your commendation, and I am sure he has it, in the greatest measure. [Applause.]

That is one proof of how the American people value those citizens who have come here from Italy. Few persons living within the confines of civilization, for that matter, can think of Italy without emotion, for we know that much of the culture of the present has come down to us from Italian origins. No cultured person neglects a visit to Italy, for the purpose of drinking in its magnificent history. [Applause.] In all our schools and universities the great men of your past are studied with the greatest respect and wonder. Many a distinguished man from another country has lived for years in your land. Some have passed their entire lives there.

Civilization began along the shores of the Mediterranean in Egypt, Greece, and Italy. If the early peoples living in these lands had not been what they were, we should not be what we are to-day. This is a fact that we should never allow ourselves to forget.

Italy has a history which goes back for considerably more than 2,000 years before it becomes lost in the mists of time. There is vast inspiration in the mere thought of antiquity. In America some are always apologizing for our youth, and have been doing it for 300 years, and may, for aught I know, continue to do so for 300 more. But the Italian knows that his land is old, and that his ancestors have spoken more than one tongue. He is proud to remember those ancient days when Rome was mistress of the lands and seas, when the ground shook with the tread of the legions of Cæsar; he is proud of the ancient poets, philosophers, and historians; he is proud it was on his own soil that civilization was reborn, after it had been for centuries in a state of eclipse—Dante was the voice of 10 silent centuries; he is proud to revive in imagination the day when his land, under Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi, rewon their lost independence. There is no country in the world which has had for so long a period of time such a wonderful history. It would be strange indeed if an Italian did not glory in it. [Applause.]

It is frequently said that we are living to-day in a scientific age, and sometimes we stress science at the expense of the humanities which had their origin along the shores of the Mediterranean. [Applause.] But modern science itself owes to Italian genius an immense debt. If it is Copernicus, half Pole and half German, whom we must hail as the father of modern science, it was Galileo an Italian who demonstrated the truth of the Copernican theory, not to mention his work in other scientific connections. There is no man of science to whom the world owes more than to Galileo, and he has had a long list of worthy Italian successors.

It does not matter in what direction we look. Italy has something to contribute to the cause of civilization in all the arts and sciences. Italian painting, Italian music, and Italian architecture are priceless heritages of the race. Not since the time of the Greeks has there been a sculptor like unto Michael Angelo, and in Leonardo da Vinci the world had one of its few universal geniuses. The Italian mind is by nature artistic, and art has flowered in Italy as naturally as the blossoms awaken at the touch of spring. But our indebtedness to the Italian does not depend wholly on what the Italian has given us directly; we owe even more to what he has given us indirectly. His genius has inspired the genius of every other land and helped to fructify it. There are still thinkers and artists in Italy to whom the world listens and whom it delights to honor. [Applause.]

To-day the peoples of the earth are concerned with the problems of peace. What the world needs is not war but peace. It needs the arts of peace. War should have been outlawed at the time when the industrial revolution began. The swords should then have been turned into plowshares and the spears into pruning hooks.

I have spoken of what the world owes to the past of Italy. But Italy has a living present. She has great scholars, great thinkers, and great writers to-day. Her universities enjoy prestige. The world owes to Italy a debt not only for its geniuses of yesterday but for the genius of to-day. There is, I am convinced, no better blood than flows in Italian veins. There is more to come out of her inner resources of brain and heart.

We do not need to go back very far, however, to record an Italian scientific discovery which has done much to rob the sea of its terror and to restore confidence to the wives and children of those who go down to the sea in ships. I refer to the invention of wireless telegraphy by Signor Marconi. [Applause.] It has already saved many lives and will save many more.

No American could afford to neglect the Italian mind, even if others could, because it was an Italian who discovered America. [Applause.] It does not matter that Christopher Columbus was not aware of the magnitude of his discovery. He is not the first man of whom the same might be said. Besides, if he were unaware of his discovery, we Americans are not. We know, if others do not, what we owe to him. There are those who say that the Norsemen discovered America. There are even those who say that the Chinese discovered it. But what difference does it make whether they did or did not? It was Columbus who awakened the Old World to a knowledge of the new.

It is true that, apart from the fact of its having been an Italian who discovered America, Italians had little or nothing to do with the American continent for a long period of time. The Italians were happy at home. They were prosperous, and they were giving to the world great art and thought. Why should they have emigrated to America? The people who did come—the Spaniards, and Portuguese, and Frenchmen, and Englishmen—came because they were none too happy at home. Some of them came in search of opportunities, and others to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. So far as I know, the Italians were making enough money at home to satisfy their requirements, and their consciences were not shocked by the way that their forefathers worshiped God. [Applause.] They appear to me to have been a happy lot.

Italians did not begin to come to America in considerable numbers until the later years of the nineteenth century. Those who came then came for the most part because they were crowded for room at home and needed jobs. Americans found these Italians good workers. A goodly proportion of them found employment on one or another railroad system, sometimes laying new tracks, sometimes repairing old ones. But no matter what they did, they had the kind of stuff in them that America required, and they prospered as most of the people who came to America prospered. To-day we will find Italians in every walk of American life. Some of them are merchants, manufacturers, lawyers, physicians, teachers, writers, and the like. They have not been found wanting in any capacity, and they have been tried in nearly every capacity. [Applause.]

We are limiting the number of immigrants to America. But, in doing so, we are not expressing any prejudice, for or against, the various nationalities who have come in the past to make their home with us. But America has learned, though it has taken us long to learn the lesson, that her resources, though great, are limited. We have only so much land and so many jobs. Immediately after the war, and before the enactment of the law limiting immigration, more than 5,000,000 of our workers were out of employment. If we had not restricted immigration America would have been swamped. We would have had jobs neither for our native sons nor for our immigrants. There would have been hunger and a lack of sheltering roofs. I am sure that the immigrant would have suffered even more than the native born, and that our restriction of immigration benefited the immigrant as it benefited our own people. Moreover, I am certain, as I have been told by foreign officials, that the restriction of immigration to America was a blessing to every land in Europe. The war-weary nations in Europe needed their workers, and our immigration act compelled the bulk of European labor to remain where it was needed—that is, at home. [Applause.]

The annual immigration quota from Italy is not large, but the number of persons who may enter the United States from any country is not determined enfirely by quota. There are nonquota classes, which include, among others, the wives and minor children of citizens of the United States.

You will be interested to know, therefore, that last year the number of Italians who came here for permanent residence was among the largest of all the countries of Europe. While Germany sent a larger number—58,243—Italy supplied 35,716, and England only 21,298.

Of all the immigration from all the countries of Europe combined, Italy's share was about one-seventh. Taking all the countries of Great Britain together—England, Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland—Italy would be third in the list of European countries in point of immigration. Yet more than fifteen times as many Italians were admitted to enter this country last year than came from my own native land of Wales.

The success you have attained here is testimony to the value we set on your citizenship. The fact that so many Italians became naturalized is one reason why we admitted so many of your people last year. Sensible Americans are glad to have you here, with your genius and character, to enrich our national life. Italy is loved by every scholar who knows her present and past. Two distinguished Americans have translated your greatest poet—Dante—into English, and many other Americans have done the same for other great Italian authors.

They know that the people of Italy have had something to say to the world that has not been said elsewhere, that, except for the period of the Dark Ages, Italy has always had something to say that could be neglected only to one's hurt. We owe much to the people who came here from other lands.

No American then can afford to neglect our common indebtedness to Europe. One of your number discovered us; our forefathers were all Europeans. To the American, as to the European, Italy, Greece, and Palestine have contributed much to our ideals.

We would not part with what those three nations have contributed to our country. Our art, our literature, and our science are, in their inception, borrowings from these older nations. The rewards we give you should be as generous as the gifts to us. May we always go on in the one pathway of amity and peace and the free exchange of our good deeds in true brotherhood! [Applause.]

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE AND MEMORIAL HIGHWAY

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I wish to call your attention to a matter that I think every Member of Congress has an appealing and vital interest in. We have authorized an appropriation of $15,000,000 to build a memorial bridge. We have authorized an expenditure of $4,500,000 to build a memorial road meeting this bridge.

Now, we are confronted with what seems to be a very imminent danger of having all this despoiled by the erection of a slaughterhouse within 2,000 feet of the southern end of this bridge, and along this memorial road.

I am introducing in this House to-day a resolution with two purposes; one is to call the attention of Congress to what is being done, and perhaps if it is persisted in that further appropriations be not made for the further construction of the memorial bridge or the construction of that highway. [Applause.] And for the further purpose of calling the attention of the Department of Justice to what is going on, and if the State of Virginia, which has the prime interest in ordering it stopped, if it fails to do its duty, that the United States Government, through the Attorney General, stop it. [Applause.]

To my mind it is unthinkable that any citizen of the United States that has any pride whatever in his country and in this beautiful city of Washington should dare to build a structure of that character along this memorial highway and so near the memorial bridge. It would be an offense not only to the sight but to the smell. It would be within 2,000 feet of the end of that bridge, and its stench would come across it to the White House and all over the Capital.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Has the State of Virginia issued a permit for the building of this structure?

Mr. WOOD. I do not know whether they require a permit. I understand they own the land. It certainly is a nuisance, and it can be stopped if proper steps are taken to stop it. I heard about this some days ago, but I thought it was simply some newspaper gossip. However, it seems now to have taken such form that unless something is done and done quickly, this thing will be consummated.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I understand that there is a petition pending before the commissioners of Arlington County now asking permission to erect a slaughterhouse.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand the situation to be this: The project has been brought to the attention of the board of supervisors which is the governing body of Arlington County. A permit is being sought. That permit has not been granted. I have no information that it will be granted. The formal application is to be presented to the board on the 28th of the month, and I have heard that then some future date will be fixed for a hearing. There has been very strenuous local protest, and while I am not in a position to give any guaranty, because I do not belong to the governing board, and I am not authorized to speak for it, yet in my opinion it is altogether unlikely that the permit will be granted.

Mr. WOOD. I wish to state to the gentleman that I understand also that protests have been made against it by many, one coming from the Secretary of War and another from Colonel Grant, Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds. Those protests were filed some time ago, but notwithstanding the efforts made by these officials they seem to be going on with the determination to build this nuisance. It is going to take something more than protests to stop them.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana is correct in saying that the protests he has indicated have been made. Many additional protests have been filed. However, the law requires that applications for permits shall be considered by the board, and the board is simply exercising a legal function in considering the application in question. I do not think the gentleman from Indiana or anyone else has a right to assume that the application is going to be granted. An abattoir can not be built where proposed unless the application is approved and a permit issued.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by publishing an editorial from the Washington Star.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Star, February 22, 1929]

THE SLAUGHTERHOUSE MENACE

Though it be housed in a structure of magnificent beauty, though it be surrounded by gardens of fragrant flowers and shrubbery, though it be so constructed as to give it the semblance of being a part of the collection of temples and shrines in its immediate vicinity, a slaughterhouse can never be camouflaged and made to exude an aroma that is anything but foul and offensive. Though pigs be given perfumed shower baths and housed in cribs or pens of sweet lavender, the atmosphere for several miles of surrounding territory will most surely be continuously reeking with the malodorous emanations from their place of confinement. Though every precaution be taken to make such an industry as attractive as possible, it can never be anything other than a nuisance of the most obnoxious nature if located in or near a residential community.

If the application for permission to erect a slaughterhouse on the Virginia side of the Potomac on a site between Columbia Pike and the Potomac River, Arlington Memorial Bridge and the Highway Bridge, is granted by the Arlington County Commissioners an offense of grave proportions will have been committed—an offense affecting not only the county itself, but one which will bring shame and humiliation to the people of the entire United States. The location under consideration is literally at the foot of Arlington National Cemetery and the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, a shrine to which the whole world makes pilgrimage and pays tribute. It will be less than two miles from the White House and but little more than half a mile from the Lincoln Memorial. Its sewage will empty into the river directly opposite that section of Potomac Park, and the river at that point is a scant half-mile wide. With the completion of the Arlington Memorial Bridge and the magnificent national boulevard which is to link the National Capital, Arlington Cemetery, and Mount Vernon with the most beautiful driveway in the world, the entrance into Virginia will be made actually at the gates of the slaughterhouse, and the Mount Vernon branch of the boulevard will form a semicircle around the plant.

It is inconceivable that the commissioners of Arlington County desire to commit such an offense against the Nation, or against the residents and taxpayers of the adjacent communities. Ceremonies at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier will be accompanied by the noisome stench emanating from the carloads of animals being shipped into the plant as well as from the foul odors which will exude from the slaughterhouse itself. Potomac Park will become a place to be avoided instead of the attractive and restful driveway and gathering place of the people. The Tidal Basin will be doomed as a place for pleasure, and no longer will the cherry blossoms encircling that body of water draw the thousands of visitors from all parts of the world who annually come to enjoy their beauty. At the White House there would be almost an incessant explanation and apology to delegations and visitors for the "bad smell which comes from Virginia."

The obvious injury to Arlington County itself, if this permit be granted, is one to which the commissioners should give the most careful consideration. Beautiful homes which now cover the heights above the site of the proposed plant will be abandoned as their occupants and owners flee from the nauseating stench. A rapid depreciation of property values will almost assuredly follow, and in a short time the territory which now enjoys the greatest opportunity in its history to become the garden spot of the Old Dominion will deteriorate and degenerate into an unsightly, evil-smelling neighborhood of objectionable industries, for the establishment of a slaughterhouse would serve as an opening wedge for other industries equally obnoxious and undesirable.

The Secretary of War has made a strong protest against the granting of the permit. He has, in fact, asked that he be given an opportunity to appear before a hearing if one should be held. Apparently, no hearing will be held, for the decision of the commission will be made on the 28th of this month, only a few days hence. Lieut. Col. U. S. Grant, 3d, superintendent of public buildings and parks, and a member of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, has also registered his disapproval. The Virginia Park and Planning Commission opposes the granting of the permit, and every organization within the county has made a plea for its denial.

In the face of all these objections, and with not a single feature of the industry itself in its favor, it is inconceivable that the Arlington County commissioners will grant the application of the packing company and bring upon the State of Virginia, the National Capital, and the United States the shame and humiliation of the desecration of the territory which is now in process of dedication to the Nation's honored dead.

BRIDGE IN PIERCE COUNTY, WASH.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 5879) authorizing Llewellyn Evans, J. F. Hickey, and B. A. Lewis, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Puget Sound, within the county of Pierce, State of Washington, at or near a point commonly know as the Narrows, and consider the same at this time. An identical House bill (H. R. 16838) was passed by the House yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 5879, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be is enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, Llewellyn Evans, J. F. Hickey, and B. A. Lewis, hereinafter called the grantees, and their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Puget Sound, within the county of Pierce, State of Washington, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near a point commonly known as the Narrows, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. After completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War either the State of Washington, or any municipality or political subdivision thereof within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of five years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interest in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interest in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value.

SEC. 3. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State of Washington, or by any municipality or other political subdivision or public agency thereof, under the provisions of section 2 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of tolls shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of tolls shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 4. The grantees and their assigns shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War, and with the Highway Department of the State of Washington, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acqquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the Highway Department of the State of Washington shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge. For the purpose of such investigation the said grantees and their assigns shall make available all records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 2 of this act, subject to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 5. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the grantees and their assigns; and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 6. All contracts made in connection with the construction of the bridge authorized by this act and which shall involve the expenditure of more than $5,000, shall be let by competitive bidding. Such contracts shall be advertised for a reasonable time in some newspaper of general circulation published in the State in which the bridge is located and in the vicinity thereof; sealed bids shall be required and the contracts shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. Verified copies or abstracts of all bids received and of the bid or bids accepted shall be promptly furnished to the highway department of the State in which such bridge is located. A failure to comply in good faith with the provisions of this section shall render null and void any contract made in violation thereof, and the Secretary of War may after hearings, order the suspension of all work upon such bridge until the provisions of this section shall have been fully complied with.

SEC. 7. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

YORKTOWN SESQUICENTENNIAL EXPOSITION

The SPEAKER. To fill the vacancy on the Yorktown Sesquicentennial Exposition Commission caused by the death of Mr. Frothingham, of Massachusetts, the Chair appoints Mr. STOBBS, of Massachusetts.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE OREGON CAVES, SISKIYOU NATIONAL FOREST

Mr. COLTON, Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (S. 3162) to authorize the improvement of the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg., and move its adoption. I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah calls up a conference report upon the bill S. 3162, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3162) to authorize the improvement of the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

DON B. COLTON,
SAM B. HILL,
Managers on the part of the House.
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
E. D. SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers of the House submit the following statement in explanation of the action agreed upon and recommended in the conference report, namely:

The first amendment simply substitutes "is" for "be."

The second amendment inserts the words "in more than" on page 2, line 2, of the bill, and is accepted by the parties interested.

Amendment 3, on which the House recedes, added to section 2 the words "including the fixing of charges for admission to said caves sufficient to maintain and develop them."

These caves form an interesting geological exhibit of permanent public interest and value. The only means the Forest Service had to protect and supervise these caves was giving a special permit for the purpose of providing guide service through the caves and erecting permanent improvements and operating guide headquarters, rest room, and other improvements for the convenience of the public. The amount of the fee to be charged the public for his service is agreed upon with the forest supervisor each year. It is probable that the future patronage will exceed that of the past. Unless the present arrangement is continued, the Government will be compelled to install its own system of guides, which would entail new supervisory responsibilities and a considerable increase in expenditures.

The Department of Agriculture favors the continuation of the present policy and believe that, in view of the improvements authorized by this bill, the permittees will be able to reduce their fee for guide service. That seems to your conferees, a preferable arrangement.

DON B. COLTON,
SAM B. HILL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

ADDRESS OF HON. CLYDE KELLY

Mr. HOGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein an address delivered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] on the one hundred and twentieth anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birth, on the life of Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOGG. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the consent given to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to print the address given by our colleague, Hon. CLYDE KELLY, of Pennsylvania, at the one hundred and twentieth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, in Soldiers' Memorial Hall, in Pittsburgh, on the 12th of February. The commemoration and banquet was held under the auspices of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War. Participating in the event were the Ladies' Auxiliary of Sons of Union Veterans, Woman's Relief Corps, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, and Daughters of Union Veterans. The presiding officer was C. H. William Ruhe, past department commander Grand Army of the Republic and president of the Veteran Guard.

The address is as follows:

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Commander Ruhe, members of the Veteran Guard of the Grand Army of the Republic, and members of the Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War: Abraham Lincoln is a large subject for a small speech. In 56 years he acted many parts on the stage of life and each one has been the basis for a volume.

He was a Pennsylvanian by descent, a Virginian by parentage, an Indianian by education, an Illinoisan by residence, an American by life. He had within himself the characteristics which proclaimed him "new birth of our new soil—the first American."

It may truly be said that this man is the first born on our soil, bred from the cradle under American institutions and constitutions, who rose out of deepest poverty to the highest place in the land. He was American through and through in his virtues and his weaknesses—American in everything that gave him undying fame.

What do I mean by American? What is the dominant quality in Americanism? I take it to be faith in man. America was built on that faith before it was built on governmental machinery. That faith was the fuel in the engine. Those founding fathers who declared that "all men are created equal and have inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" were heroes of faith in mankind. The men who wrote the Constitution of the United States believed so completely in the wisdom and the patriotism of the people that they entrusted to the common man the power to preserve or to destroy their "Holy Experiment."

Other Governments distrusted the people and set up the divine right of kings to rule. America enthroned the idea of the divine right of the people to rule themselves. These master builders bet their own lives and possessions and the life of their new nation on the intelligence of the American people.

If faith in man be the supreme trait in Americanism, then I believe it true that no man has ever embodied that trait more perfectly than that uncommon Commoner, that master man whose birth we celebrate to-night. It is often said that Lincoln possessed an extraordinary combination of mental and moral qualities. That is true but in every life there must be one dominant quality which furnishes the key and explanation of them all.

The Lincoln key characteristic was his faith in common manhood and its possibilities for growth and development. That faith shines out in every word and deed. It is that which molded and made the Lincoln we love. It was that which Premier Lloyd George singled out in his dedication address when the monument to Abraham Lincoln was unveiled in Westminster Abbey in 1920. "It was his trust in the people," said the Premier, "his belief in democracy, which has made him the cherished possession of the common people of the world."

Here is a man who never won a battle but who eclipsed the fame of world conquerors. Uneducated in the schools, his utterances have been declared by classic Oxford college to be the finest examples of pure English in the history of the race. Without executive experience, he built out of warring elements, a Union that has become the most powerful the world has ever known.

Do you ask the secret of these seeming miracles? Let Lincoln answer: "Allow all the governed an equal voice in the government; that and that only is self-government. I insist that if there is anything that it is the duty of the whole people never to intrust to hands other than their own, that thing is the preservation of their own liberties and institutions." * * * I want to lift men up, to broaden rather than contract their privileges. * * * I stand for the man above the dollar. * * * The peoples' will constitutionally expressed is the ultimate law for all.

I know of nothing more important to-night than for us as Americans in the land of Lincoln, to consider the Lincoln faith. The danger of losing that faith confronts us as never before. The past 25 years, with their marvelous, scientific progress and material advancement have gained us much, but they seem to have brought a loss as well—a loss of belief in man.

Through books and lectures and in conversation, we hear the cynics who sit in the seats of the scornful, mocking at the intelligence and the virtue of the common people who loved Lincoln and whom Lincoln loved. He insisted that the Lord loved the common people, too, for he made so many of them.

But these modern political atheists never see a good quality in man nor fail to see a bad one. They sneer at right and wrong as superstitious ideas. They besmatter with mud the great names which shine out in American history. They are human owls, loving the darkness and hunting for vermin, while denying that the sun shines in the heavens. They bulwark their faithlessness with argument. They point to the assaults upon democracy in many lands. Russia, under a dictatorship of the proletariat; Italy under the dictatorship of the Fascista; Spain, Portgual, Yugoslavia under the rule of dictators; in all these lands men are ruled without their own consent. In America, too, say these cynics and mockers, we shall have to admit that the people are not to be trusted with self-government and perforce provide some kind of dictatorship to replace democracy.

That is a fundamental conflict far more vital than any disputes over the tariff or between political parties. Its result will determine whether America will follow the Lincoln faith to security and prosperity or be destroyed by loss of faith. Our danger is not corruption nor armed force; we have met them and conquered them in the past. Our danger is—no faith.

Let me put before you two contrasting pictures for your inspection. Here is a disordered, littered-up lawyer's office in Springfield, Ill., in the summer of 1858. Half a dozen men are sitting in dilapidated chairs. Their hands are clenched; their faces grim set as the faces of men who have made up their minds beyond the chance of change.

There sits Herndon, law partner of Lincoln, with pages of Lincoln's manuscript in his hand. He reads once more aloud a dynamic declaration from the speech which Lincoln proposes to give in his acceptance of the Republican nomination for United States Senator from Illinois.

"A house divided against itself can not stand. I believe this Government can not endure half slave and half free. I do not expect the Union to be dissolved. I do not expect the house to fall, but I do expect it will cease to be divided."

That statement has since been hailed as a "shout from the watchtower of history." These friends of Lincoln in the office that day do not so regard it. They understand what that declaration means better than we do to-day. Slaveholders were on the aggressive and were threatening disunion. The North was panic-stricken, willing to yield many things if peace might be preserved. The suggestion that slavery might overthrow freedom in the entire Union was to risk not only political suicide but personal safety as well.

Grim silence follows the reading. Then Herndon says, "It must be stricken out." Joshua Speed and the others earnestly agree and all look toward a tall, angular, melancholy looking man who stands gazing out of the window. Head bent forward, his sad, sympathetic eyes seem not to view the scene in the street below but rather to look upon a vision of the years that lie ahead. Still those eyes, though they see dread things to come, are steadfast, faithful, and true.

That silent man is Nancy Hank's boy grown up to Honest Abe. He is not famous nor successful but looks instead like a mournful failure. His friends, loving him and ambitious for him, do not dream that that homely countenance will be made immortal on canvas and in marble and bronze and that the kindly faith of Lincoln will be a loved possession of the plain people of the world.

Just now his friends are angry with him. Why does he insist upon his folly in the face of this worldly wise advice? However true his "house divided against itself" allusion, it must not be permitted to destroy him. He must not imperil his political future by a few words.

After a long time, Lincoln turns around and approaches the group of old-time, true and trusted friends. One gnarled hand strikes into the other and Lincoln speaks in a voice whose sincerity and determination brook no contradiction.

"Old friends," he says, "my mind is made up. It is the truth, and I will deliver it as written. I am nothing, but truth is everything. Slavery is a black, foul lie that can never be consecrated into God's hallowed truth. I would rather be defeated with those expressions in my speech held up and discussed before the people than be victorious without them. The people will decide aright. Why should there not be a patient confidence in the ultimate justice of the people? Is there any better or equal hope in the world? Let us have faith that right makes might and in that faith let us dare to do our duty as we understand it."

There is no further debate. The speech is delivered exactly as written, and it changes history. The passage to which the friends objected becomes the factor which makes this honest, courageous man President of the United States. The people he trusted gave him a majority of votes in the senatorial contest, for he received 126,000 to 121,000 for Douglas. In the legislature Lincoln lost by 8 votes, but he was the true victor. He had spent $1,000 against a fund of $80,000 spent for Douglas. Lincoln won every real point. His faith had made him whole.

Now, against that picture of courageous, radiant Americanism let me place another of darker hue.

Here is a classroom in a college in 1929. A hundred young Americans are sitting there listening to a professor of history and civics. Young, eager minds they have, open to new impressions and easily influenced. The instructor enthusiastically commends a new book, Political Behavior. Its author is Frank Kent, the well-known political writer of Baltimore. He says his book contains "the heretofore unwritten laws, customs, and principles of politics as practiced in the United States."

The professor, with a self-satisfied smile of superiority, reads these excerpts from this so-called textbook of American politics:

"* * * Probably the most important single accomplishment for the politically ambitious, the most effective asset they can possibly acquire, is the fine art of seeming to say something without doing so. * * * Absolute sincerity and a successful political career are utterly incongruous and impossible. The two things simply do not click. Anything like complete candor with the voters is fatal to any candidacy * * *.

"* * * It is a fact that the American people as a whole can not stand complete sincerity in politics and that any man who told them the unvarnished truth about the issues, about himself, about his opponet, would be politically destroyed * * *.

"* * * The simple truth is that the great mass of the voters are utterly uninformed and unintelligent, impervious to reason, can be reached only through their emotions; are swayed wholly by their prejudices or personal interests * * *.

"* * * If, as must be obvious to all save the completely inexperienced and unsophisticated, being sincere and sensible is the surest way to be defeated, it is silly to make a sincere and sensible campaign * * *. The number of really intelligent and informed voters to whom it is possible for a candidate to appeal in the State or Nation is negligible * * *.

"* * * If you prove a candidate's ignorance, it is almost sure to elect him. The people themselves, being ignorant and conscious of the fact, have a natural and spontaneous sympathy with the man exposed as ignorant * * *.

"* * * A man in politics is foolish to hold on to his convictions after they have become unpopular with the people. No successful politician can afford to stand steadfastly by his convictions and none do. There is no more fatal thing for a politician than a fixed principle * * *. If you do not fool the people, they will turn on you. They resent the candidate or the party that does not fool them * * *.

"* * * In politics most of the time a man goes dead against his head and heart, his mind and conscience.

"* * * The people, as a whole, can not distinguish right and wrong. One might as well talk about right and wrong in the solving of a cross-word puzzle. Looked at in the right light, politics is not an immoral game, it is merely unmoral."

These are but excerpts from 342 pages of such philosophy, which belong rightfully in a book entitled "Political Misbehavior." Some of the students ask if it is intended to be a burlesque or comedy production. They are assured that it is a serious handbook written by a political expert of great wisdom.

One student gives his view: "Either Mr. Kent believes he is telling the truth or he does not. If he does, he is not intelligent enough to write a book on American politics. If he does not, he is not fit to be a citizen in a people's nation."

The instructor warmly chides the boy for expressing such out-of-date sentiments and commends a more careful study of the book. In the minds of the members of the class are implanted doctrines which are certain to influence their behavior when they enter upon the activities of American citizenship.

My friends, those two pictures are symbols of the struggle which rages to-day for the future of America. What shall it profit America if we have wealth and population and automobiles, but lose our own soul. If Kent and his fellow cynics are right, the nation of Abraham Lincoln can not endure. If they are right, Lincoln's "government of the people, for the people, and by the people" should perish from the earth because of its weakness and its false pretense. Nor can it endure half true to the faith of Lincoln and half follower of the unbeliever.

Free government does not perish from one blow. It dies from the assaults of insidious, unseen enemies. I know of no enemies more deadly than these cynical souls who preach that the American people are "impervious to reason." If that be true, it follows that the people should be protected against their ignorance by those few supermen who modestly admit that they alone are open to the dictates of reason. That superiority will excuse their robbing the people of one right to-day and another to-morrow.

It is the method of the termites, or white ants, which are now ravaging sections of California, having found their way here from Africa and South America. They are blind slugs and never appear above the ground. They construct their tunnels under buildings and come up through posts and pillars and rafters, eating out the inner wood and leaving only a shell behind. At last the structure falls into a shapeless heap of dust and rubbish.

It is time to awaken to the danger. There are no ancient liberties, for liberty can not be inherited. It must be won and kept by each generation. Liberty is no gift of God, like the air and the sunshine. It is something won by struggle and toil and fighting. It demands the spirit of Abraham Lincoln in the men of to-day.

Now, let us face the question frankly. Are Americans to-day incapable of self-government? Are they morons swayed only by petty prejudices and personal interests?

I do not pretend that the history of America shows that public opinion is always infallible. Sometimes the people have been like these settlers at Jamestown in 1607, who thought a hill of yellow pyrites of iron was a heap of real gold, and sent a ship load to England only to find it was worthless fool's gold.

But I want to show to-night that Lincoln knew all that and still kept his faith. He knew the people's prejudices and their possibilities. He helped them conquer one and realize the other. He knew that the whole basis of democracy is that the people have judgments and that they will correct their mistakes in judgment.

Let us look at Lincoln in the light of this highly commended text book of politics which claims to teach the only path to success in American politics. The people as a whole to-day must be adjudged more intelligent than in 1860, when universal education was as yet unknown.

If Lincoln could safely trust the people of his day, surely we may go as far with safety. There has been a steady advance in enlightenment during two generations. Despite our mistakes and failures, the people in 1929 stand on a higher intellectual and moral plane than in 1860.

Since that time we have built on the basis of people's rule the richest and most powerful nation on the globe. Instead of a land half slave and half free, as in his day, we have a realm where "if a slave's foot press it sets him free." We have met a world crisis in war and the mighty tests of peace successfully. Surely if we can prove that Lincoln's faith in the common man had a sound basis in his day, that faith has a still more enduring foundation in our own times.

Now, what was Lincoln's method which brought him from log cabin to the Capitol and White House? Did he act on the belief that the first principle of political success is the fine art of seeming to say something without doing so? Did he believe it silly to make a sincere and sensible campaign? Was he a weather vane of convictions? Did he seek to fool the people? Did he go dead against his head and heart, his mind and conscience? Was his success due to crooked and dishonest politics?

Simply to ask these questions shows how monstrous are the rules for political success as laid down by Kent in his Political Behavior.

You remember how Lincoln declared for woman suffrage in his first announcement for the legislature. That was no vote-snaring scheme—it was the most unpopular plank he could have selected for his platform. But he believed in it as a part of the people's right to rule, and he said so, even though he could easily have avoided mentioning it.

At the very beginning of his political career one Col. Robert Allen made the statement that he knew facts which if disclosed would ruin Lincoln's chances of election.

Mr. Kent knows exactly what the successful politician must do in such a case. At all costs he must keep such a story from becoming public. To do anything else would be silly and unpardonable folly.

What did Lincoln do? He wrote at once to Colonel Allen, and he said:

"I once had the confidence of the people. If I have since done anything which if known would subject me to a forfeiture of that confidence, he that knows that thing and conceals it, is a traitor to his country's interest."

Lincoln never dodged an issue, and his one aim was to make the people understand exactly what he meant. Mobs were committing lawless acts in Illinois. Did he keep silent and talk about other things? No; he said:

"Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberties. Let reverence for the law become the political religion of the Nation."

The liquor question was as bitterly contested as to-day. Did he run away from such an issue? Instead he delivered a burning address, in which he compared slavery and liquor control. He said:

"Turn now to the temperance revolution. In it we shall find a stronger bondage broken, a viler slavery manumitted, a greater tyrant deposed."

Strange, indeed, that such a completely inexperienced and unsophisticated politician should have succeeded. Kent says such tactics could only end in destruction. But the people elected and reelected this man to the legislature. Then they sent him to Congress. Somehow the people loved and trusted this man.

"Whose soul was clean and strong, whose sword was bright and keen,
Who knew the splendor of the fight and what its issues mean,
Who never took one step aside, nor stopped though hope was dim,
But cleft a pathway through the strife and bade men follow him."

As a Member of Congress, Lincoln still did not try to fool the people. The Mexican War was at the threshold. Lincoln voted at once for a resolution declaring that the war was "unnecessarily and unconstitutionally commenced by the President." He introduced his famous "spot" resolution, asking the President to locate the spot where he said American blood had been shed by Mexican soldiers.

His friend Herndon wrote that his course would ruin him politically. Lincoln responded: "Would you have voted what you felt and knew to be a lie? Would you have gone out of the House—skulked the vote? If you had skulked one vote you would have had to skulk many more before the end of the session."

These modern mockers would have made short shrift in answering those agonized questions of Lincoln. "Certainly, vote what you know to be a lie. Its the only way to succeed in politics. Skulk any number of votes. If you do not fool the people they will turn on you."

Thank God for the honesty and the inspiring example of Congressman Abraham Lincoln.

That term of Congress was full of vexing problems. The storm center was the Wilmot proviso, introduced by a Pennsylvania Congressman, David Wilmot, of Towanda. It aroused the fiercest passions for it provided that "in the territory to be secured from Mexico there should be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, of which the party shall have been duly convicted."

Lincoln never skulked a test upon it but stated that he voted for the Wilmot proviso forty times during this congressional term. He believed that the people could tell right from wrong. He always stressed the moral side of the question. "Slavery is wrong" was the burden of his cry.

His faith in peoples rule and self-government was as wide as mankind, not qualified by race nor sex. He said:

"My faith in the proposition that each man should do precisely as he pleases with all that is exclusively his own lies at the foundation of the sense of justice that is within me. When the white man governs himself that is self-government, but when he governs himself and also governs another man, that is despotism. I say that no man is good enough to govern another man without that other's consent."

His term in Congress completed, Lincoln returned to the practice of law in Springfield. He was the same faithful, honest, outspoken American. He would refuse cases even from friends if he believed justice was on the other side. He would abandon cases even in the midst of trial when facts were produced which showed his client in the wrong. In his very first case before the circuit court he stated that his examination had showed him that all the authorities were on the other side and none of his own. Carl Schurz says "It is not surprising that the mere appearance of so conscientious an attorney in any case should have carried, not only to the juries, but even to judges, a presumption of right on his side."

Lincoln could not stay out of politics. His love for justice and right forced him out on the stage of political affairs. His return was marked by defiance of another of Kent's laws of political success—blind following of party names. Lincoln bolted the old Whig Party, with which he had been affiliated, and helped to organize the new Republican Party. He joined in a declaration of the convention that "repudiating all previous party attachments, names, and predilections we unite ourselves together pledged to bring the administration of the Government back to the control of first principles."

Lincoln's loyalty was to the people rather than party. "I will stand with anybody that stands right," he said, "Stand with him while he is right and part from him when he goes wrong."

Soon he was the representative of the new party in the campaign against Douglass. In these historic debates he did not talk to the people as though they were morons, unable to understand the issues, or weaklings swayed only by their emotions. He expounded the most fundamental things in political philosophy in words as clear as crystal.

It was these masterly addresses, replete with logic and clear thinking, that won him a majority of the popular vote for Senator and also forced his nomination for President of the United States. Remember, Lincoln was a wise politician, although in Frank Kent's eyes, he was an ignoramus beyond compare. Lincoln had had practical experience and had been a candidate for public office many times. As far as I know Kent has never been a candidate but has spent his life writing cynical comments on politics and politicians. But Lincoln knew the people as well as any man ever did. He knew the probable effect of a man's sayings and doings on the public mind. Knowing more about political psychology than all the Kents who ever lived, he went before the people and told the frank, unvarnished truth. Somehow, the people, those ignorant, blind, prejudiced souls, understood this man and voted for him. They saw the strength and sureness of this God-appointed leader of theirs and they gave him their loyalty and their love.

Lincoln's trust in the people led to their trust in him. Hear him:

"Those who deny freedom for others deserve it not for themselves, and under the rule of a just God can not long retain it. We must make this a land of liberty in fact as well as in name. Let us appeal to the sense and patriotism of the people and not to their prejudices. Let us spread the floods of enthusiasm aroused here over the vast prairies so suggestive of freedom. There is both power and magic in public opinion. To that let us now appeal."

Is that not an inspiring contrast to the sneering jibes which blight the very roots of Americanism? Should there be hesitation in choosing this day whom you will follow—Lincoln or the mockers?

When the Republican National Convention came and Seward, and Chase, and other eastern leaders seemed to be far outstripping the Railsplitter, some of the Illinois delegates suggested promises of appointments in Lincoln's name. Surely any successful politician must be willing to promise the world in such a situation. What did Lincoln say? Without a moment's hesitation he commanded his friends:

"I authorize no bargains and will be bound by none."

Impossible, of course, but this man, defying every rule laid down in "political behavior," was chosen standard bearer in the most critical period of American history. More than that, he was elected President by the people.

With secession lifting its head and the pillars of the temple of the Republic trembling, Lincoln held firm his faith in the people. No storm could shake his confidence in majority rule. Here is what he said:

"A majority held in restraint by constitutional checks and limitations and always changing easily with deliberate changes of popular opinions and sentiments is the only sovereign of a free people. Whoever rejects it, does, of necessity, fly to anarchy or despotism. We should all be bound by the majority of the American people; if not, then a minority must control. Would that be right? Assuredly not. If I adopt a wrong policy the opportunity for condemnation will occur in four years time. Then I can be turned out and a better man with better views put in my place."

Mr. Kent says that the number of really intelligent and informed voters is a very small minority, but of course it should rule. Vastly different is the Lincoln belief that every power, barring none, belongs to all the people. Hear him:

"This country, with its institutions, belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall be weary of the existing Government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it or their revolutionary right to dismember or overthrow it."

That is a heart-and-soul conviction indeed. What does Mr. Kent say about the folly of holding to convictions? "No successful politician can afford to stand steadfastly by his convictions and none do."

Listen to Lincoln in those agonizing days of 1860:

"There is no possible compromise but which puts us under again and leaves us all our work to be done over again. On that point hold firm as with a chain of steel."

In Independence Hall, in Philadelphia, when he was on his way to Washington to be inaugurated President, Lincoln said:

"If this country can not be saved without giving up the principle of the declaration, I would rather be assassinated on this spot than surrender it."

Does that sound as though this man dared not have a fixed principle which he would maintain, even with his life? In the darkest hours of the Civil War he cried out:

"I expect to maintain this contest until successful or until I die or am conquered or my term expires or the country or Congress forsakes me."

I am not going to recount the four years of stress and storm this man, "with malice toward none, with charity for all," had to endure as he held firmly to the right as God gave him to see the right. Fortunate, indeed, that in that whirlwind time a man of the people held command.

You boys in blue here to-night as honor guests know those four years better than the rest of us. I leave it to you if it was not love for Lincoln and faith in him which sent you to the Army of the Union rather than all the fine-spun theories. You were part of a mighty force 2,778,000 strong, most of you young lads just coming into manhood. As many men entered the Army and Navy for Lincoln as there were people in the United States when our fathers declared all men are created equal. Surely that proves that the American people were as worthy of confidence as Abraham Lincoln believed them to be.

It seems like a long time since you men of the Grand Army of the Republic answered the call of Father Abraham. But his cause and yours is not old; it is young and vital. Your spirit is not old; it inspires the heart of every American worthy of the name. We honor you to-day for your faith and the price you were willing to pay for it. We owe to Lincoln and you the fact that we have one land and one flag. God grant that we shall never forget our debt to you who still remain and who, pray God, shall long remain as living symbols of patriotic faith and devotion.

Lincoln kept his faith in man until he died. He might have been excused for keeping silence on vexing issues. Instead he constantly argued all the facts. He wrote letters to public officials and private citizens. He wrote statements to communities and public gatherings. Unwearied, he debated the great features of his policy with the people. He was not spending his life and energy in order to say nothing while seeming to say something. He brought all the truth out in the sunshine for the people to see.

He counted on the people only. In response to a seranade by an Indiana regiment he said:

"For your kind expression I am extremely grateful, but on the other hand, I assure you that the Nation is more indebted to you and to such as you than to me. It is upon the brave hearts and strong arms of the people of the country that our reliance has been placed in support of free government and free institutions."

When the working men of Manchester, England, hard pressed by the closing of the cotton mills, sent a letter of encouragement to Lincoln, he responded:

"Under the circumstances, I can not but regard your decisive utterances upon the slavery question as an instance of sublime Christian heroism which has not been surpassed in any age or in any country. It is, indeed, an energetic and reinspiring assurance of the inherent power of truth and of the ultimate and universal triumph of justice, humanity, and freedom."

In the midst of war, long-drawn out; with defeats coming thick and fast; with a popular general the candidate against him, Lincoln was triumphantly reelected by the people he trusted. This man who never tried to deceive the people, nor dodge an issue, summed it up when he said:

"You can fool all the people part of the time, and some of the people all the time, but you can not fool all the people all of the time."

He never said the people were infallible and never made mistakes. His faith in the people rested in the fact that the voice of the people, speaking after enlightenment, is the nearest thing to the voice of God it is possible for governments to secure. Just after his election in 1864 he was serenaded by his friends at the White House.

"The strife of the election," said Lincoln in an offhand speech, "is but human nature applied to the facts in the case. What has occurred in this case must ever occur in similar cases. Human nature will not change. In any future great national trial, compared with the men of this, we shall have as weak and as strong, as silly and as wise, as bad and as good. Let us therefore study the incidents in this as philosophy to learn wisdom and none of them as wrongs to be avenged."

My friends, I hear the Kents and the mockers say, "Abraham Lincoln was a star apart. His time made him what he was. You can not fairly use him as a type of the American politician."

He was not a star apart save as he made himself so. As well say that the heap of twigs in the forest brings the fire as to say the time made the man Lincoln.

He was in politics all his life and no man was more ambitious for public office. He was a candidate for the captaincy of a militia regiment, for the postmastership of a village, for the deputy surveyorship of a county, for a circuit judgeship, for the office of delegate to conventions, for commissioner of the land office, for Representative in Congress, for the governorship of a Territory, for United States Senator, and for the Presidency of the United States.

He was a politician in the truest, highest sense of the word, and his achievements in politics should silence forever those who sneer at that profession and career, which should be high in the estimation of American youth.

He knew defeats and disappointments but they never embittered him nor made him cynical. If the cynics of to-day had known one-tenth of the defeats of Lincoln, we might pardon them their mockery, perhaps. No man was ever more brutally ridiculed and caricatured than Lincoln, but his faith was like gold refined in the fire. It was that which made him able, when all others were appalled, to stand at the wheel of the ship of state and bring it into safe harbor.

He played the game honestly from the first day to the last. He made an agreement when he entered Congress that he would ask but one term. Many of his friends besought him to run again, but he answered:

"I made the declaration that I would not be a candidate again. To enter myself as a competitor of others is what my word and honor forbid."

When he was in the midst of the campaign for reelection and facing defeat, he wrote to one of his appointees not to interfere with the rights of subordinates to vote as they pleased. As he believed that there could be no success in a bad cause, so he believed that there could be no true success won by bad methods.

My friends, I believe I have proved the dynamic power of Lincoln's faith in man. Of course, I know that faith was a part of his religion. The last act of Congress that Abraham Lincoln signed was the one providing that the motto "In God we trust" should be inscribed upon American coins. He believed implicitly in Divine Providence and declared that he was "often driven to his knees because there was no place else to go."

Because he believed in the brotherhood of man he believed in the fatherhood of God. In spite of all the Kents and the cynics, the mockers, and the scornful ones, Abraham Lincoln was eternally right in his faith.

What is the value of these Lincoln celebrations? Is it enough to mouth fine sentiments about a man who died 64 years ago? Surely not. The very fact that each year sees wider remembrance of Lincoln is proof that there is something living in his name and his words and deeds.

I take it that the best tribute we can pay Lincoln is to play the American game as true Americans. To do that we must meet and overthrow the blighting doctrine that Lincoln's philosophy was silly and that no man can follow it and succeed, and that therefore no sensible man will follow it. Lincoln's faith is not copyrighted nor patented; every American may have it for himself.

We must stand with Lincoln, and there is no doubt where he would stand to-day. He would be for every extension of the people's power. He would be for honor and honesty in politics and in public life. He would be for the enforcement of the Constitution and the laws. He would be for education for every child in the land.

He would insist upon the teaching of Americanism in the schools and colleges and universities; the Americanism which believes that the whole people are wiser in the long run than king or caste or class; which advocates majority rule as a primary principle in government; which means equality, not as a leveling down but as a lifting up; which means obedience to lawful authority; which means that while we keep God in our hearts the Nation is safe.

Do they say that no ordinary American to-day can follow Lincoln? Some years ago I visited Stroudsburg, Pa. Some friends took me out to the cemetery and showed me a simple slab above a humble grave. On the stone I read:

"J. Summerfield Staples. Private, Company C, One hundred and seventy-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. Also a member of Second Regiment District of Columbia Volunteers as a substitute for Abraham Lincoln."

There lies an unknown soldier boy, but he served as a substitute for Lincoln where Lincoln could not go himself. There is not an American to-day, however humble and unknown, who can not serve to-day as his substitute in the conflict to keep America American

Every American can help keep the faith of this American, who was—

"A blend of mirth and sadness, smiles, and tears.
A great knight errant of the pioneers.
A homely hero, born of star and sod.
A peasant prince, a masterpiece of God."

How can we meet those scornful, mocking souls, who assail the principles for which Lincoln lived and died? Let us find the answer in a paraphrase of his immortal words:

"It is for us to be dedicated to the great work which here we celebrate to-night so nobly advanced. It is for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us; that from this honored life we take increased devotion to the cause for which he gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that he shall not have lived and died in vain; that this Nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

MAJ. WALTER REED AND OTHERS

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13060) to recognize the high public service rendered by Maj. Walter Reed and those associated with him in the discovery of the cause and means of transmission of yellow fever, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT] to make this request, although the gentleman has not the authority of his committee to call the bill up. The amendments, however, are simply changes in the names, matters of no real importance.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is no change in the amounts?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 13060, with Senate amendments thereto and concur in the Senate amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill and the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

DEGREE-CONFERRING INSTITUTIONS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate bill 2366 to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, relating to degree-conferring institutions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland calls up the conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the conference report.

(For text of conference report and accompanying statement see pages 4073 and 4074 of the House proceedings of February 22, 1929.)

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, what is the order of the day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] has a special order for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky for 30 minutes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, some time ago I introduced a bill (H. R. 17165) to establish here at the seat of government a department of education with a Secretary in the President's Cabinet. I wish to thank the Speaker, the floor leader, and Members of the House for granting to me unanimous consent at this busy season of the House sufficient time to bring to the attention of the Congress and the country the scope and purposes of this measure and to point out what the friends of this measure consider some of the impelling needs for this legislation.

Before entering upon the discussion of the bill I wish to quote from it the important provisions.

Section 1 of the bill declares its purpose to be—to aid and encourage the public schools and promote the public educational facilities of the Nation, so that all the people of the several States and Territories, without regard to race, creed, or color, shall have larger educational opportunities, and thereby abolish illiteracy, make more general the diffusion of knowledge, and provide for the general welfare.

The four principal objections urged against a department of education are—

(1) The States have exclusive jurisdiction in the establishment of schools and their control and regulation;

(2) That the establishment of a department of education would invade the rights of the States in the establishment and regulation of schools;

(3) That Congress has not the power under the Constitution to establish a department of education; and

(4) That such a department is unnecessary.

The proponents of a department of education concede the right of the States to establish and regulate education within their borders without interference from the Federal Government, and we have neither the purpose nor desire to infringe upon these rights.

Section 1 expressly provides that this act shall not impair or infringe upon the laws, the rights, duties, authority, or responsibilities of the several States, Territories, and the citizens thereof with respect not only to the public educational agencies and institutions but likewise as to the private educational institutions and agencies in the several States and Territories.

Section 2 provides for an appropriation of $1,500,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary. It provides likewise for an Assistant Secretary, solicitor, chief clerk, disbursing clerk, and such other scientific, technical, and clerical assistants as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time.

Section 7 authorizes and directs the secretary of education to make studies, investigations, and researches showing the condition and progress of education in the several States and Territories and to make this information available to teachers, school officials, and all others interested in education, in order to aid and encourage the people of the several States and Territories to establish more efficient schools and school systems, to devise better methods of organization, administration, and financing of education, to develop better types of school buildings and provide for their use, to improve methods of teaching and develop more adequate curricula and courses of study. These investigations and studies shall be undertaken in rural, elementary, secondary, higher, professional, physical, including health, and recreational education, and likewise for the mentally and physically handicapped, the training of teachers, immigrant and adult education, and such other fields as in the judgment of the Secretary may require study and investigation to promote the welfare of education throughout the United States and its possessions.

Section 10 authorizes the creation of a national council on education consisting of the head of the department of education of each State and Territory, to consult and advise with the secretary of education on subjects relating to the promotion and development of education in the United States and in its possessions.

The other sections of the bill relate to the transfer of the Bureau of Education with its records, employees, and so forth, to the department of education, providing quarters for the same, making available to the educational officers in the several States and other persons interested in education the result of the studies and investigations made by this department, requiring the secretary of education to make annual report to Congress in writing, and providing that this act shall go into effect July 1, 1930.

A FRIENDLY CRITIC

In my 10 years' service in the House I have heard many eloquent speeches made in behalf of the Departments of State, Finance, National Defense, Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor, and, in fact, in behalf of all the major activities of the 10 great departments of the Government; and also in aid of flood control, river and harbor improvement, reclamation, mining, railroads, lumber, and vocational training in industry and agriculture; but I have heard little discussion on the all-important question of general public education. We largely owe our progress and prosperity to public education.

I am not an unfriendly critic of our public schools. In fact, I attended a small rural public school and later on became a teacher for a time in the rural public schools. I know of no class of men and women of whom so much is required and who give so much of splendid, unselfish service to their respective communities and who receive so little reward as the average public-school teacher. Our purpose is to help, if we can, pupils, teachers, and tax payers. [Applause.]

I have been a member of the Committee on Education of the House for nearly 10 years, and during that time we have had scores of the leading educators, business men, and welfare workers before our committee on bills looking toward the establishment of a department of education. The information that I have received at these hearings, studies made, and my own personal experience in the public schools convince me that education should be aided, encouraged, and dignified by a place in the President's Cabinet. [Applause.]

We now have a population approximating 120,000,000 people and our national wealth is estimated to be more than $350,000,000,000. Every year Congress appropriates billions of dollars for the activities of the Government pertaining largely to the material welfare of our citizens, and only a paltry few thousand dollars to promote education. I am wondering if we are not advancing our material welfare to the neglect of the physical, mental, and spiritual life of the Nation.

EDUCATION OF MAJOR IMPORTANCE

Our forefathers in the preamble to the Constitution declared their purpose to be to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity. No one believes more sincerely than I do in a policy of adequate national defense on land and sea, in the air, and under the sea, and no one rejoices more than I in our material wealth of rivers, lakes, inland seas, highways, railroads, fertile valleys, and our mountains filled with minerals and precious ores, our banks, our commerce, our factories, forests, fields, and mines, but, my countrymen, the security of this Nation does not rest upon the completeness of our armaments on land and sea, our gold, or our possessions; rather it rests more securely upon the enlightened moral and spiritual leadership of the Nation. China has vast possessions and is rich in natural resources, and has a population three times as great as our own. Russia surpasses us in the extent of her possessions and in population. She, too, is rich in minerals and soils, but they can not compare with our own land. They have neglected too long popular education.

What has contributed as much to make the union of the States more perfect, to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote general welfare, and make secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our children as has our schools, colleges, and universities? In urging this measure I feel that I am doing that which will promote the purposes of the founders of the Constitution. [Applause.]

CONSTITUTIONAL

Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, provides:

> Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Justice Story, one of the great constitutional lawyers of the Nation, declared that the test was—> whether or not the act complained of was for the welfare of the people of the United States and general in scope, and not State or local.

Alexander Hamilton in 1791 stated that the phrase "general welfare" was as comprehensive as any that could be used, and that—> there seems to be no reason to doubt that whatever concerns the general interest of learning, of agriculture, of manufactures, and of commerce are within the sphere of the National Congress as far as regards an application of money, the only qualification of the generality of the phrase in question which seems to be admissible is this: That the object to which an appropriation of money is to be made must be general, and not local, its operation extending in fact, or by possibility, throughout the Union, and not being confined to any particular spot.

President Monroe in 1822 expressed his attitude on the "general-welfare" clause in the following language:

> My idea is that Congress has an unlimited power to raise money, and that in its appropriation it has a discretionary power, restricted only by the duty to appropriate it to the purpose of common defense and of general, not local; national, not State, benefit.

The action of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and other Presidents, including President Coolidge, and all the Congresses from 1789 to the present time appears to be in harmony with this construction of Article I, section 8, of the Constitution on the "general-welfare" clause. It appears to me that the makers of the Constitution, after they had expressly stated that Congress had the power to lay and collect taxes, and so forth, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense, feeling that the country would grow and expand, a large discretionary power should be vested in the representatives of the people, inserted the saving clause "and general welfare."

The Continental Congress as early as 1787 in the Ordinances of 1787 made provision for the allotment of lands for the benefit of public education, and by various acts and grants from 1787 to the present time Congress has granted to the States nearly 150,000 square miles of public lands expressly for public-school purposes, and even a larger acreage of swamp lands for their benefit, the proceeds of much of which were used for the construction and maintenance of public education.

Only a few days ago this Congress passed an act, and it was signed by the President, granting 50,000 acres of public lands for miners' hospitals in the States of Utah and Arizona. A number of acts were passed by Congress during the term of President Jefferson granting a part of the public domain to States to aid in public education. In fact, 30 States have received large grants from the Federal Government for this purpose, and Congress appropriated $5,000,000 to the State of Oklahoma in lieu of public lands which became part of the permanent public-school fund of that State. The tables giving names of the States and the amount of public lands granted to the States for public schools are as follows:

In 1802 and 1803 Congress first made public land grants to States for internal improvements. This policy has been followed from time to time, and millions of acres have been granted for that purpose. During the administration of Andrew Jackson, Congress passed an act, approved June 23, 1836, by which $28,000,000 was loaned to the States for internal improvements, education, and other purposes. This money was never repaid.

The Federal Government spent large sums of money in helping to establish State agricultural and mechanical colleges, and we appropriate more than $2,000,000 every year to help sustain them. The Smith-Lever Act, providing for Federal aid in home economics, was approved May 8, 1914. On February 23, 1917, the Smith-Hughes vocational education law was passed, which marked the entrance of the Federal Government upon a national policy of aiding in vocational education. These acts were followed by the Smith-Sears Act, approved June 27, 1918, providing funds for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled soldiers and sailors, and the Smith-Bankhead Act, June 2, 1920, to provide funds for the vocational rehabilitation of citizens disabled in industry or otherwise, and about the same time we passed the Federal aid road act, and at this session of Congress we passed the act to aid vocational training in agriculture.

To carry out these various acts Congress appropriated in 1912 over $8,000,000; in 1920, nearly $36,000,000; in 1921, with the Federal aid for roads included, it jumped to more than $90,000,000. In 1927 the amount was $136,659,786.40, and the purposes for which this sum was expended are as follows:

Federal-aid payments to the States for the fiscal year 1927

Support of agricultural colleges	$2,400,000.00
Support of experiment stations	2,400,000.00
Cooperative agricultural extension work (1926)	6,875,727.55

State fund from sale of public lands (1926)	13,893.96
Total	136,659,786.47

This does not include the sums carried for the Bureau of Education for educational activities in the United States, which in that year amounted to $221,600.

Think about the situation: The Commissioner of Education looking after the reindeer of Alaska; over $700,000 go to Alaska; $284,000 go to education in the 48 States. I want to see the reindeer in Alaska taken care of, but I am more concerned, ladies and gentlemen, in taking care of the 30,000,000 boys and girls in the United States who are in schools and colleges. [Applause.]

BUREAU OF EDUCATION

In 1867 Congress established the present Bureau of Education and has annually made appropriations for its support. If Congress had the power to appropriate public lands and money to establish and maintain schools and colleges in the various States and create a Bureau of Education, it certainly has the power to create a department of education.

There is nothing sacred in the number "10" of the departments of our Government. We started with only three departments, and as the country grew in wealth and population and the activities of the Government were enlarged, the Departments of Army, Navy, Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor were established. The same objections were urged to the establishment of the Departments of the Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor as are now being urged against a department of education. The same objections were urged to the establishment of a Bureau of Education as are now being urged to the establishment of a department of education. All these were established because it was believed by the Congresses and the Presidents that they were acting in harmony with the "general welfare" clause of the Constitution.

WASHINGTON—MADISON—HAMILTON—JEFFERSON—ADAMS

Many of those who oppose this legislation urge that it is not in keeping with the spirit of our Government and violative of the fundamental law of the land.

Washington presided over the Constitutional Convention; Madison is not infrequently declared to be the "father of the Constitution"; Hamilton was one of the outstanding leaders in that great body. Jefferson and Adams were quite as familiar, no doubt, with the power delegated to Congress by the Constitution as some of the opponents of this measure. It is interesting to note the attitude of these great patriotic American leaders on this important subject. Their writings and acts while President clearly indicate that they fully believed that Congress has the power to aid and encourage education in the States.

Washington in his first message to the Congress declared:

Nor am I less persuaded that you will agree with me in opinion that there is nothing which can better deserve your patronage than the promotion of science and literature. Knowledge is in every country the surest basis of public happiness. In one in which the measures of government receive their impressions so immediately from the sense of the community as in ours, it is proportionably essential. To the security of a free constitution it contributes in various ways—by convincing those who are intrusted with the public administration that every valuable end of government is best answered by the enlightened confidence of the people, and by teaching the people themselves to know and to value their own rights; to discern and provide against invasions of them; to distinguish between oppression and the necessary exercise of lawful authority; between burthens and proceeding from a disregard to their convenience and those resulting from the inevitable exigencies of society; to discriminate the spirit of liberty from that of licentiousness—cherishing the first, avoiding the last—and uniting a speedy but temperate vigilance against encroachments, with an inviolable respect to the laws.

Whether this desirable object will be best promoted by affording aids to seminaries of learning already established, by the institution of a national university, or by any other expedients will be well worthy of a place in the deliberations of the legislature.

President Madison in his second annual message to Congress on December 5, 1810, urged the Congress to aid education in the following language:

Whilst it is universally admitted that a well-instructed people alone can be permanently a free people, and whilst it is evident that the means of diffusing and improving useful knowledge from so small a portion of the expenditures for national purposes, I can not presume it to be unseasonable to invite your attention to the advantages of superadding to the means of education provided by the several States. A seminary of learning, instituted by the National Legislature within the limits of exclusive jurisdiction, the expenses of which might be deferred or reimbursed out of the vacant grounds which have accrued to the Nation within those limits. Such an institution, though lacking in its legal character, would be universally in its beneficial effects by enlightening the opinions, by expanding the patriotism, and by assimilating the principles, the sentiments, and the means of those who might resort to this temple of science to be redistributed in due time to every part of the community. Sources of jealousy and prejudice would be diminished, the features of national character would be strengthened, and greater extent given to social harmony. But, above all, a well constituted seminary in the center of the Nation is recommended by the consideration that the additional instruction emanating from it would contribute not less to strengthen the foundation and to adorn the structure of our free and happy system of government.

President Jefferson in his eighth and last message to the Congress, speaking of the continuance of certain revenues for certain purposes, names education among the first that deserves favorable consideration of the Congress:

Patriotism would certainly prefer its continuance and application to the great purpose of public education, roads, rivers, canals, and such other objects of public improvement as it may be thought proper * * *. By these operations, new channels of communication will be opened up between the States, the lines of separation will disappear, their interest will be identical, and their union cemented by new and indissoluble ties. Education is here placed among the articles of public care. A public institution can alone supply those sciences which are necessary to complete the circle, all the parts of which contribute to the improvement of the country, and some of them to its preservation.

President John Quincy Adams said in his first annual message to the Congress:

The great object of the institution of civil government is the improvement of the conditions of those who are parties to the social compact and no government in whatever form constituted can accomplish the lawful ends of its institutions but in proportion as it improves the conditions of those over whom it is established * * *. Among the first, perhaps the very first, instruments for the improvement of the conditions of man is knowledge adapted to the wants, the comforts, and the enjoyments of human life.

From President Harding's message to Congress, December, 1922:

From the very beginning public education has been left mainly in the hands of the States. So far as schooling youth is concerned the policy has been justified, because no responsibility can be so effective as that of the local community alive to its task. I believe in the cooperation of the national authority to stimulate, encourage, and broaden the work of the local authorities. But it is the especial obligation of the Federal Government to devise means and effectively assist in the education of the newcomer from foreign lands, so that the level of American education may be made the highest that is humanly possible.

From President Coolidge's message to Congress December 4, 1928:

While this province belongs peculiarly to the States, yet the promotion of education and efficiency in educational methods is a general responsibility of the Federal Government.

From President Coolidge's message to Congress December 6, 1923:

Having in mind that education is peculiarly a local problem, and that it should always be pursued with the largest freedom of choice by students and parents, nevertheless, the Federal Government might well give the benefit of its counsel and encouragement more freely in this direction. If anyone doubts the need of concerted action by the States of the Nation for this purpose, it is only necessary to consider the appalling figures of illiteracy representing a condition which does not vary much in all parts of the Union. I do not favor the making of appropriations from the National Treasury to be expended directly on local education, but I do consider it a fundamental requirement of national activity which, accompanied by allied subjects of welfare, is worthy of a separate department and a place in the Cabinet. The humanitarian side of government should not be repressed, but should be cultivated.

Mere intelligence, however, is not enough. Enlightenment must be accompanied by that moral power which is the product of the home and of religion. Real education and true welfare for the people rest inevitably on this foundation, which the Government can approve and commend, but which the people themselves must create.

From President Coolidge's message to Congress, 1927:

EDUCATION

For many years it has been the policy of the Federal Government to encourage and foster the cause of education. Large sums of money are annually appropriated to carry on vocational training. Many millions go into agricultural schools. The general subject is under the immediate direction of a Commissioner of Education. While this subject is strictly a State and local function, it should continue to have the encouragement of the National Government. I am still of the opinion that much good could be accomplished through the establishment of a department of education and relief, into which would be gathered all of these functions under one directing member of the Cabinet.

The Republican Party at its national convention at Cleveland in 1924 spoke as follows on the questions of a department of education and relief:

The conservation of human resources is one of the most solemn responsibilities of government. There is an obligation which can not be ignored and which demands that the Federal Government shall as far as it lies within its power give to the people and the States the benefit of its counsel.

The welfare activities of the Government connected with the various departments are already numerous and important, but lack of coordination which is essential to effective action. To meet these needs we approve the recommendation for the creation of a Cabinet post of education and relief.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

A plank adopted at the Democratic National Convention in 1924 in New York City declares as follows:

We believe with Thomas Jefferson and other founders of the Republic that ignorance is the enemy of freedom, and that each State, being responsible for the intellectual and moral qualifications of its citizens and for the expenditure of moneys collected by taxation for the support of its schools shall use its sovereign right in all matters pertaining to education. The Federal Government should offer to the States such counsel, advice, and aid as may be made available through the Federal agencies for the general improvement of our schools in view of our national needs.

It will be observed that the Democratic platform says:

We believe with Thomas Jefferson and other founders of the Republic that ignorance is the enemy of freedom. * * * The Federal Government should offer to the States such counsel, advice, and aid as may be made available through the Federal agencies for the general improvement of our schools on view of our national needs.

The Republican Party states in its platform that the welfare activities of the Government lack coordination, and to meet these demands—

we approve the creation of a Cabinet post of education and relief.

ORGANIZATIONS PRESS AND CITIZENS FAVOR

We hear it said by many opponents of the department of education that the only persons who favor the creation of this department is a self-seeking organization, referring to the National Education Association. The National Education Association is made up of about 200,000 teachers and other officers engaged in the work of public education throughout the Nation. They are in charge of public education. They know the needs of education in this country and their support of this measure should have great weight; but this is not the only organization that is backing a department of education. It numbers among its supporters some 35 or 40 of the great educational, fraternal, and welfare bodies of the country. Among them are the following:

National Congress of Parents and Teachers.
American Federation of Teachers.
General Federation of Women's Clubs.
National League of Women Voters.
American Federation of Labor.
National Committee for Department of Education.
Supreme Council, Scottish Rite of Free Masonry, Southern Jurisdiction of the United States.
International Council of Religious Education.
National Women's Christian Temperance Union.
National Council of Jewish Women.
National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs.
American Association of University Women.
General Grand Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star.
National Women's Trade Union League.
National Board of Young Women's Christian Association.
Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.
National Federation of Music Lovers.
American Library Association.
National Society for Vocational Education, Women's Relief Corps.
National Kindergarten Association.
American Home Economics Association.
American Nurses' Association.
American Hellenic Educational Progressive Association.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question at that point?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. In a moment.

It will be observed that this includes the National Education Association, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, the American Federation of Teachers, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the National League of Women Voters, and the American Federation of Labor.

Can it be said that these groups of people representing together millions of parents, teachers, and welfare workers are not acquainted with the needs and interested in the children of the land, the cause of education, and the preservation of our country? I could not wish for better support than the millions of these unselfish men and women, members of these 35 or 40 great American organizations.

Furthermore, there are hundreds of thousands of individual citizens, many great newspapers and periodicals supporting this measure who have no membership in the organizations to which I refer. Three polls of the Sixty-ninth and Seventieth Congresses show a comfortable majority in both Houses favorable to a department of education, but neither the House nor Senate has ever had an opportunity to vote on a measure creating a department of education. These measures have been smothered in committee by men being placed or getting on the Committees on Education of the House and Senate who are opposed to this measure.

One of these days the American people are going to insist upon their representatives in the House and Senate being given an opportunity to express the will of the Nation on this very, very important piece of legislation.

30,000,000 PUPILS

That we may have a more comprehensive idea of the importance of this program, I wish to call your attention to the fact that we have about 30,000,000 students and nearly 1,000,000 teachers in the schools, colleges, and universities of the Nation. We spend in round numbers $3,000,000,000 annually for education, and have invested in lands, buildings, and equipment more than $5,000,000,000. These 30,000,000 young people of to-day will become the Republic of to-morrow. Let us remember that the "trained mind" is the greatest producing agency in the world, and without it fertile soil, timbered lands, and mineral deposits are but so much useless material. The State that fails to educate "dooms its children to political and industrial subjugation." The human mind can not visualize the potential power and wealth of these 30,000,000 young Americans, trained as they should be physically, mentally, and spiritually. The question arises, Are we, under present methods, giving to these young people the training to which they are entitled and which will best equip them to be most useful to themselves and our country, and, furthermore, is this education being provided with due regard and consideration for the taxpayer? Looking at the program in its larger aspects we may admit that we have a sufficient number of teachers, ample investment and equipment; however, I think a research and study will disclose that there is much yet to be desired, helpful to the pupils, better training and better pay for our teachers, and wide improvement may be made in buildings and equipment and economies may be effected resulting in large benefits to the taxpayer.

$200,000,000 FOR RESEARCH

The National Education Association is one of the earnest sponsors of this measure. The teachers realize the tremendous responsibility to these 30,000,000 young Americans and to the taxpaying public. They know the situation. They tell us that they need help, and they are pointing to the way in which we can help. They urge us to give to education the same encouragement and dignity we give to commerce, agriculture, and labor. The Bureau of Education has now been created more than 60 years, but we have starved it from the time of its creation. Last year we appropriated something less than $1,000,000 for the Bureau of Education, but we directed that not more than $284,000 of it be used for education in the United States and more than $700,000 of that sum we directed to be used in Alaska, under the direction of the Commissioner of Education, looking after reindeer, health, education, and so forth, of the people of the small number of people in Alaska. Is it not a crying shame that we should use nearly three times as much money for the reindeer, health, and education in Alaska as we use for education in the 48 States? Are not the 30,000,000 "dears" of the 48 States of much more importance to the welfare of this country than the "deers" of Alaska? There are those who make light of research and survey in education. The February, 1929, number, of the Nation's Business has a very illuminating article on "debunking research." The writer points out that, in 1927, according to a compilation made by the National Research Council, there was spent for scientific research in industry that year $200,000,000, while we only spent the small sum in university and governmental research of $17,000,000. If the hard-headed business men of the country see the necessity and value of spending $200,000,000 for research in commerce, mines, factories, and so forth, how much more important is it that we have proper research to deal with the 30,000,000 pupils, 1,000,000 teachers, nearly 300,000 public educational institutions, and the expenditure of $3,000,000,000 annually for educational purposes? This writer says that, although industry spent $200,000,000 in 1927 and large sums before that time in research, many great corporations were unable to go ahead in some lines because of lack of fundamental and scientific information. We have the students, we have the teachers, and we have the buildings and equipments; but are we proceeding along the best and most economical lines for the good of these students and with due regard for the taxpayers? The great activities of the Departments of Commerce, Agriculture, and Labor are in research. The Department of Commerce is constantly seeking new markets for American products and to bring the producers and consumers together. These researches have brought us billions of dollars of foreign commerce and greatly benefited labor as well as industry. We spend other millions every year in research in agriculture. The experimentation, studies, surveys, and researches by the Bureau of Roads in the Department of Agriculture as to materials, plans of construction, financing of highways and bridges, in my judgment have saved the American many times their cost; and who can estimate how much has been saved in handling our crops, fruits, cattle, and poultry, in producing and marketing them? The result of these researches is made available to all of our citizens. No one is compelled to accept this information, but our citizens are gladly availing themselves of this service, and it is adding to the progress and prosperity of the Nation.

Now, we insist upon research, study, and investigation for education. There are wider differences in educational conditions in the various communities in the country than there were in the matter of building roads and in agriculture. Research will gather best methods and plans of construction of building, of financing, courses of study, training of teachers, recreational, primary, elementary and higher education, and make this information available to educational institutions and officers and all others interested in education in the Nation. This will bring about closer cooperation and coordination. Understand that this information will not be forced upon anyone. The Man of Galilee said that "the truth will make us free." We know that the people of the land will be anxious to know the truth. Whatever has proven to be sound and helpful in one community will then be available to the people of every other community of the land—just like our information about roads, poultry, cattle, fruits, and so forth. All who have made a study of our educational programs agree there is tremendous waste in the cost of operation of many of our educational institutions and more unfortunate still the waste of human energy and opportunities. We have not as yet worked out a comprehensive plan of coordination of elementary, secondary, and higher institutions of learning. These do not articulate as they should. They do not fit in together. There is too much lost motion and waste of effort and money. We must work out plans for elementary education with the ultimate view of having them fit into the high-school and college systems. Courses of study, buildings, and equipment should be planned and laid out with regard to their ultimate ends and purposes. The elementary program should naturally fit into junior high, advanced high, and college work. School officials, parents, teachers, and pupils should have before them the best plans, the most successful programs of the various communities and the States of the Union. We too long have had the idea of giving students some learning, some culture, and too often ignore the practical aspects of education. The students should be trained along lines so as to enable them to be most useful to themselves and to their communities. These studies, no doubt, will point out the value of high standards of qualifications and better pay for teachers and to emphasize more clearly the importance of knowledge of methods in presenting the subjects and to give more study to the habits, dispositions, and natural capacities of the pupils.

Let this department of education do for education what agriculture, commerce, and labor are doing for the respective groups that they serve. If research is essential for agriculture, commerce, and industry, how much more is this service essential to education? The success of all of the 10 departments and special activities of our Government that they represent, and industry, and the perpetuity of our Government and its institutions depend upon enlightened citizenship, and it is unthinkable to me that the agency of the Government that represents the great cause of education is hid away as a small bureau in a great department and starved to death. Can it be that we regard the welfare of chickens, pigs, cattle, sheep, roads, and instruments of war of more importance than the 30,000,000 children of the land seeking an education? With these properly trained, the Republic is secure, and the peace, happiness, and the prosperity of the Nation are assured.

FIVE MILLION ILLITERATES

The United States Chamber of Commerce recently issued a bulletin entitled "Illiterates." They point out that the census of 1920 disclosed nearly 5,000,000 people in the United States over 10 years of age who confessed that they can not read or write in any language. This does not include perhaps another million or more who kept this incapacity concealed from the census enumerators. The Army test during the World War under the draft disclosed that about 25 per cent of the flower of the young manhood of America called to the defense of our country was unable to read and understand newspapers, or to write letters to their loved ones at home. This means that there were about 1,500,000 of our young men called to the colors who found themselves in this condition.

The illiteracy commission of the National Education Association, after a careful study of the question, has published its conclusions to the effect that nearly 20,000,000 of our population above the age of 10 years can not make effective use of reading and writing in their daily tasks.

Franklin K Lane, the great Secretary of the Interior under President Wilson, declared that illiteracy was costing this country the sum of at least $825,000,000 annually. It is further declared that illiteracy most often walks hand in hand with poverty, waste, low standards of living, crime, and ill health.

We find that the school terms range from 5 to 9 months to the year, and that the salaries range from $290 to $1,290 per year in the various States. The United States Chamber of Commerce further declares that the first and chief cause of illiteracy is inadequate schools. This covers teachers, buildings, equipment; second, inadequate or unenforced attendance laws; and third, immigration. We also find from the last available statistics 30,000 teachers with not more than an eighth-grade education, and 300,000 who have had no special, professional preparation for the work of a teacher, and hundreds of thousands of our teachers are less than 21 years of age. Can it be said with any degree of fairness, with these facts staring us in the face, that we are doing the job as it ought to be done?

OTHER OBJECTIONS

We have shown that the bill does not in any way interfere with local and State regulation of the public or private educational institutions in the several States; that Congress has the power under the Constitution to establish a department of education; that practically all of the Presidents and all the Congresses from 1789 to the present time have not only recognized the importance of public education, but have approved grants of land and money to aid education; that there is a genuine need for a department of education and that it can and will render effective service to education throughout the United States and its possessions; that a department of education will be of special service to the rural schools and backward communities; that research and investigation will help education as much or more than research and investigation have aided commerce and industry; and that there is a real public demand for a department of education with a secretary as a member of the President's Cabinet.

We wish to point out and attempt to answer some of the other objections.

No. 1. A department of education would destroy local initiative and support of education.

If we are to judge by the experiences of the Federal Government in aiding education in the States for over 100 years, this objection becomes a mere assertion without foundation in fact. Instead of destroying initiative and support of education in the States, it has encouraged it beyond all expectations.

No. 2. A department of education would create an educational bureaucracy in Washington.

The meaning intended to be conveyed by the word "bureaucracy" is that the Federal Government will assume control of education. We have elsewhere stated that this control can not be obtained except by an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Digressing for a moment, I want to say that, in my opinion, the word "bureaucracy" has become a means of expressing contempt for our form of Government. It is far too frequently used by irresponsible persons of bad designs on our institutions. Boards, bureaus, commissions, and departments and similar administrative agencies are the outgrowth of evolution in government. They are the only means by which our Government can be administered. They are the only instrument through which Congress expresses the will of the people and should be respected by all loyal citizens.

No. 3. A department of education will standardize education.

The opponents do not tell us what they mean by this statement. If they mean that the Federal Government will attempt to set up a code of rules to govern the classroom teaching or a set of rules to be followed by the various State school officials, their fears are without foundation, for this is but another way of saying that a department of education will interfere with the rights of the States to control the administration of their schools.

If the opponents of the bill mean that comprehensive research work will lead to an undesirable uniformity in educational procedure their fear is groundless. Educational research as well as all other research work leads away from the kind of undesirable uniformity which now exists in those centers where progressive ideas are slowly adopted because of the inability to get them. In such centers intelligent teaching and sound business administration of schools will rapidly take place because of the influx of progressive ideas resulting from the distribution of the best thought and the latest scientific achievements by the department of education gathered from the more progressive centers of the country. If the opponents of the bill mean that a distribution of the results of a comprehensive research program will constantly tend to bring the backward centers in education up to the standards of the most progressive centers we gladly admit their declaration. This is the outstanding purpose for creating a department of education. This is the vision by implication which Washington and other early Presidents had when they repeatedly recommended to Congress the wisdom of encouraging education in the States. They went so far during their time as to recommend the creation of academies, seminaries, and other institutions of learning out of the resources of the Federal Government. Of course, in their day education was thought of in terms of reading, writing, arithmetic, the arts and sciences, the knowledge of which was to be had at academies, seminaries, and colleges. These they wanted widely distributed and at public expense. The educational processes was then not thought of as a science in itself, and like all other bodies of scientific thought it is constantly in a state of change. To-day the educational process finds itself to be a multitude of interrelated sciences, from the process of kindergarten teaching through the various specializations in the primary, intermediate, and secondary schools; in fact, on through the modes of teaching the sciences themselves, including art, music, commerce, agriculture, and so forth.

No. 4. The creation of a department of education will be an entering wedge for Federal control of our State schools.

When the opponents of the bill creating a department of education are cornered and do not know what else to say, they play up the "bugaboo" that a department will be the entering wedge to Federal control of our schools. The critics of the proposed department of education seem to forget what I have just stated, that the Federal Government established a policy of encouraging education a century and a quarter ago and that this policy has expanded until the civilian activities alone are now spread over four departments and several independent agencies, among which is the Federal Board for Vocational Education. The critics seem not to be able to distinguish between an agency set up to administer law and the law itself. A bureau has just as much administrative authority with respect to carrying the intent of Congress as a department; in fact, it is the instrument by which the department acts under authority of Congress. And to repeat, Congress has no authority to control the administration of the public schools. The only entering wedge, therefore, which could be put into motion would be a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, taking the power of school administration from the States, a proposal as impracticable as it is undesirable.

Governments like other human institutions either grow or they decay. All three branches of the Federal Government have expanded enormously. The legislative branch has expanded through increased membership and the creation of powerful committees. The judicial branch had expanded greatly; first, in the increase of the personnel of the Supreme Court, and, secondly, in the greatly increased number of lower Federal courts. There is nothing strange or unusual in the creation of a department. The Federal Government started with 3 and now has 10. Each new one is but an additional limb to the executive branch of our National Government, the creation of which lifts the burdens from the other departments and thus balances the work. Many of the departments to-day are out of balance.

Placing related administrative educational matters under one head is good business management. It is in agreement with the recent press announcements of President-elect Hoover and such is the policy of all wide-awake corporations, State and municipal governments. The application of this principle to the present educational activities of the National Government possesses many desirable features, among which are these:

(a) Congress will be able to see at a glance the entire educational program which will aid greatly in dispatching legislation.

(b) With the aid of the secretary of education, Congress can detect and obviate duplication of educational work which doubtless occurs under the present system, or may I say lack of system.

(c) Education will be placed on an equality with other welfare activities of the Federal Government such as commerce, labor, and agriculture, upon which all three of these basic national activities depend for their greatest success.

Dr. C. R. Mann, director American Council on Education, made this statement at the hearings before the Committee on Education of the House of Representatives of the Seventieth Congress:

Education may well claim rank in the National Government equal to that accorded to agriculture, commerce, and labor. The true functions of these departments are no more executive and administrative than are those of education. All are essentially research and news distributing agencies, enlightening the public by collecting and disseminating significant and valid information of wider scope than any State could secure by itself alone. By their constructive influence on American life they have fully justified the wisdom of establishing them.

No. 5. A department of education will increase the cost of education.

The opponents of a department of education like to talk about the cost of education. They mean gross cost. They never seem to think of the net profits accruing from education in both dollars and the fundamentals of modern civilization.

The saddest story in history, and certainly the most absorbing to the student, is a study of the contributing causes of the rise and downfall of civilizations. A well-known publicist, who has written extensively on the rise and fall of civilizations, says that we have reached a point in density of population and complexity of life where civilization is now "a race between catastrophe and education."

Education—and I am now speaking in the broad sense, the business phase, the determination of curriculums and teaching processes—like any other growing science, is based on facts, methods, and principles deduced from theory and practical experiences—trial and error, trial and success. To expedite the growth of this science and to make quickly available to the boards of education, to superintendents of schools and to teachers throughout the Nation, the results of current practices or experiments, a broad, comprehensive program of research is essential. To show that such a program is essential let us examine just four subjects for which there is an immediate crying need. There are a multitude of others, and in any healthy civilization many are constantly arising. The four that I will bring to your attention are—

First. Forms of school taxation.

Second. Construction and plan of school buildings.

Third. Rural school situation.

Fourth. Retardation or the failure of a million children annually in our public schools, to say nothing of the private schools.

I select these four subjects for research as an illustration because they have a more direct bearing on cost than many of the others which are peculiar to the psychological processes of teaching and the intricate business principles of school or municipal administration. The facts under these four subjects are less mystical to the lay mind but of no more importance socially and economically than those of pure pedagogical science.

1. FORMS OF SCHOOL TAXATION

Doctor Tigert, the retiring Commissioner of Education, gave an interview to Mr. Thomas R. Henry, feature writer of the Washington Evening Star, on What United States Education Needs. The story of this interview appeared in the Sunday issue of August 8, 1928. Doctor Tigert said:

No scientific study has ever been made of the proper form of taxation for school revenue. There is no guide to which the various local officials can turn. Everything is chaos. Yet since 1920 the national bill for education has doubled. * * * Surely an expenditure of wealth should not be haphazard.

Under the direction of a department of education modern business methods applied as a result of research will bring order out of the chaos which Doctor Tigert has here in mind. Nothing else will, and why insist that 48 States set themselves each to the task of doing the same job which can be done and ought to be done by the Federal Government once every decade or so?

2. CONSTRUCTION AND PLAN OF SCHOOL BUILDINGS

A. Lincoln Filene, of Boston, one of the leading business men of the country, has been consistently an advocate of a department of education. In a paper presented at the hearings we find this statement:

My advocacy of a bill creating a department of education rose out of my contact with education and my contact with research as it has been applied to business. As a member for many years of the advisory board of education of the State of Massachusetts and from contacts with other educational groups, I have been frequently impressed with the great need for more facts as a basis for educational practice. Education is one of the great enterprises of this country. The present value of public-school property in the United States is $4,676,603,539.

In 1926 the Nation expended $411,370,774 for school buildings and sites. Much of this money was wasted because local boards did not have the latest information on the proper construction and utilization of school plans. Research would allow the school committee (or the board of education) of each individual city to reduce expenses and carry out a far more effective plan of school construction. Through information given by a Federal department of education it could profit by the examples, good and bad, of what other communities with similar problems had done. The expenditures for public elementary and secondary schools alone for current expenses and building costs in the United States in 1926 were $2,200,812,685. In the conduct of this great enterprise too much waste takes place. We find obsolete and unjust methods of taxation; funds not distributed so as to equalize educational opportunities. Many boards can not tell with accuracy what their own schools cost; it is impossible to obtain accurate figures as to the separate costs of elementary, junior and senior high school education. Careful budgetry is probably the exception rather than the rule in planning school expenditures. Research is needed to work out the best methods of school accounting and the budgetry procedure in order to guard against waste.

On the above figures for the cost of school buildings and sites a saving of approximately $20,000,000 would result each year and remain in the pockets of the taxpayers. The cost to the Federal Government for this one item of research would be about $500,000, or a little more than twice the amount recently appropriated for research work in connection with secondary schools. Net profits on this one subject for research alone would be about $19,000,000. Surely guesswork procedure wastes millions of dollars every year in the conduct of our schools.

3. RURAL EDUCATION

We again quote from the interview which Mr. Henry had with Doctor Tigert:

Everywhere in the field of public education, from the kindergarten in the city slums to the great State university, Doctor Tigert sees fundamental problems. But he feels that the greatest problem of all remains that of the rural school of the type he characterizes as "a little building on a little plot in a little place where a teacher with little pay teaches little things." Such a school, he says, compares with the average city school as the oxcart of the pioneer compares with a fast automobile. The oxcart gave notable service in its time and place. It was the instrument with which empires were built. By means of this slow, cumbersome means of transportation great men carried civilization into the wilderness and beyond. In the same period the 1-room school also was invaluable. The list of celebrated Americans who were products of these rude crossroads shacks is so impressive that it throws a false glamor over them.

Long since the children of the pioneers have junked the oxcart. These now are museum rarities. They are economic impossibilities. Yet the oxcart of education still creaks along through the rural districts, regardless and almost disdainful of the 8-cylinder automobiles of education which have been created during the past half century.

"Equality of opportunity" is a cherished American slogan. Yet gross inequalities exist at the very roots of opportunity—elementary education. Out of 275,000 public schools in the United States which are creating the Americans of the future, 158,000 are of this 1-room type. Their students number 5,000,000, one-quarter of all the public-school students of the Nation.

These 5,000,000, Doctor Tigert holds, are denied anything like equality of educational opportunity. The sons and daughters of the rural population served by such schools, he holds, are deprived of a good start in life. True enough, men and women in the past have risen to greatness on the rural 1-room school and they probably will do so again. Well, for that matter, Columbus discovered America with ships of a type on which only a crack-brained adventurer would venture to sea to-day.

The retiring head of the Bureau of Education is not sure, in fact, that this sort of school is not worse than nothing at all. He feels that the boy or girl might get more education merely by living in the town and absorbing, without instruction, some of the present-day science and culture.

4. RETARDATION OR FAILURE OF PUPILS

Doctor Davidson, superintendent of public schools in Pittsburgh, Pa., and former president of the National Education Association, is authority for the statement that from 1,000,000 to 1,250,000 children fail in the public schools of America. The private schools doubtless have about the same ratio of failures.

Doctor Davidson said at the recent hearings on the education bill:

Why do the children fail? As I have already tried to say that is entirely discoverable by the proper scientific studies. Many cities are making such studies and many States are making such studies at the present time, but obviously the study of any one State or of any given city loses its largest value if a clearing house is not established through which these facts can be gathered and disseminated throughout the Nation.

It is estimated that the cost in dollars of having these children "repeat" the work that they have already been over is upward of $85,000,000. The National Education Association, which is so intimately associated with the whole problem of education, states in one of its bulletins that "the social cost in mal-educated children, given the habit of failure, is far greater than the annual cost in dollars. Most of the $85,000,000 can be saved and used for increasing the meager educational opportunity now offered many children. The million and more children who fail each year will be given a hopeful rather than a destructive attitude toward life. Better teaching methods, wise selection of teaching matter, deeper study of child nature can solve the problem. Only a department of education can expect to command the resources or the prestige essential to the great work to be done in making the education of our children less of a guesswork and more of an intelligent procedure.

Will those who say that a department of education will increase the cost of education please reply?

Now, it is true that research work costs money. It requires the employment of able statisticians, research analysts, and clerical help, but research is to education what replacement is to the maintenance of manufacturing, industrial, and commercial plants. Every business man knows that he must set aside a fund for replacement and depreciation or go out of business. It is an ever-present problem in education to discover new processes and to adapt old processes to new needs of a constantly changing condition in society. This is the natural law in the social world—the wheels of progress must be kept turning on the axis of education or down goes civilization! Simple, is it not, when we apply our minds seriously to some of the more concrete problems which have been illustrated by the four subjects just considered? But who is to pay for the essential research work to keep our greatest and most important enterprise at the highest state of efficiency? Shall the States and cities assume all of the cost of research work or shall the Federal Government shoulder part of it? It would appear to be the consensus of opinion among public-school educators that many of the States have neither the vision nor the resources to carry on a broad perpetual program of research which would essentially require statisticians and research analysts of each State to go into every other State for the desired information. True, the States are now doing some of it. The cities are doing some of it, and private wealth is doing some of it, but since such work is so vital to the cause of education in the States and so vital to the perpetuation of our national civilization why should each of the 48 States plus our other political organizations set up research expense accounts to do identically the same job?

The situation is well summed up by a recent statement by Charles R. Mann previously quoted:

The task of collecting, classifying, and testing all the information that is needed is too large for any local, State, or voluntary organization. Each individual group must be active in finding and studying the facts of its own environment. But the significant facts of local life must be united in a national picture, which, by comparing trends and tendencies, would arouse the sporting spirit of local groups to compete for honorable mention for distinguished service in realizing more fully our national ideals.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOYLAN. I want to ask the gentleman if he believes in State rights.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I believe in all of the rights granted to the States by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BOYLAN. Does not the gentleman think that this is primarily a State function? If the conditions exist as suggested by the gentleman, are they not due to the respective States, and if they do exist, what great magic wand could be waved over the situation that would bring about a change, and could that change be accomplished by having a man sit in the President's Cabinet?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have called attention to the provisions of the bill itself which expressly provide that nothing contained in this act shall in any way infringe upon or impair the rights, laws, duties, or responsibilities of the several States and the citizens thereof, not only as to public schools and public institutions of education, but likewise as to private schools and private institutions of education. Nothing in this bill in any way seeks to change the laws or the regulation of the schools and educational institutions of the several States. Washington, Madison, Jefferson, Monroe, and other Presidents, Hamilton, and each and every Congress since 1789 have recognized the right of the Congress under the Constitution to aid and encourage public education in the States.

A department of education here would establish a clearing house of information, statistics, and facts for the use and benefit of all those interested in education who might desire to avail themselves of this service. There is nothing in the bill that would compel any school or school officer, teacher, or pupil to accept this information.

I am sure the gentleman from New York would not want to do away with the Departments of Commerce, Agriculture, or Labor. They serve labor and industry largely by research, study, and investigation, making the information available to all those who might be interested.

Our liberties, our peace, our prosperity depend upon an enlightened citizenship—education. Is our interest in railroads, coal mines, factories, agriculture, corn, wheat, poultry, hogs, and cattle—all of which are tremendously important—more important than the childhood, the young manhood, and young womanhood of the Nation who will become the Republic of to-morrow?

In placing a representative of education in the Cabinet of the President, we would be putting first things first, and giving to the 30,000,000 students, the nearly 1,000,000 teachers, and the nearly 300,000 public educational institutions a voice at the council table of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for seven minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for seven minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman who has just discussed the department of education bill is a little more frank on the subject than others who have favored it before the Committee on Education. He frankly believes that the educational problem of the country can be solved by Federal money; but the National Education Association, and others, who have favored the bill in recent years have tried to sheer away from the notion of large Federal appropriations. Originally, they wanted a Federal subsidy, but finding they could not get it they cut their bill in half and then asked for a Federal department of education. We who have opposed them have always believed that all they wanted in the long run was an appropriation, and the gentleman from Kentucky, in opening his remarks, called attention to the small appropriation that is made for the Bureau of Education, indicating that it is his desire that there be great sums of Federal moneys expended on education.

The truth of the situation is that the Federal Government is spending about $60,000,000, if not more, per annum on educational projects and, according to the gentleman from Kentucky, that the States and cities are spending about $3,000,000,000 on education to-day. My own notion of it is that it is nearer $2,000,000,000 for 25,000,000 children. I ask the Members of this House whether the States and cities are not affording liberal means of education when they are spending $2,000,000,000 per annum on 25,000,000 children. In other words, it is costing the cities and States about $80 per child for education.

The gentleman pointed out the difference between Russia and China and the United States and he called attention to the wonderful progress of the United States with respect to its schools. Then I say to him, let the Federal Government keep its hands off our schools; let our schools progress as they have progressed under local guidance; let not our schools be stagnated by the heavy hand of the Federal Government and let not the educational system of our country be reduced to the basis of the Russian educational system. [Applause.] It is Russia that has a national department of education or a Soviet commissioner of education, and if you read the provisions of the Russian program for education you can almost parallel them with the suggestions made in the various Federal department educational bills which have been before our committee.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of New York. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Was any evidence presented before the committee which tended to show that there is any State in the United States which does not respond when called upon to appropriate money for education.

Mr. BLACK of New York. No. As a matter of fact it happens that just now the States and cities are engaged in a strong race in the matter of education and that spirit of rivalry should not be stopped by the Federal Government. It is true that there have been many land grants for educational purposes, but the history is that a great deal of that money of the Federal Government has been diverted to other purposes. The history of Federal connection with education has been one of corruption, and we want no more of it.

The gentleman called attention to the political platforms on this subject, but in the last campaign the Republican platform was very silent on the subject of a department of education. As a matter of fact, the Republican platform did not say a word about a Federal department of education, showing that those who control the Republican Party and the administration had realized, after their guidance of the administration, that a Federal department of education would be a very, very unwise proposition.

The gentleman spoke about the great organizations that support this bill, but we know how they get together; we know that the National Education Association is a bellwether; we know that the National Education Association herds these organizations into line and has them adopt stereotyped resolutions in favor of this bill.

The gentleman called attention to the deficiencies among our teachers. If the Federal Government is not going to standardize education, what is the Federal Government going to do about these deficient teachers? If such a plan were to be adopted, the Government would have to do something in the way of taking their licenses from them; it would have to do something which would stop them from teaching; and it would have to do something which would interfere with the State and city systems, or else it does not mean anything.

Then they say the Federal department of education is going to be a research proposition. The gentleman spoke about reindeer. I say that this country is spending plenty of money on education, and the fact that the reindeer appropriation happens to be carried in the Department of the Interior appropriation bill is no reflection on the public spirit of this country as to the amounts of money spent on children.

This is a specious argument of the type used by some of the educators to get this appropriation. Now, there is no real reason for this. The gentleman spoke about taking care of chickens, hogs, and pigs. What are our children that they are to be taken care of like we take care of chickens, hogs, and pigs? You could take care of chickens and hogs or you could take care of vegetables under the guidance of the Federal Government without doing them any harm, but you can not interfere with the child. The child belongs to the parents. The parents have the duty to educate that child and the further the Federal Government keeps away from the real guidance of the child, at the mother's knee, the better it is for the child.

You can not put children on a parity with hogs and pigs. This is the trouble with some of these research operators. They want to operate on the human soul and the human mind and the human heart as though they were operating on guinea pigs. This is one of the troubles with the people who want this type of legislation. [Applause.]

COTTON FUTURES

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I do not want to object, but we have a couple of matters we want to get in this afternoon, and if the gentleman will not ask to extend the time, but will conclude in five minutes, I shall not object.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will conclude in five minutes. You have never found me breaking faith in that respect.

Mr. SNELL. If there are any further requests, I shall have to object.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to discuss the State-rights question that we have been hearing about just now. We have always stood for that, but the South Carolina Legislature is standing now with the House of Representatives of the United States and has passed the following resolution:

A concurrent resolution concerning cotton "futures"

Whereas transactions in cotton involving the sale thereof for future delivery as commonly conducted on cotton-futures exchanges, and known as "futures," are affected with a national public interest; and

Whereas such transactions are carried on in large volume by the public generally and by persons engaged in the business of buying and selling cotton in interstate commerce; and

Whereas the prices involved in such transactions are generally quoted and disseminated throughout the United States and in foreign countries as a basis for determining the prices to the producer and the consumer of cotton and to facilitate the movements thereof in interstate commerce; and

Whereas such transactions are utilized by shippers, dealers, manufacturers, and others engaged in handling cotton in interstate commerce as a means of hedging themselves against possible loss through fluctuations in price; and

Whereas the transactions and prices of cotton on such cotton-futures exchanges are susceptible to speculation, manipulation, and control, and sudden or unreasonable fluctuations in the prices thereof frequently occur as a result of such speculation, manipulation, or control, which are detrimental to the producer or the consumer and the persons handling cotton in interstate commerce, and that such fluctuations in price are an obstruction to and a burden upon interstate commerce to cotton and render regulation imperative for the protection of such commerce and the national public interest therein; and

Whereas the House of Representatives of the United States Congress did, on January 21, 1929, by unanimous vote, pass (H. R. 13646) a bill "for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in cotton by regulating transactions on cotton-futures exchanges"; and

Whereas said bill is now pending for final determination in the United States Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina, That we respectfully urge our Senators to aid in the passage of said bill.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to and ordered sent to the senate.

This was unanimously passed, I believe, in the House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina. I am just rising to call attention to the fact that while this House unanimously passed this much-needed legislation, while it has the indorsement of the members of all the legislatures, I venture to say of the Southern States, and while it really has the indorsement of the honest cotton trader all over the country, yet there is a dumb silence in the other body which has to act upon it, and it stays asleep in some committee room, sat upon by some of the great friends of the farmers who have taken care of the cotton people of the United States in the last quarter of a century to such an extent that they are all now broke. [Laughter and applause.]

That bill was drawn after fullest hearings in which the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Jardine, said:

I believe that the ends sought to be achieved by the proposed legislation are good and I recommend its enactment as being desirable from the public standpoint.

There were present at the hearing representatives of the following associations, all interested in honest dealings in the cotton trade:

Mr. H. M. Bennett, from the Arkansas Cotton Association; Mr. C. M. Owens, from the Arkansas Cotton Association; Mr. H. G. Safford, chairman of the legislative and futures contracts committee of the American Cotton Shippers' Association, and formerly president of the Texas Cotton Association; Mr. J. S. Billingslea, of Georgia, president of the Atlantic Cotton Association; Mr. E. B. Stearns, president of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange; Mr. K. D. Wells, president of the Southern Cotton Shippers' Associations; Mr. C. W. Wells, of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange; and Mr. D. E. McCuen, past president of the Atlantic Cotton Association.

Mr. Safford made this statement as to the purposes of the proponents of the bill and the work of preparing it—

I was on a committee two and a half years ago which came up to Washington and went to see Secretary Jardine with reference to this same matter, asking him if he could do anything without legislation and, if he could not, to consider carefully what legislation might be introduced which would cure the evils of which we complained and under which we suffered. * * *

Mr. VINSON had introduced this bill in the House, and it contained almost all of the principles which we thought meant improvement, and we took that as a model on which to work. This committee spent a good deal of time over it, and checked the thing, paragraph by paragraph, and made some suggestions for amendments to clarify and to further strengthen the bill, which Mr. VINSON has been kind enough to accept in toto; so that the committee which I represent and the association which I represent is very glad to give its entire indorsement to the bill. Now, the form of bill which may be presented or carried through the Senate or House we have no wish to dictate, but the principles which are contained in the bill, as amended, are those for which we stand and which we think would better the conditions immensely.

Now, to get to the bill. The first part of the bill, constituting the cotton exchanges as public utilities, is copied from the grain futures act, with the elimination, as Mr. VINSON has said, of the taxing features of the Smith-Lever Act which had, in the grain act, been held unconstitutional. This would make it practically certain that the bill would go through the courts without being destroyed.

Mr. KINCHELOE. You started to say about your conversation with the Secretary of Agriculture, and you did not finish that.

Mr. SAFFORD. He said at that time he had no right whatever to interfere with the cotton futures market; he had no legal status in their investigation or in their control.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Did he suggest any remedy?

Mr. SAFFORD. He suggested it would be entirely agreeable to him if such legislation could be introduced and passed as would give him the same regulatory control as he had under the grain futures act.

Mr. Stern, president of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, discussed the need of legislation and the form it should take, as follows:

Mr. STERN. Mr. Chairman, I will make a very brief statement. I know the time is exceedingly limited. I only want to say that, as president of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange I am here to state that the board of directors of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange have voted to approve the report made by the legislative committee of the American Cotton Shippers' Association, which has been presented here by Mr. Safford, the previous witness.

We believe that the further control and regulation by the Government as outlined in this bill is sound. I, for one, and I think I bespeak the sentiments of my exchange, consider the cotton exchanges are quasi-public utilities, serving a great public interest and for that reason it is sound in theory and practice to have them properly regulated by governmental bodies. We believe the provisions proposed in this bill will accomplish that result.

I may say another act has been proposed in the Senate embodying substantially the same principles as this bill, in the form of an amendment to the Smith-Lever Act, instead of, as I understand it, a new piece of legislation.

Now, as to the choice of the form in which those principles are to be enacted into law, it seems to us improper for us to express any opinion as to the question of form. That is the duty and province of the lawmakers of Congress to choose between the forms; but the subject matter, the principles of both bills, we approve of and indorse and believe they will work to the benefit of the cotton trade.

This refers to the bill of the senior Senator of South Carolina a companion bill to this Vinson bill.

Mr. H. M. Bennett, representing the Arkansas Cotton Trade Association, wrote the committee as follows:

The interests that we represent have given their unqualified indorsement of the Vinson bill and the recommendations of the committee on legislation of the American Cotton Shippers' Association.

We wish to emphasize the conviction of our people that some remedial legislation of this nature should be passed before the adjournment of this session of Congress.

Messrs. J. S. Billingsted and D. E. McCuen, president and past president of the Atlantic Cotton Association, made the following statement relative to the bill.

Mr. Henry G. Safford, of Houston, Tex., is chairman of the future contract committee of the American Cotton Shippers' Association. Mr. Safford has testified before your honorable committee on the general subject matter of the Vinson bill amended, and we wish to state that we indorse without reservation his entire testimony.

Mr. Hubbard, president of the New York Cotton Exchange, made the following statement for the record.

The New York Cotton Exchange realizes that your committee wishes to report a bill which will forever preclude the possibility of the cotton market being manipulated by scheming minds to the prejudice of the public welfare. The exchange without legislative assistance is powerless to prevent such abuses.

Now these are all people who buy and sell spot cotton and use exchanges as a legitimate hedge and want to stop unfair manipulations which ran down the price of cotton in 1927 from over 23 cents to 18 cents because the manipulators early in the season had sold more than the crop of that year at 18 cents and unless they could depress the price by delivery day to about that figure they would be ruined. They manipulated the market to that effect and it cost the farmers $20 a bale on millions of bales of cotton.

An interview was published in the papers after the Vinson bill went to the Senate that the gentleman quoted expected to rely on the promise of the exchanges to reform themselves. I invite this gentleman's attention to the statement of the president of the New York Exchange, quoted above, that it is impossible to reform without legislative assistance, and to plead with him to exert his well-known influence in cotton legislation to have this bill reported and passed to aid in such reform. He himself admits the need of reform and the president of the exchange says legislation is absolutely essential to bring it about.

RETIREMENT LEGISLATION

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up the resolution H. Res. 222.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1727, an act to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes,' approved May 22, 1920, and acts in amendment thereof," approved July 3, 1926, as amended. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall arise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall only take the time of the House to make a very brief statement concerning the legislation to be considered under this rule. I appreciate the fact that Members of the House are well acquainted with all of the provisions of this legislation, but on account of the misinformation that has gone out through the country, furnished by various representatives of organizations who receive special benefit under this legislation, I feel that a statement of the absolute facts should be made for the benefit of the country at large at this time. I want to call attention specially to a statement often made, and specially made in northern New York a few weeks ago by the president of one of these organizations, that this is the employees' money and why is Congress unwilling to let us do what we want to with it? If that statement was true, I would agree with him. But such is not the fact, as I will explain to you.

I will say that the statement I make is taken from the report of the Committee on the Civil Service that was written and prepared by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service, and I think it is probably the best information available at this time relative to the cost of the proposed retirement measure.

The retirement bill we are working under at the present time costs the Federal Government an annual charge of $19,950,000 a year, and it will cost us that amount for each year for 30 years. The Federal employees are paying into this fund at the present time under the present bill $28,000,000 per year. If we pass the bill this legislation now proposed the contribution on the part of the Federal Government will be increased to $30,000,000 a year for the next 30 years, and a contribution of $10,000,000 annually for all time. During this same 30 years there will be contributed by the Government employees $28,000,000 a year, or the same amount now being contributed. So under the provisions of the bill proposed at the present time, the Federal Government will pay just a little more than 50 per cent of its entire cost. I think that that information ought to go to the country at large so that they will know exactly what we are doing at the present time, by passing this increased retirement act.

I am not opposed to Government employees nor their desire for retirement, but I feel that I owe an equal obligation to the men who work in the stores, the mills, the factories, and on the farms to the obligations that I owe the employees of the Federal Government. [Applause.] For that reason I feel that it would not do any harm to anyone if the measure was delayed for two or three years more until it was more carefully and fully considered by the House of Representatives, and until we are absolutely sure we can afford to assume this added obligation.

THE EVENING SESSION

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield to me to make an announcement?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, a number of Members have inquired of me to-day in regard to an evening session for the consideration of the Private Calendar, evidently not having noticed on the calendar this morning that an evening session has been arranged for this evening. I hope the entire membership of the House will take notice and be ready for the session on the Private Calendar, which arrangement was entered into last night.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Chair recognize any motion for the consideration of a bill on the calendar before the star.

Mr. TILSON. The call will begin at the star, at the point in the calendar where the last call left off.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the Chair will not recognize any Member asking that a bill be considered on the calendar prior to the star, so that Members opposed to those bills will know that they will not come up?

Mr. TILSON. The call of the calendar will begin at the star, and it is not probable that the entire calendar will be finished within three hours.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. PERKINS. How many employees in the Federal Government are affected by this bill?

Mr. SNELL. Between three hundred and four hundred and fifty thousand. How much time does the gentleman from North Carolina want?

Mr. POU. About 10 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. POU. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill, reported out of the Committee on Civil Service, I am sure most Members will agree is a very meritorious bill. All it does is to reduce by two years practically the ages where certain civilian employees may retire and in addition raises the maximum to $1,200 a year.

We have heard something about extending these provisions, but it must be remembered that the employees contribute 3½ of the per cent of the total cost of this retirement annuity, under the retirement system.

Up to this point, ladies and gentlemen, the Government has contributed very little, although the Government may be called upon to pay more later.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. We appropriated $19,950,000 last year.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Three years ago we appropriated $9,450,000 and this year we have appropriated $9,900,000.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I stand corrected on that, but I want to emphasize the fact that the major portion of the expense entailed by this system has been paid by the employees themselves, who contribute out of their salaries 3½ per cent. As the law now stands, it appears to me that a man has to die to win. He drags on a pitiless existence until he is 70 years of age, in certain classes of employment, and then he retires—retires to what? Not to an enviable existence by any means, but to enfeebled, decrepit old age. He retires just in time to die. What does life hold out to a man of 70 after many years of labor? I am almost certain that if the facts could be adduced, the Government would save money by liberalizing this retirement system as it will if we pass this bill, because there are a great many employees in the Government service who are superannuated, and we can get rid of them by this liberal retirement amendment. We can let them out under the present system. They will not retire. Why should they? They asked for extensions. The annuity is a mere pittance. It hardly averages more than $500, if that. Let us liberalize the age limit and increase this annuity to a maximum of $1,200. Let us pass the bill.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I imagine that there is very little, if any, opposition to this bill. So far as my own individual position is concerned, since coming to the House six years ago, I have been a member of the Civil Service Committee, and along with other gentlemen on that committee have worked in an effort to liberalize and humanize the retirement law. I am in favor of this bill and expect to vote for it, but it is not about the merits of the legislation that I desire to speak to the House to-day. Bringing this bill up to-day is nothing but a gesture. It is very well to make a record of it, that those who read may understand, that the consideration of this retirement bill to-day is just a little sop thrown out in an effort to pacify the feelings of some of the old superannuated employees who are sitting around now waiting for their Government to open up its heart and treat them fairly, justly, and honestly.

What are the facts about it? This bill passed the Senate May 3, 1928. It came to the Committee on Civil Service of the House May 10, 1928, and was unanimously reported out immediately. On May 23, 1928, 20 days after it passed the Senate, a rule was granted for its consideration by the Rules Committee, and although there have been vague, indefinite promises floating around ever since that time, not until to-day, when it is perfectly safe to bring it up, has it been brought forward, knowing full well, as gentlemen do know, that it will sleep the peaceful sleep that other legislation has enjoyed when it has reposed in the pocket of the Chief Executive, as it has reposed in the pocket of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] for nearly a year. This bill will never be signed. Everybody here who is familiar with the situation knows that it will not be signed. If there had been the slightest chance in the world of its being signed, it would not have been brought up here to-day. What is the situation? We are now in the shadow of the closing hours of the Congress. The President is against the bill. Has been against it all the time. He has said that he would veto it, "no matter what you did to it or how you changed it." The President must be saved from necessity of vetoing a piece of legislation that so vitally affects the happiness and the very sustenance of employees who have given many, many years of valuable service to this Government. Therefore, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], the genial chairman of the Rules Committee, carries the rule in his pocket from May 23, 1928, to this good day, though the Congress has been ready to pass the bill without a dissenting voice, and over the veto of the President, if it had an opportunity so to do. Had the bill been brought out one week ago to-day, a very different situation would have obtained, because had the bill then been passed, the President would have had to have taken affirmative action. He would have been compelled to place his veto on the bill, and the bill would have come back to the House for action, and very speedily his veto would have been overridden; but to-day Members of Congress are being given the opportunity to vote, and that is all it will ever amount to.

This is nothing but a colossal joke. There are thousands of old employees of this Government, men and women, who have given many years of arduous service to the Government. The men and women who really perform the work, as every Member of Congress knows if he has been in close touch with the departmental matters, are not the Cabinet Members, are not the chiefs of the departments. The people who do the manual service, the detailed work, that carries on the affairs of the Government are these men and women behind the desks who draw often very small, inadequate salaries. You have an army of these old men and women, and some in the galleries to-day watching you, who are laboring under the delusion that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has opened up his heart, and that the administration has recanted, that the retirement bill is going to become a law. God pity them! They are going to be sadly disillusioned after the 4th of March, for the bill will never be heard of again. Those men and women have given anywhere from 5 to 10 to 20 up to 40 years of the best years of their lives to Government service. They are asking you to liberalize the retirement law. They ask for bread, and you give them a vote on the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I prefer not to yield. Of course, it is going to cost the Government something to carry on this retirement law. Congress knew it would cost something when the system was inaugurated, but the employees are paying a great portion of the system and the testimony before our committee and before the Senate committee shows that from a purely economic and business standpoint this Government will make great gains by retiring the superannuated employees. We have all of that information. Not only that, but you can find by inspecting the records that every time the statisticians have made estimates of the cost of the retirement system they have overestimated what the cost will be and underestimated what the receipts of the system will be. If you will compare the figures to-day, the amount that is in the retirement fund with the estimates of the actuaries made some years ago, you will find that the fund has greatly exceeded what the actuaries estimated would come in.

Let us examine and compare the estimates with the facts:

Act of May 22, 1920	Balance (estimated in 1919) [1]	Actual balance [2]
July 1, 1921	$4,356,500.00	$9,672,842.03
July 1, 1922	7,828,500.00	18,134,263.91
July 1, 1823	10,416,000.00	25,510,288.97
July 1, 1924	12,119,000.00	33,586,193.19
July 1, 1925	12,937,500.00	44,665,778.56
July 1, 1926, 3½ per cent	12,757,500.00	54,629,004.93
July 1, 1927	15,307,000.00	68,336,760.95
July 1, 1928	14,058,000.00	83,078,430.00

[1] From Report No. 99 by Senator Sterling, July 23, 1919.
[2] From Reports of Secretary of Interior.

Without contributions from the Government estimated surplus July 1, 1930, at 2½ per cent, $6,192,500.

Not only that, but the estimates show that in 28 years the Government will be through with making any contributions whatever to this retirement fund, and under the system, by the employees making their contributions, it will be self-sustaining.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the gentleman to say that after 28 or 30 years the Government would not have to make any contribution?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. That does not comply with the report written by the gentleman's committee. I take my information from the report furnished by the committee, which says it would be about $10,000,000 a year.

Mr. WOODRUM. I read to the gentleman, on page 2, next to the concluding paragraph on page 2 of the report:

> Under the proposed amendment the additional cost is estimated at $4,362,000. It is anticipated that after approximately 28 years all that cost to the Government will be completely liquidated.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman two more minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for two more minutes.

Mr. SNELL. But in the final conclusion of the report written by the committee it says:

> Thereafter the contribution of the Government will approximate $10,000,000 per annum, and the contribution of the employees will be about $28,000,000.

That is the concluding paragraph of the report. The gentleman refers to one portion of the bill, and not to the whole.

Mr. WOODRUM. Has the gentleman Report No. 1580?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is my understanding of it. The gentleman may be correct.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend, I insert a table which has been prepared based on the estimate of Dr. Alvan H. Thompson, which I feel will be of interest to the House. Doctor Thompson's figures have proven very conservative to date, as the contributions have been more and the payments of annuities and refunds less than in this table.

Based upon the computations of Dr. Alvan H. Thompson, of the Pension Bureau, in testimony before the Joint Civil Service Committee January 14, 1926, plus the contributions of the Government provided in the last session, the most conservative estimate places the retirement fund in 1941 at $537,332,944, with interest at more than $20,000,000 per annum. This with contributions of more than $30,000,000 from the employees' salaries and nearly $20,000,000 from Government contributions, would soon build this into a tremendous fund. Doctor Thompson estimates the expenditures in the fiscal year of 1941 at less than $35,000,000 with an income of more than $70,000,000. This does not seem necessary. Our own estimates, based on the best figures to date, give us approximately $620,000,000 in the fund July, 1942, with interest of nearly $25,000,000 annually, with no additional appropriations by the Government except those now in force.

The following table is extracted from the report of the Hon. Hubert Work, Secretary of the Interior, on the operation of retirement law, beginning with the first annual report of June 30, 1921, down to and including the last annual report of June 30, 1928. The items specified in this table show the amount of contribution of the employees each year with interest, the amount of annuities paid out with refunds, and the balance on hand at the end of each fiscal year:

Total receipts for fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, including contributions with interest	$12,586,389.37
Total disbursements	2,913,547.34
Balance in fund June 30, 1921	9,672,842.03
Balance in fund July 1, 1921	9,672,842.03
Total receipts for fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, including contributions with interest	14,853,748.99
Total disbursements	6,392,327.11
Balance in fund June 30, 1922	18,134,263.91
Balance in fund July 1, 1922	18,134,263.91
Total receipts for fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, including contributions with interest	15,155,609.28
Total disbursements	7,779,584.22
Balance in fund June 30, 1923	25,510,288.97
Balance in fund July 1, 1923	25,510,288.97

Appropriated by Government	19,950,000.00
Total amount in retirement and disability fund July 1, 1928	103,028,430.00

Number died during the past fiscal year, 1,271.

Number of employees on retirement roll July 1, 1928, 15,383.

Number of deaths since the law became effective—more than 7,000.

There are 405,000 employees of the Government service who come within the purview of the retirement law, and they pay into the retirement fund 3½ per cent of their salary, which amounts to more than $28,000,000 annually.

I also insert a list of a few out of the many private banking and industrial concerns who have adequate retirement systems.

Bankers Trust Co. of New York have voluntary retirement at age 60, after 15 years' service. The maximum annuity is $5,000. Employee's contribution is 3 per cent of salary.

The First National Bank of New York has a similar system, the employees contributing 5 per cent of their salaries.

Speyer & Co. of New York allow voluntary retirement at age 60 with a service requirement of 25 years. The annuity is 75 per cent of salary for the past 10 years, and the contribution of the employee is 2 per cent and 3 per cent.

The Guaranty Trust Co. has a voluntary retirement age at 65 after 15 years' service; or, no age after 45 years' service. The maximum annuity is $5,000. The contribution of the employee is from 2 per cent to 35/50 of average pay last three years.

The Prudential Life Ins. Co. allows retirement at age 65 after 25 years' service. The annuity is $150 a month, and the employee contributes 1 per cent of his average pay for the last 10 years.

Morris & Co. allow voluntary retirement at age 55 after 15 years' service. The annuity is 2½ per cent of final salary, the contribution of employees being 3 per cent of salary received.

The Union Trust Co., New York, has voluntary retirement at age 65 after 20 years' service. The maximum annuity is $5,000, the employee's contribution being 1 per cent of average salary for five consecutive years of highest pay.

The First National Bank of Chicago allows optional retirement at age 60, after 15 years' service, the employee's contribution being 3 per cent of salary. The annuity is 35/50 of salary.

Fairbanks, Morse & Co. have voluntary retirement at age 60, with 20 years' service requirement. There is a maximum annuity of $4,000. Employee contributes 3 per cent of salary.

Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co. allow retirement at age 65 after 15 years' service, with a maximum annuity of $1,500. The employee contributes 3 per cent of salary.

The American Telegraph & Telephone Co. have voluntary retirement ages of 60 and 55 with 30 and 25 years of service required. The minimum annuity is $360. There is no contribution by employees.

The Western Electric Co. has a similar system.

The Consolidated Gas Co. of New York allows retirement at age of 50 or over after 25 years' service, and the annuity is from 20 per cent to 60 per cent of salary. There is no contribution by employees.

The Niagara Falls Light & Power Co. has voluntary retirement at age 65, with 10 years' service. The annuity is $1,000. There is no contribution by the employees.

The Southern California Edison Co. allows retirement at age 60, with 20 years' service. The minimum annuity is $300. There is no contribution by employees.

Butler Bros. have retirement age of 60 after 20 years' service, with maximum annuity of $1,000. The employee does not contribute.

The Commonwealth Edison Co. retires at ages 55, 60, and 65, with 30, 15, and 5 years' service requirements, respectively. The maximum annuity is $5,000. There is no contribution by the employee.

The United Cigar Stores retire at age 60 after 25 years' service. Maximum annuity is $200 a month. The employee does not contribute.

The Otis Elevator Co. retires at age 60 with 20 years' service, with a maximum annuity of $125 a month. The American Smelting & Refining Co. has a similar system, with a maximum annuity of $3,000.

Swift & Co., the Western Union Telegraph Co., Procter & Gamble all retire at age 60, with 25 years, 20 years, and no stipulated service requirement, respectively. Procter & Gamble's maximum annuity is $1,800. There is no contribution by employee.

The Westinghouse Airbrake Co. have voluntary retirement at age 65, with no stipulated service requirement. The maximum annuity is $100 a month. The employee does not contribute.

The Equitable Life Insurance Co. retires at age 65, with 10 years' service. The maximum annuity is $3,600.

The Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co. allow retirement at age 60, with 25 years' service. The annuity is $1,200. Employees contribute 1 per cent of salary received for the last 10 years.

The Wilson Packing Co. has a retirement age of 55 after 20 years' service. The maximum annuity is $5,000, and the employees contribute 2 per cent of salary.

The Crane Co. allows voluntary retirement at age 60 after 20 years' service. The maximum annuity is $125 a month. Employees contribute 2 per cent of salary received for last 5 years.

The Murphy Varnish Co. has voluntary retirement at age 60 after 20 years' service. The maximum annuity is $2,400, and the employee contributes 2 per cent of average salary for last 10 years.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentleman from Virginia referred to the gentleman from New York, I want to say that the gentleman from Virginia, as he said, was speaking to the gallery; the gentleman from New York was speaking his absolute judgment as to what ought to be done at the present time to properly protect the people of the whole country, as well as the employees of the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1727; and pending that request, I would like to ask who, if anybody, desires time in opposition to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 1727.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I would like to ask if anyone desires a half hour in opposition to the measure?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think there is anybody on this side who is opposing the bill, but I think the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] would like to have some time on this side. There is no opposition, as I understand.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I know of no opposition on this side. While we are to have an hour's debate, I propose to take only a very few minutes, and I have but one request for 10 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. If there is nobody opposed to the bill I submit we might have a vote on the bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I would like to make a brief statement of the amount of money involved.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make any suggestion as to the time?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is that the time be equally divided. That is provided, however, by the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey will have control of half the time, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS] the other half. The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1727, with Mr. LEAVITT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1727, which the Clerk will report, by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1727) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes,' approved May 22, 1920, and acts in amendment thereof," approved July 3, 1926, as amended.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for half an hour.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, in order to clear up a persisting misunderstanding as to the cost borne by the Government and the share borne by the employees, I beg your indulgence while I repeat what I have said eight or ten times in the last 10 years upon this floor.

The cost of the bill is separable into two items. The first item is what is known as the normal cost. The Government employees who come within the provisions of the retirement act pay 3½ per cent of their salaries to the retirement fund for the maintenance of that fund. When the time arrives when all those who retire or are eligible for retirement or in the years to come will be eligible for retirement, they will have paid their full proportion to the retirement fund. But before that we have employees who are retired immediately without having made any contribution. The following year they pay 3½ per cent of one year's salary, and so on, and they are still retiring, having paid for eight years 3½ per cent of their salary.

That is known as the deficiency cost. The normal cost is where everybody has paid from the beginning of his employment until his retirement or withdrawal. The deficiency cost is where a person has either paid nothing or little or a lesser proportion of the contribution to the retirement fund from the beginning of his employment until the cessation of his employment.

The normal cost under the law as it exists to-day is figured as 3.90 per cent of the pay roll. Of that 3.90 per cent of the pay roll, which is the normal cost of retirement, the employees pay 3.50 per cent. That is the sum paid into the fund for its maintenance, and the Government pays 0.48 per cent of the cost of maintaining the fund. Inasmuch as the contributions belong to the contributor and are returned to him in some form, or to his next of kin if he should die in the service, the cost of the deficiency is borne wholly by the Government. The cost of the deficiency is 1.97 per cent of the pay roll, and that entire 1.97 per cent is borne by the Government, because no employee is taxed to pay for the retirement of another employee who has not paid his full share toward the retirement cost. Now, adding the normal cost and the deficiency cost together, it makes a total maintenance charge of 5.95 per cent of the pay roll, of which the employees pay 3.50 per cent of that pay roll and the Government pays 2.45 per cent of the pay roll, including the deficiency charge. In other words, in taking up this deficiency slack the employees contribute 3.50 per cent of the pay roll and the Government pays 2.45 per cent of the pay roll.

When the bill was enacted into law it was known as a 50-50 bill, assuming that the payments for the maintenance of the fund would be so distributed between the employees and the Government that the contributions would be about alike, 50 per cent of the cost of the fund being contributed by the employees and 50 per cent of the cost of the fund being contributed by the Government. Even with this deficiency, which is not a burden on the employees, but is a burden on the Government, we find that the employees are nevertheless paying 3.50 per cent of the pay roll and that the Government is paying 2.45 per cent—less than half.

Now, after 28 years from now, approximately, have elapsed the deficiency cost will have been wiped out, and if the law remains as it is we find that the Government employees will pay 3.50 per cent of the pay roll and the Government 0.48 of 1 per cent of the pay roll. So, of course, that is not a 50-50 proposition.

This bill increases the annuities from a maximum of $1,000 to a maximum of $1,200 and, of course, has relative steps of increases of annuities in the ranges below the maximum. It provides that those who have served continuously in the service for over 30 years are retired optionally 2 years earlier than they would automatically retire under the terms of the present law.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. MORGAN. Are these estimates based upon the proposed increases in the pending bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No. The estimates I have stated refer to the law as it is now. Now, I have explained that this bill seeks to increase the maximum to $1,200 with proportionate increases along the line, and a 2-year earlier optional retirement for those who have served 30 years or more in the Government service. This has been figured by the actuaries. The figures given to us are the only official figures we have and we are bound by them, but I want to state that in almost every instance they have overestimated the cost of the maintenance of this retirement system, because it is the custom of insurance-company actuaries to load their premiums to an extent that there is no danger of even approaching the line of excess liabilities over assets. This increase will cost a percentage of 1.58 per cent over the present cost. Therefore the Government will pay about 2 per cent as against the employees' 3½ per cent when the normal stage is reached, and the Government will have to contribute 1.58 per cent more per year than the 2.45 per cent it is now contributing.

In money the deficiency cost is about $4,362,000 additional over the existing cost and the normal cost is $5,535,000 over the present normal cost, so that for 28 years or so the Government will pay a little less than $10,000,000 additional into the fund, and after it reaches the normal stage it will be paying $5,535,000 more into the fund, that is, in addition to the $19,000,000 it is contributing now.

The fact that there is a cash balance in the fund does not mean anything at all, because the liabilities of the Government are very slight when people first begin to retire, but as the decades go on they increase by geometrical progression.

If the fund were once wiped out then we would have to contribute everything over and above the 3½ per cent of the Government employees, but making these annual appropriations just sufficient to keep the fund balanced, makes no heavy load on the Treasury and in view of the intention, when the system was originally installed, and the fact that the Government is paying a much less sum than was anticipated, I feel perfectly justified in recommending that this bill do pass.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have wondered if any study has been made comparing the retirement benefits now accorded to Federal employees with retirement benefits in established businesses, say, in the city of Washington. As I understand it, the business men of Washington have asked for this bill and the newspapers have abused Congress for not passing it. What retirement benefits do they give their employees?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Such retirement systems as I know existing in Washington, such as the system the Evening Star maintains, are so much more liberal that there is no comparison; and I want to say that I have not seen a Government retirement system in Great Britain, Germany, Italy, France, or any other country that is not much more liberal than the retirement system we have here, and there is not a municipality having a retirement system or a State having a retirement system that is not more liberal than our retirement system.

Mr. SIMMONS. Outside of the Evening Star retirement system, what businesses in Washington are retiring their employees and giving them the benefits that the Government now gives its employees?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know, but I do not know of a railroad in the country without a liberal retirement system, and we have railroad employees here; I do not know of a first-class insurance company; I do not know of a large employer of labor in my section of the country that does not have a retirement system.

Mr. SIMMONS. How do they compare? Has there been a study made as to the comparative bases between the two?

Mr. LEHLBACH. There has been, but the facts are not at my fingers' ends right now.

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman has not those figures available for us now?

Mr. LEHLBACH. But so far as any Government retirement system is concerned, this is the most conservative I have found either in the lesser subdivisions of this country or in any foreign country the figures of which we have had access to.

I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not propose to allow the remarks of the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, to pass unanswered. I believe he made the statement that nobody had answered him on the merits of the bill.

The chairman of our committee has already emphasized the fact that a 50-50 proposition for the retirement of superannuated employees is the most conservative, or to put it the other way, the most illiberal of all the retirement systems in the country. I have been on this committee for a good many years and I was here when the retirement legislation was originally passed, and the fact is that investigation demonstrated that a great many of the largest corporations in this country retire their superannuated employees without any contribution from their wages. Others require a contribution of only one-fourth of the total cost of the system.

Now, if the Members of the House will examine the debates when this retirement legislation was first enacted they will find that it was held out to the country as a 50-50 proposition. I remember well the debate in the Senate when the Senator from Utah, Mr. SMOOT, said he believed the result would be that the Government would pay five-eighths of the total cost. Senator Sterling, who was in charge of the bill, contended that it would only be a 50-50 proposition. The Government would pay one-half and the employees would pay one-half.

I can also remember hearing the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from New York—I was sitting in the front seat when he brought in the rule for the original retirement legislation—state that it was a 50-50 proposition.

Now, what happened? If the Government had carried out the 50-50 idea, Congress would have appropriated the first year from the Public Treasury an amount equal to the contribution of the employees. The employees contributed, in round numbers, from $12,500,000 to $28,500,000 annually, the Government contributed nothing, and that went along for eight years. This fact ought to be emphasized, because if the Government had appropriated an amount equal to the amount contributed by the employees for the first period of eight years and that amount had been invested, as the rest of the fund is invested, in interest-bearing securities, we would have a fund to-day of between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000.

Now, these estimates of cost by the actuaries are overestimates, and this is proved by the actual experience with respect to this fund. I called attention to this fact in a speech which I made the other day on the floor of this House. These same actuaries made the prediction when this bill was passed that if the Government made no contribution at the end of eight years there would not be any money in the fund at all. What are the facts? At the end of the period, without any contribution from the Government, there was $83,000,000 in the fund, and this in spite of the fact that that fund, contributed entirely by the employees, took care of the biggest peak of retirement you will ever have, because when the act went into effect from 6,000 to 7,000 old employees walked out immediately, resulting incidentally in an annual saving to the Government Treasury of over $800,000.

In other words, the actuaries were wrong—they were away off in their estimate; but the fact remains, as the chairman of our committee has just emphasized, that even with the enactment of this bill the civil-service retirement system is far from being a 50-50 proposition. The Government will never—even if the bill is enacted and even if the actuaries are entirely correct—the Government will never pay more than half of the cost of this retirement system. And if, as experience shows, the actuaries are wrong, the Government will never pay anywhere near the one-half they agreed to pay when the legislation was enacted.

Now, somebody may ask, why were the actuaries wrong? Well, in addition to the fact that they always overestimate, in order to be on the safe side, the fact is they have not sufficiently taken into consideration the immense turnover in the Government service, amounting in some years to almost 10 per cent of the approximately 400,000 employees. In other words, in some years 40,000 Government employees leave the service for one reason or another. They will never be a charge on the fund, although they are refunded the money that they have paid in, with interest.

Again, the actuaries assume that each man and woman when they come to the retirement age is going to retire. But every Member of the House knows that he is being continually importuned, by letter or otherwise, by persons in the Government service who have reached the retirement age and who desire to obtain an extension of two years, and then frequently of two years more, so that if they are still able to perform their duties they may be allowed to continue to work. These extensions are constantly being granted, and instead of becoming charges on the fund a very large number of employees, when they reach the retirement age, still continue to contribute to the fund.

And, finally, the death rate of the Government employees, when they finally do retire, is very much greater than the ordinary normal death rate in the country at large.

As a result of these four reasons, the figures given by the actuaries have been wrong.

The chief point, however, which I want to emphasize is that the actual experience of this very fund shows they were entirely wrong. They predicted in 1920 that in 1921 there would be only $4,356,500 in the fund if the Government contributed nothing, whereas there was actually $9,672,842.03. At the end of seven years these same actuaries predicted that there would be only $15,307,000 in the fund when there was actually $68,336,760.95. And bear in mind that if the Government had kept faith and contributed its share the fund would be two or three times greater.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. When did the Government agree to contribute 50 per cent, and who was its representative when it made the agreement?

Mr. DALLINGER. The men who were sponsors for the legislation on the floor of the House and the Senate.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Does not the gentleman know that such statements, made as they were made, do not even bind the Members to-day or anybody else?

Mr. DALLINGER. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that nothing binds the Government of the United States of America, as was shown in the case of the French spoliation claims, when the United States received from France millions of dollars to take care of the owners of vessels destroyed during the Napoleonic wars; that sum was turned into the Treasury, and although the Court of Claims has decided that two or three millions of dollars belong to the owners, or their descendants, Congress has never passed an appropriation to pay these just claims. Of course there is nothing to compel this great Nation to carry out its promises. When the retirement legislation was being prepared it was understood and held out to the country that it was a 50-50 proposition, and it was so understood when the legislation was enacted and signed by the President.

Now, this bill increases the annual retirement annuity from $700 to $800 a year. If the Government had contributed its part from the beginning and that amount had accumulated for the eight years from 1920 to 1928, the enactment of this bill would not require any additional appropriation over and above what is now being appropriated from the Government Treasury. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, if there is no further time to be used on the other side, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The annuity of an employee retired under the provisions of this act shall be computed by multiplying the average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation, not to exceed $1,600 per annum, received by such employee during the five years of allowable service next preceding the date of retirement, by the number of years of service, not exceeding 30 years, and dividing the product by 40. In no case, however, shall the annuity exceed $1,200 per annum. For the purposes of this act, all periods of service shall be computed in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of this act, and the annuity shall be fixed at the nearest multiple of 12.

The term "basic salary, pay, or compensation," whenever used in this act, shall be so construed as to exclude from the operation of this act all bonuses, allowances, overtime pay, or salary, pay, or compensation given in addition to the base pay of the position as fixed by law or regulation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH: Page 2, line 21, strike out the following in lines 21 and 22: "The five years of allowable service next preceding the date of retirement," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Any five consecutive years of allowable service at the option of the employee."

Mr. SMITH. The reasons for this amendment are as follows:

First. The amendment of the law would increase the annuity of many a little, of a few some, and of a very few a great deal, without lessening the annuity of anyone.

Second. It would increase the efficiency of the civil service in two ways: (a) By encouraging every employee, especially those in the lower grades, to strive always to do his or her best in order to advance, and thus reach the high five consecutive years of service before becoming less efficient, on account of age, when reductions would occur; and (b) by allowing the chiefs of bureaus to reduce inefficient employees, without reducing their annuities, when they come to retire; otherwise no chief will likely reduce an old and faithful employee, however inefficient on account of age, if at the same time he reduces his annuity for the rest of his life.

Third. There are employees whose salaries have been reduced during the last few years before retirement on account of inefficiency, due to old age, or sickness, or accident, or dislike of chief or other cause, who otherwise would have received the full amount under the present law. Should a person have his pension reduced the remainder of his life because of a reduction in salary, due to accident or other causes which made it necessary to reduce his salary? This often occurs under the present law.

Fourth. It is true of clerical and other simple work that after the age of 60 or 65 a clerk is usually less efficient, and where distinctly inefficient should be reduced, so that a younger person may be promoted to his place; but this is not liable to be done, as it at the same time reduces the annuity under the present law.

Fifth. Making the annuity depend on the average of any five consecutive years of service does full justice and injures no one, helps many, and makes the service much more efficient.

If a clerk's salary is $1,600 and he renders inefficient service on account of age or illness, the Government loses full service annually until he retires under the present law, for he may not be reduced, as it reduces his retired compensation the rest of his life. But if the law is amended as proposed he could be reduced and a younger and more efficient clerk be promoted to the $1,600 place, and the Government would be the gainer and the employee's retired pay not be affected. In every case of reduction in salary on account of old age or inefficiency under the proposed amendment the Government will save much, increase efficiency greatly, and do no injustice to anyone.

The Civil Service Commission, in the following letter addressed to the chairman of the committee, recommends the adoption of the amendment, which was embodied in H. R. 15679.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., January 3, 1929.

HON. FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on Civil Service,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LEHLBACH: The commission notes that H. R. 15679, introduced by Mr. SMITH, proposes to amend the retirement act in section 4 by providing that the annuity shall be computed by multiplying the average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation, not to exceed $1,500 per annum, received by such employees during any five consecutive years of allowable service, by the number of years of service, not to exceed 30, and dividing the product by 45.

The effect of this amendment, if enacted into law, would, of course, be confined to a limited number of cases so far as increasing the amount of annuity is concerned. Undoubtedly there are some annuitants who, during their later period of service, were reduced in salary to such an extent that under the present method provided for computing annuities they receive an amount considerably less than the maximum. Such reductions in salary were no doubt justified by the decreased usefulness of these employees, who had grown old in the service, but the decreased annuities resulting therefrom are probably not so easily justified. The proposed amendment would permit an adjustment in these cases.

It is believed that the provisions of H. R. 15679 would have a beneficial effect not only on the individual annuitants, but would also tend toward more efficient administration. With few exceptions the heads of the departments and offices will not willingly decrease the salary of employees nearing retirement age, knowing that such decrease will lower the annuity which they would otherwise receive, although such reduction in salary and position might be demanded, by the best interests of the service. If the salary in these cases could be reduced to conform with their worth to the service, but not lower the annuity, there would be less reluctance in so doing.

The commission does not have at hand any figures which would show the probable cost to the retirement system of this proposed change in method of computing annuities, but it is not believed any great burden would be imposed on the system thereby. The commission recommends favorable consideration of the bill.

By direction of the commission.

Very respectfully,

JOHN T. DOYLE, Secretary.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, personally I have no objection to the amendment. I think it is a good one and I believe it will result in a saving to the Treasury in the long run.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 8, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. In the case of those who before the effective date of this act shall have been retired on annuity under the provisions of the act of May 22, 1920, or said act as amended, or as extended by Executive orders, the annuity shall be computed, adjusted, and paid under the provisions of this act, but this act shall not be so construed as to reduce the annuity of any person retired before its effective date, nor shall any increase in annuity commence before such effective date."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. This act shall become effective on July 1, 1928.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 18, strike out the figure "3" and insert "4."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee will now rise and report the bill back to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEAVITT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1727) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes,' approved May 22, 1920, and acts in amendment thereof," approved July 3, 1926, as amended, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes, 219; noes, 0.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands the yeas and nays. Those who favor taking the vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty Members have arisen, not a sufficient number.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mrs. NORTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that we are not going to adjourn without having voted on this urgent bill. I understand this bill slightly increases the annuities paid retired employees and permits optional retirement after 30 years' service.

I know the Members of this House are in favor of increasing the present retirement pittances; for giving old and deserving men and women just a little more money to aid them in their remaining days of life.

Federal aid to the retirement fund to this day has been wholly unnecessary and it may come to pass that the United States Treasury may never pay a dollar of the cost of retiring Federal Government employees. Even if these liabilities do become actualities in years to come, they will probably be far less than estimated. However, the United States Government should participate in the retirement of its own employees. Great industrial organizations are doing just that and conferring other benefits upon their employees.

It must be remembered that civil-service employees, thousands of them poorly paid, and the leaders of Congress are inclined to the belief that they will continue to be poorly paid, are paying the annuities to their aged comrades out of their own pockets—out of deductions from their pay due to the passage of the retirement bill.

About 405,000 Government employees are paying into the retirement fund more than $28,000,000 annually. Disbursements for annuities and refunds for the fiscal year amounted to about $14,761,614. These figures prove that no Federal contributions are needed, as yet.

I am informed that the total amount in the retirement fund June 30, 1928, was $103,028,430; and the growth of this fund is amazing.

Many of these retired employees have passed on, with little reward from their Government. If we had not passed this legislation to-day, I feel we would have done one of the greatest injustices in history. Let us give these needy and loyal employees that which is rightly due them. [Applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, through inadvertance I omitted to offer an amendment to the bill, changing the date when it shall go into effect. The bill was passed by the Senate some time ago, and under the language in the bill it is effective as of date of July 1, 1928. It was my intention to amend that by making it July 1, 1929. I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings involving the passage of the bill, and that the Clerk be authorized to change the date 1928 to 1929.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings involving the passage of the bill referred to, to the extent that the figures "1928" may be changed "1929" in section 4, line 19, page 3 of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 5A OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 334, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

House Resolution 334

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 450, a bill to amend section 5a of the national defense act, approved June 4, 1920, providing for placing educational orders for equipment, etc., and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House. This resolution, if passed, brings before the House for consideration H. R. 450, a bill to amend section 5a of the national defense act.

The bill provides that the Secretary of War is authorized to place educational orders for munitions of war of special or technical design with commercial concerns so as to familiarize the manufacturing establishments with the manufacture of such munitions.

It is plain to everyone that the object is quantity production in time of emergency. This, my friends, spells preparedness in capital letters.

We have no large private munition factories as they have in foreign countries; our arsenals can only produce 10 per cent of what we would need in war.

By placing educational orders with manufacturers, the manufacturers will familiarize themselves with what they are expected to produce and be in a position to enlarge their plants in time of war.

If we are forced into war, we should not only defend ourselves but must be in a position to do so. Men can be mobilized faster than munitions can be produced.

As an example of what is needed in war, the English alone, at the Battle of the Somme, used 4,000,000 shells. Compare that with the fact that the northern forces during the entire war of the States used only 5,000,000 shells. You can see the necessity of quantity production and the absolute necessity of the manufacturer knowing what he is expected to produce in time of war.

Surely experience gained by educational orders means insurance or preparedness.

I ask for the passage of the resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me a little time?

Mr. RANSLEY. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I shall have very little to say on this rule. I have been unable from my study of the provisions of this legislation to give the bill my support. I really do not see any necessity of an emergency nature that would justify this departure in so-called preparation for war. I voted against the rule in the Committee on Rules. I am against the bill, although, of course, I realize the rule will probably be adopted. I understand some gentlemen on the minority side, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] and others, desire to make arguments against the bill in Committee of the Whole. I content myself with expressing my opposition to the rule.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Deal	Hull, Tenn.	Reed, Ark.
Auf der Heide	Dempsey	James	Rogers
Beck, Pa.	DeRouen	Johnson, Okla.	Sears, Fla.
Beck, Wis.	Doutrich	Kindred	Sirovich

Connolly, Pa.	Hawley	Palmer	Wolfenden
Crisp	Hoch	Patterson	Wurzbach
Crowther	Hope	Porter
Curry	Houston	Quayle
Davey	Hudspeth	Ramseyer

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-three Members are present—a quorum.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 450, and move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 450.

Mr. MORIN. And pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided, one half to be controlled by myself and the other half to be controlled by the minority member of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLY will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 450, with Mr. KELLY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 450, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 450) to amend section 5a of the national defense act, approved June 4, 1920, providing for placing educational orders for equipment, etc., and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this bill, H. R. 450, which gives a sharply defined and adequately safeguarded discretion to the Secretary of War, to place educational orders for munitions of special or technical design with responsible commercial concerns, should have favorable consideration by the House for the following important reasons:

(1) This bill is a logical and necessary expansion of the Government's present policy of planning in peace time for the mobilization of the country's industrial resources in event of another war.

As a result of our bitter experiences in the past war, Congress saw the wisdom of providing in the national defense act of 1920 for a program of industrial preparedness. The Assistant Secretary of War is made responsible for this industrial planning work, which to date has all been done on paper, necessary and good as far as it goes. This bill carries this planning work one logical step further by enabling the War Department to have the factories on this industrial preparedness program manufacture every once in a while some of the munitions which they have agreed to manufacture in time of war.

(2) By enabling our commercial factories to become familiar with munitions production, the testimony of practical manufacturers shows that we can save many months of invaluable time if and when the Government is compelled in event of war to call on our commercial factories to convert themselves to munitions production.

This time is saved for two reasons:

(a) Educational orders will make it possible to have available in time for each plant which will be called upon to manufacture specialized munitions at least one complete set of the special dies, jigs, fixtures, and gauges which are needed to enable the plant in question to convert itself to war production. This one set of special tools can in time of emergency be used as a pattern for the rapid production of additional sets, and hence save the plant in question many months' time in designing and adapting these tools to its factory requirements.

(b) These educational orders will also make it possible to have available in each of these plants a small nucleus of men, one or more foremen, and some artisans who are familiar with the art of manufacturing the particular munitions in question by actually having made them. These men in times of emergency can serve as a nucleus for the rapid training of additional workers and thus save valuable time.

(3) This saving of time will result in an economical reduction in the total amount of reserves of munitions which must be maintained in peace time to enable an army to get into action while our factories are getting into war production.

(4) It must be borne in mind in considering the need for this legislation that we have no large privately owned munitions industry in this country. Hence, in war time it is absolutely necessary for us to rely on commercial plants which must convert themselves to munitions production; for example, we must depend upon a concern which in peace time manufactures calculating machines to manufacture fuzes for us in war time. It must be borne in mind also that our Government arsenals and factories, when going at full speed, can only manufacture from 1 to 10 per cent of the munitions needed in event of a major war.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. What per cent do you advocate that the arsenals should use?

Mr. MORIN. Not over 10 per cent of the need during war can be produced at Government arsenals.

Mr. ALLEN. Where do you get that information?

Mr. MORIN. From the Ordnance Department, the officer in charge of the work in the arsenals.

The objections to this bill are—

(1) That it will interfere with the operation of our Government arsenals and Government-owned factories.

The answer is that it will not. There will be maintained in these institutions at all times a trained force of workmen capable of rapid expansion to work these arsenals at their capacity. Unless there is sufficient money appropriated for the purchase of munitions to enable the War Department to keep the arsenals in operation, and in addition place educational orders, there will be no educational orders placed. These arsenals will serve as heretofore to keep the art of manufacture alive, to improve that art, and as a proper check on commercial orders as to the cost of manufacture.

(2) That it is inadvisable to relax the usual provision of awarding contracts to the lowest responsible bidder.

The answer is that it is necessary to do this if the Secretary of War is to be able to train and educate responsible and competent industrial plants in peace time for their allotted work in the industrial mobilization of the Nation in an emergency. Furthermore, your committee gave this objection the consideration it deserves and feels that it has amply safeguarded the discretion the bill will give the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. We all know that the arsenals at the present time are down away below the ratio of 1913 or 1914. They are crying for work, and the policy has been to ignore the great arsenal plants that we have in our country. In my district there is an arsenal that contains over $400,000,000 of stores, with a mere handful of men taking care of them. This would only make it evident that more arsenals are going out of existence.

Mr. MORIN. No; it will not affect the arsenals in any way. They will always be maintained with trained workmen to supply the bulk of munitions during peace.

Another objection is—

(3) That educational orders will result in building up a private munitions industry in this country.

Nothing could be further from the facts. The testimony of responsible manufacturers shows beyond any doubt that these educational orders are not and can not be a source of profitable commercial business, because such orders are bound to be a disturbance as well as a source of great inconvenience to a plant engaged in commercial production.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MORIN. I yield to myself one minute more.

Our responsible manufacturers will accept such orders only from a willingness to cooperate in an effective way with the War Department in its industrial preparedness program. Furthermore, your committee has taken the additional precaution of providing that no firm can be given such an order except once in every three years, and that the maximum amount the War Department may spend on educational orders shall not be more than $1,000,000 a year from available appropriations during the next five years.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Has this the approval of the War Department?

Mr. MORIN. It has the approval of the War Department. It does not require any additional appropriation.

Mr. LINTHICUM. How has the appropriation been made for this purpose heretofore?

Mr. MORIN. There is provision in the War Department appropriation bill each year for the making of munitions, and they will use part of the funds in that bill in the allocation of these orders. It does not require any other appropriation.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. This bill practically destroys competitive bidding for this work, does it not?

Mr. MORIN. It does not, for the reason that these are just for noncommercial articles and not commercial articles. Of course, it is necessary to do that in order that the Assistant Secretary of War, who has charge of this work, can allocate these contracts in the plants that come within the scheme of industrial preparedness.

Mr. HUDSON. What amount has been allocated for this work?

Mr. MORIN. No money at all. They have just gotten the plans ready, but have not functioned as yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, it is not often that there comes a serious disagreement in the Committee on Military Affairs concerning legislation affecting the national defense. I believe it can be truthfully said of the Committee on Military Affairs that there have been fewer minority reports coming from that committee concerning legislation than perhaps any other committee in the House. I think it is unfortunate that we are called upon in the closing days of a busy Congress to legislate on propositions of such vast importance as the one that is included in this bill. I do not agree with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the conclusions he reaches concerning the scope or the effect of this proposed legislation. It is a radical departure on the part of the Government of the United States from the position that it has held and maintained through all the years of the past relative to the manufacture of munitions of war. It has been the policy of our Government in the past concerning the manufacture of munitions of war that they shall not be turned over to special or private interests, but that the Government itself will manufacture them in its own arsenals, and only in times of emergency do we usually depart from that principle but never in peace times.

Now, the real purpose of this legislation, as it was originally introduced, is found in the bill in its original form, which is an amendment of the national defense act, providing, among other things, that the Secretary of War—> shall cause to be manufactured or produced at the Government arsenals or Government-owned factories of the United States all such supplies or articles needed by the War Department as said arsenals or Government-owned factories are capable of manufacturing or producing upon an economical basis.

Now, we propose to amend that section by adding the following language:

> That the Secretary of War may authorize the placing of educational orders for equipment, munitions, and accessories needed in the military service with commercial concerns to the degree that is considered by him as being necessary to familiarize commercial factories with munitions manufacture and to advance the industrial war plans of the War Department, and in placing these educational orders the competitive bids which in his opinion best secure these results may be accepted; and he shall make statement of his action under this provision in his annual report.

That was the original bill prepared in the War Department. The committee has hedged it about by a number of amendments seeking to make it a little more secure and to protect the Government more than it would have been protected in the first draft. But the purpose of this legislation is to empower the Secretary of War in his discretion, in times of peace, to let contracts under a competitive system or not, if he sees fit, for the education of manufacturers in the manufacture of munitions of war and everything connected with it. That is the purpose of this bill. Not only that, but the distinguished gentleman says it will not cost any money, but it provides that $1,000,000 shall be taken from appropriations made for the War Department for other purposes and expend that amount within each five years to start with. Who is it in this House who does not know that by beginning with $1,000,000 upon a great program of this kind that it will not end in hundreds of millions? Not only that, but the gentleman says the arsenals are in no danger. I say to the gentleman, and I here and now predict—in order that the younger Members of this House may remember—that if this legislation is passed it will be an entering wedge for the private manufacturers of munitions of war in the United States and the ultimate abandonment of the arsenals of the United States.

As the legislation is written the Government pays all the bills.

A manufacturer may not make a profit out of this experiment but he loses nothing. What does he gain? Oh, my friends, I would have you remember that if the War Department goes out on this educational program to let contracts to certain industries for the manufacture of munitions of war, and an emergency does come, who is it here that does not know that only those industries that have been educated will be the ones to get the great war contracts for the manufacture of munitions of war? Then will come the harvest of profit gathering.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Then it will permit favoritism in its worst degree, will it not?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. It will not only be favoritism in its worst degree but it will be a favoritism that the Government itself has built up against its own institutions. The founders of our Government, my friends, never intended that the national defense of this country or the manufacture of munitions of war should ever depend upon the activity or good will of private industry. It has always been the policy of our country and it is traditional with us that we should not confide into the hands of selfish interests the national defense of our country in supplying us with munitions of war, either in times of peace or in times of war, except by our permission or under the command of the President of the United States and the Congress.

Now, my friends, there are many others who want to speak on this bill, and I feel I should conclude, but, my friends, in my opinion there has not been brought upon the floor of this House in this or any other Congress since I have been here a more important piece of legislation than you are now considering under a special rule, and in my humble judgment if you shall pass this legislation as the years go on you will have cause to regret that you did not stand by the traditional moorings and teachings of our country and not start out on a program of education that can not end in any other way than detrimental to our own established institutions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself two additional minutes. Not only that, my friends, but we propose in this legislation to turn over to private industry all of the dies, jigs, and everything the Government has that have always been considered military secrets within its ordnance department. I contend that those secrets pertaining to our national defense should not be taken away from the Ordnance Department and turned over to private industry.

Mr. RANSLEY. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I yield.

Mr. RANSLEY. If the gentleman would only read the reports he would find that the jigs and dies will remain the property of the Government and are not turned over.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Why, certainly. The Government simply gives them away for a season, but of what use would these things be after manufacturers have reproduced them and are prepared to make everything there is in them? Who cares anything about the title after they find out all they want to know? You may not turn them over permanently, but after they have been turned over and they learn everything about them, who then cares anything about the title? The Government is to get back those dies and jigs, but the manufacturers will have gained all the information they desire about them, can reproduce them if they wish, so that there is no great use to be made of them thereafter by the Government.

Now, my friends, I simply want to sound this word of warning. I hate to disagree with the chairman of my committee and the majority of my committee, but to my way of thinking in the interest of the national defense of my country, I am unwilling to pass legislation that will end, in my opinion, in turning over the manufacture of munitions of war to private industry, both in times of peace and in times of war. [Applause.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] is unduly alarmed about what this bill means. I have always been very conservative toward the War Department of this Government. I never did, on any occasion, allow them to reach their hands into the pockets of the people, but I have not been sitting around here idle all these years. [Laughter and applause.]

It is manifest, gentlemen, that this is a progressive Government. The United States of America, in my judgment, is greater than any other three governments of this civilized world. This Republic has always been nestling in peace and never prepared for war, and still we always win every war. All these people plotting around are afraid the United States is going to be engulfed in some cataclysm and be destroyed in some unknown manner. This sounds like nonsense to me, but with the rapid progress we are making in development, the United States Government can not sit down and be idle.

So far as I am concerned, I believe that these things that fly through the air like blimps, airplanes, and airships can whip out all the armies of the world. So far as infantry is concerned, in 30 years from now it will be a thing of the past.

Who, 20 years ago, would have thought you could have this thing we call radio, where you can sit down in your own home and listen to a man over in Rome or in London, and listen to the beautiful operas and to the great orators of this earth? Ten years ago you would have thought the man was crazy who would say we could do that. Ten years ago you would have thought the man crazy who believed we could fly through the air and carry freight and passengers, yet a man crossed the Atlantic Ocean in an airship and flew all the way down to South America in an airship and returned just as safe as we used to be in the ordinary ox team. Yet there are people who are afraid to do anything. [Applause.]

My friend GARRETT stood up here and talked about $5,000,000 in five years' time. This is not an additional sum, but it must come out of the available funds appropriated for munitions of war. To have this country absolutely safe with regard to all the different things that will go to make us a success in any war, an experiment of $1,000,000 a year is indeed economical.

The gentleman says we ought to do all of it in the Government arsenals. I believe in making everything we possibly can for the armed forces of the Government in the arsenals that this Government operates, and yet good business makes me know it is necessary for private industry to know something about making these different accessories, like guns, machines, and so forth, that our Government would need in an emergency.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Did not the hearings before our committee disclose that munitions of war go out of date and become obsolete in a short length of time; and what evidence has the gentleman that what these manufacturers might make would not be out of date when the war came on?

Mr. QUIN. Certainly; and, my friend, that good double team that your father owned went out of date, and you have an automobile to-day; but was he crazy because he had a nice horse and buggy? Do you mean to say that because a man had a wheelbarrow he is crazy when now he has a tractor that is run by gasoline and a motor engine? [Laughter and applause.]

The argument of the gentleman is that we should sit down here and not do anything. As I told you to start with, I believe all of this will be antiquated and out of date 30 or 40 years from now; but it behooves us as patriotic men in the watchtower to be ready at all times and at all hours, because we do not know when the enemy will come to our door.

What kind of manufacture is provided for in this bill? It is not to be for profit. The evidence before our committee is that this is to be done out of patriotic motives, and I believe that, because I do believe there are many honest, patriotic men engaged in business in this country who are anxious to make these patterns and start this line of business and have a few trained men at hand to organize a great force of workers in that particular line whenever needed, not for profit. They are entitled to their expenses and a reasonable profit if they want it, although the gentlemen who testified before us said many of them would agree to do it without a dime of profit.

These are the things that will keep the United States Government up to date in jigs, dies, and the different types and kinds of guns and cannon and the different types and kinds of ammunition; not the things you put on the soldiers' backs, not the things you put in his stomach, because they are articles of commerce that anybody can make, and you can get them in any emergency, but these are the technical things that we need to fight a war with.

These are the things that are necessary to win a victory. These are the things that you must keep up to date and have somebody prepared to make them in case you want a great number of them all of a sudden, just like it was with respect to this Government when we went into the war with Germany. At that time our country did not have the different necessities in store, and should not have them. Our mistake was that we did not have any experienced force and the dies and patterns in different lines of private industry prepared to make in mass production the guns, accessories, and munitions of war called for by the exigency of the occasion. We were too long in getting ready for the needs of the Army. We were fortunate that our allies could supply us the guns and munitions. We do not propose under this bill to waste a dollar of money. We mean to save much money for the Government of this Republic by adopting this businesslike policy, as a man must do when he engages in a successful business. There is no business but what must keep abreast of the times.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Does not the gentleman think it is wise to have the provision whereby competition is eliminated?

Mr. QUIN. Certainly; what do we want to fool around for when you ask patriotic men to do this thing?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. How do you know that they are going to be patriotic?

Mr. QUIN. I assume that we will have a sensible, patriotic man to be Secretary of War. If he turns out to be a rascal it will not be but a little time before Congress knows it; but we can not start out with the proposition that every man put in a high place is going to be a scoundrel. I assume that in a business proposition the Government will get the best of it. We want to send out these men to these large factories to see what they can do in a time of emergency. Here is a factory that can make a certain thing, and we want to take on this experiment to see if they can make a certain type of munition of war, a small division of it to be turned out in an experimental way, when if there should be war they could turn over the entire plant to the making of that thing. Take another factory to make another special thing, and so on throughout the United States we could have 25 different plants that would be ready in the space of a day and a night, to turn the plants over and manufacture that thing by the thousands.

We want it understood that if the Government needs it they know the place where they can go and have them turned out. That is the object of the bill—not as my good friend from Texas says to go into an unknown field or into an unknown method of handling the thing. It is a sensible businesslike way of handling them, not in an unknown field, but so that the Government will be able to know where to obtain the technical parts of these things if war does come. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LETTS].

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Chairman, I am very anxious that Members of the House should at least understand the nature and extent of this bill. I hope that I may always be considered reasonable with respect to matters which relate to justifiable preparation for war or against the threat of war. I think that this Government should have a well-developed and fully considered program with respect to that matter, but I believe it should come from the Congress of the United States. I do not think that a policy of that kind should be developed in the office of the Secretary of War and be handed out to Congress piecemeal. I wish it might be fully understood just what this bill will do.

At this time the arsenals of the United States have about one-third as many civilian employees as they had in 1913 and 1914, before there was any breath or suspicion of war.

Since the war ended these plants have run down; they are almost abandoned. The few men that are employed there are required mostly to take care of the machinery in the shops. Here is the Rock Island Arsenal near my district worth approximately $400,000,000. It is practically idle, many men employed there were thrown out and required to find employment elsewhere. Yet they say it is necessary to give these educational orders to private concerns throughout the country so that someone may know how to produce war materials. Why not have someone in the arsenals that understand these things? Why not have a personnel in the arsenals that can readily expand and send skilled and able men out into private concerns to direct the operation of those plants?

Mr. MORIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MORIN. How would the gentleman expect the arsenals to function if they send these men out to private concerns?

Mr. LETTS. The arsenals should be sufficiently manned so that they could spare the necessary men to go out into the private manufacturing concerns.

Mr. MORIN. They only produce 10 per cent of the full capacity in peace times. We need the men in the arsenals for the same reason that we need them in the factory in the time of an emergency.

Mr. LETTS. The trouble with the gentleman's suggestion is that he is willing to neglect factories and arsenals which are now owned and controlled by the Government, in order to build up the industrial organizations throughout the country. We should have those splendid arsenals of ours equipped with machines and tools and jigs and dies and men and foremen, so that in time of emergency we can pick up these able men and send them to the private plants and let them take charge of production.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SWING. Is not that what took place in the last war?

Mr. LETTS. That is exactly what took place. I call attention to the fact that we had at the Rock Island Arsenal something over 1,900 men before the great World War broke out, and now we have about 670 men there. Some men were sent out as foremen, and we were required to draw in many more workmen from all these parts of the country at a very great cost to the Government.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BARBOUR. At the time of the World War was not our industry on a producing basis because it had been producing munitions for two years for the Allies?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And yet, notwithstanding that fact, was it not a year and a half after we were in that war before our armies were in any way supplied with what they ought to have?

Mr. LETTS. Perhaps so, but there is nothing in this plan that will speed up matters of production. I ask the gentleman, when would the private concerns want these orders? They say they are willing to take them without profit. When would they want them? Would they ask for them at the busy times, when they are making plenty of money for the stockholders, or when work is slack?

They would then come to the War Department and say, "Business is slow throughout the country, and we must have a war order from you in order to keep our factories running," and every industrial plant throughout the country will, when business is bad, come to the Government and say, "Now is the time that we must have these orders; we must have orders worth enough to us, at least, to enable us to keep our working forces together and avert the necessity of turning them loose." What would be the result? We would be building up a war party in this country of manufacturers, who know that they can come to their Government in a time of financial, industrial, or labor distress, and get the orders that will help them out of their difficulties, and we would be putting the spirit of war in our workmen around those private plants, who, at the behest and suggestion of their employers, would write to us, their Congressmen, and say, "See that our plant gets a war job."

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. BUSBY. Would not the natural consequence of scattering this manufacturing of ordnance all over the country tend to cause the different parts of the country to demand war on slight provocation, in order that they might have more business?

Mr. LETTS. Certainly; and, furthermore, if we prepare for war, are not the countries that we are preparing against going to prepare themselves to meet us, and does not that foment a war spirit throughout the world?

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Is there not a plant down at Alexandria?

Mr. LETTS. I think not?

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Did they not have one there just about the close of the war?

Mr. LETTS. I am not sure about that. That may be.

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. I understand that they had. I was wondering what condition that was in.

Mr. LETTS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN] has suggested that while this act will repeal certain parts of the national defense act, it is in the interest of good judgment and good ordinary sense. What does it do? In the first place, we have as a part of existing law a provision that munitions of war and war materials must be made in the arsenals when they can be produced there on an economical basis. This bill would repeal that part of the law. Furthermore, it is a provision of existing law that materials required by the Government must be procured upon competitive bids, and this bill would directly repeal that law and permit the Secretary of War to pick out a favored bidder. It presents the opportunity for favoritism. It may easily become a matter of tremendous and vital national importance. I have not the facts in detail, but I recall that about 1913 there was a gentleman in this House from the fourteenth district of Illinois named Tavenner, the immediate predecessor of the distinguished gentleman, Mr. Graham, who was ahead of our distinguished colleague, Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Tavenner analyzed the Navy League at that time, and he found that every member of that league was a representative of some large manufacturing concern that had orders to produce materials for the United States Navy. Think of it! And is not that the natural tendency? What would happen here? Is it not the most likely thing in the world that after this bill is enacted the private manufacturers of the country will assemble themselves and organize so that they may have an effective and necessary understanding between them so that there will be no overlapping, so that there will be no jostling, so that each one will get his share of the pudding that is being passed about?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. And is there not always the danger that these interested parties would foment war scares for the purposes of stimulating orders of that kind?

Mr. LETTS. I think that is a very reasonable probability, and more than that, it is most likely. Recently the Assistant Secretary of War went before a committee of the Senate and requested an appropriation or an authorization to purchase 100 light tanks, all the time having within his own jurisdiction these arsenals, a particular charge that belonged to him. Now I understand that he believes that to purchase and to procure may be somewhat synonymous in meaning; but he forgot the arsenals.

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WURZBACH. I view of the fact that by the express terms of this legislation only $1,000,000 a year can be expended, does not the gentleman believe that he is unduly alarmed at the danger of too great an extension of power in the Secretary of War?

Mr. LETTS. May I ask the distinguished gentleman to answer the question for himself? The request has gone out under the propaganda for a 10-year program for about $2,000,000 a year. We have authorized the expenditure of something less than $700,000 a year only for this purpose. Now, if $1,000,000 a year is used for educational orders, it will be about $300,000 in excess of what is being expended now for all purposes of that character, just where will the arsenals come in?

Mr. WURZBACH. I do not think it is contemplated that the arsenals shall be done away with or that their power shall be limited. Following up the question which I propounded in the beginning, does not the gentleman believe that if there should be any abuse of the discretion conferred upon the Secretary of War, Congress could then within a year correct this legislation, or repeal it if it saw fit?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; but in the meantime a great deal of damage may be done, and you will have propaganda constantly on your desks, and the manufacturers of the country will be writing to you asking you to support this thing, which is to their advantage.

Mr. WURZBACH. You doubt then that Congress would have the intelligence and the courage and independence, in the face of this propaganda, to remedy the situation?

Mr. LETTS. I expect the Congress to resist this propaganda to-day. Perhaps the gentleman believes, as others describe this bill to be, an authorization for a million dollars a year for five years independently for educational purposes. Indeed, the language of the bill may justify such interpretation, for at the bottom of page 4 you will find language like this—

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend not to exceed $1,000,000 in each of the next succeeding five fiscal years after the passage of this act.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HUDSON. As I understand the purposes of this bill, they use the term "educational" so that in these plants workmen may be trained so as to have knowledge in the production of these things. But is it not true that these workmen would be scattered in the interval, and you must have continuous employment, and therefore the very fact of the turnover would defeat the purpose of the bill?

Mr. LETTS. Yes. I think that is obvious, and when we realize that no manufacturer will want these orders if they are to be without profit, it is plain that they will not take them at the time when the Government should have the service, but only at such times as meet the convenience of the manufacturers.

Mr. MORIN. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. LETTS. Yes; for a question.

Mr. MORIN. I will say that the manufacturers——

Mr. LETTS. I did not yield for a statement. I yielded for a question. That is the representation that has been made, that these educational orders are to be without profit. How can any manufacturer or the manager of any incorporated concern represent his stockholders in that manner, and what inclination is there in men engaged in business to labor without reward?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not all fresh in our memory, the huge profits that were made by these manufacturers during the war?

Mr. LETTS. We never can outlive the shame that the profiteers brought upon us during the war.

Mr. HUDSON. Dollar-a-year men.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. BUSBY. How can they manufacture these things without investing a great deal of capital in their plants?

Mr. LETTS. In this bill, as I understand it, we allow the Secretary of War to enter into any kind of contract, on a cost-plus plan or anything that would involve expenditures, and including the necessary cost to equip the plant and carry out the contract.

Mr. BUSBY. If this is to be an educational bill, would it not be better to educate the people to make these articles in the Government arsenals?

Mr. LETTS. Yes. But this is not to educate the people in the ways of economy and thrift, but in a new way of spending the people's money.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I have not the information at hand myself, but does the gentleman know whether this bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on War?

Mr. LETTS. I can not answer that.

Mr. MORIN. If you refer to the Committee on Military Affairs, I am one member who does not object to the bill. If the gentleman will yield now, I wish to say——

Mr. LETTS. I can not yield now. I am sorry. The chairman says it is not proposed in any way to harm arsenals and the men and women employed in them. I propose at the proper time to offer an amendment which, it seems to me, will test the sincerity with which the proposition has been advanced, that the bill will not injure the arsenals.

By my amendment I want to provide that "nothing in this act shall operate to reduce in quantity the amount of any class of ordnance work at present being performed in each or any of the Government arsenals, nor shall any educational order be awarded to any private individual, firm, or corporation until provision is made for assigning to the several Government arsenals a sufficient amount of ordnance work and other materials that are required by the War Department and of the work of other departments and agencies of the Government sufficient to continue the employment of a continuous working force not less than that employed prior to June 30, 1917, at each of the several arsenals."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I wish to explain, if I may, very briefly the salient points of the bill as recommended by the committee. The original bill as introduced in the House and considered by the committee was vulnerable in all the respects, in my humble judgment, that have been argued in opposition to the bill as reported. If gentlemen have read the hearings before the committee, they will see, I believe, that I urged objections of the same general nature as have been urged here. Therefore the whole matter was gone over in my own mind, and I offered in the committee amendments which prevailed, and those amendments constitute the bill that is now under consideration.

Let us see some of the points of distinction and difference in this amended bill and see if the committee is not justified in asking for legislation of this sort as recommended here. In the first place, the original bill authorized the letting of contracts for the procurement of equipment, ordnance, and accessories thereto generally. The bill as reported restricts and limits the power not to equipment and ordnance generally but to what? To munitions of war. Of what sort? Of a special and technical design, noncommercial in character, and essential accessories and parts thereof which may be needed—that is, accessories to special, technical, and noncommercial articles.

Now, it is manifest that in order to be prepared to turn out munitions of a special, technical, and noncommercial character there must be some preliminary changes in preparations of design and plan. The evidence is that the arsenals, which have been mentioned by the previous speaker, were unable in the last war to produce more than about 15 per cent of the total munitions necessary to carry on.

Mr. LETTS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Certainly.

Mr. LETTS. Would it not be well if the War Department would come to the committee with a program which would include some kind of a plan that would make reasonable peacetime use of the arsenals? In other words, is not that the best place to begin and not the place to end in the matter of preparation for war?

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman were to start to manufacture commercial commodities in a Government plant, we would run into the proposition we ran into with reference to the use of the Muscle Shoals property, which has a great national defense scope and purpose, and when we proposed to use that in peace time for the fixation of nitrogen, which would have value as a commercial and agricultural commodity in order to promote agriculture, the House passed it, the Senate passed it, and it met with a pocket veto from the President. We always run into opposition when we attempt to put the Government into business.

Mr. LETTS. Is it not the gentleman's conclusion that this relates to noncommercial articles only?

Mr. McSWAIN. The noncommercial articles mentioned here are articles that are capable of being used only in war. That is the point and that is what is meant by noncommercial. It means fuzes, bombs, weapons, and things of that sort.

Mr. LETTS. I should think that perhaps it might mean articles not used in commerce.

Mr. McSWAIN. Why, certainly; that is what it means. Therefore it is necessary that these ordinary industrial plants shall be permitted to have some training period in order to be able to turn out such noncommercial, special design and technical commodities in the event of war.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. It seems to be the contention that some of these munitions and articles of war should be manufactured in Government arsenals. If we were to compare the capital investment which would be required in Government arsenals to adequately equip and maintain an army at the front with the relatively small amount carried in this bill, which would the gentleman think would be the greater?

Mr. McSWAIN. It is obvious, of course, that since we are not engaged in war, except for a small percentage of the time—certainly we have not been engaged in war during 5 per cent of our history—that to maintain great ordnance establishments and great arsenals at 100 per cent maximum for the production of articles that are used only 5 per cent of the time would be bad business for the Government and for the Treasury. We do not maintain an Army of 1,000,000 men all the time to do all the fighting, but call from the civilian ranks men to fight when the Nation's life and honor are at stake. So it is proposed, and ever has been the scheme, that ordinary commercial industrial enterprises shall in time of war be able to contribute those supplies of munitions, ordnance, and accessories thereto that are necessary to carry on.

But let us go on. Do you not see that a part of the bill proposed here is that the first order may include what? A set of gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, the title to which shall remain in the Government. Having been manufactured by such and such concern, having been accepted by the Ordnance as sufficient to accomplish the purpose desired, they are tagged, they are stored away, they are stored in a certain compartment, and marked as being suitable to be used in a certain industrial plant; and in the event of emergency they are put on the machinery already in that establishment and the plant starts to turning out equipment with a very small percentage of the time that would be required if they had to start with the making of such dies, jigs, and patterns.

I think all of us, including those who have in the best of good conscience seen fit to oppose this measure, will agree this is wise, because we all know, ladies and gentlemen, that modern wars are not only wars of men, but they are wars of munitions, they are wars of machines, they are wars of matériel, and that is an increasing proposition, and it has progressively increased from every war that we have historic knowledge of until this good day.

As I now remember, there was more explosive content, more nitrogen, consumed in the Battle of Gettysburg than was consumed in the whole seven years of the Revolutionary War, and several times as much consumed in the great assault and attack at St. Mihiel in 1918 as at the Battle of Gettysburg.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WRIGHT. There seems to be the idea among some of the Members that this is an entirely new proposition. I want to ask the gentleman if the War Department is not doing now just what is authorized by this bill in putting out educational orders?

Mr. McSWAIN. They are trying to do it. In compliance with existing law they are, of course, letting contracts, but they are obliged to let them as the law requires under the principle of competitive bidding.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand that, but they are actually doing this kind of work?

Mr. McSWAIN. Oh, yes; in effect.

You will observe there is another very marked distinction between the original bill and the bill as reported. The original bill did not contemplate any advertisement. I am committed to and firmly convinced of the proposition that there must be the widest publicity in all Government business. So I insisted that there should be in this bill a provision that there shall be advertisement to the whole country so that every person, firm, or corporation in the country shall have ample opportunity after such notice by advertisement to come in and offer to bid on every proposed contract.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think the gentleman has probably answered the question I was about to ask him. When the gentleman asked you awhile ago how they were doing this work now, the gentleman said that they had to do it by competitive bidding. Does this bill intend that they shall continue under the plan of competitive bidding?

Mr. McSWAIN. The bill as now reported requires advertisement and requires competitive bidding, but does not require the War Department to accept the bid of the lowest bidder. That is not required. It permits the War Department to pick out which of the bidders in its judgment will best contribute to the strengthening of the national defense from an industrial point of view, and offer the bid to him rather than to another.

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. SWING. Where in the bill does it require the Secretary of War to let it to any one of the persons who bid? He may advertise for bids, but he may let the contract to some one who has not bid at all.

Mr. McSWAIN. If it is not in there, I will offer an amendment so that it shall be in there.

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman also offer an amendment that it shall be done without profit, as has been so generally stated here?

Mr. McSWAIN. No; I do not take any stock in that. Nobody is going to do any kind of work without profit.

Mr. SWING. We have been told that that is their promise.

Mr. McSWAIN. That has been stated, and that is the belief of many; but that is just an unreasonable proposition, that is all there is to it.

Mr. SWING. Of course.

Mr. McSWAIN. How can a man agree in advance whether it is to be with profit or not?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. If we are already doing this work by competitive bidding and getting along pretty well, why do we need more legislation?

Mr. McSWAIN. For the very reason that has been urged, if the gentleman will permit, that to require the acceptance of the minimum bid might give the work to an enterprise that is not qualified or not situated so that it can in time of war be of material help to the Government.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why would you have such a firm as that to bid at all?

Mr. McSWAIN. We do not ask anybody to bid. We advertise it to the world and let everybody bid. You can not pick out your bidders.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. With reference to this advertising about which the gentleman feels so strongly, would it not be possible for that to be a very harmful thing, especially if you are going to advertise to the world that the United States is interested in developing certain machines of war? Is not that business sometimes necessarily done secretly, so that this advertising feature might be injurious?

Mr. McSWAIN. No; I do not think so. I do not agree with the gentleman about that. The only things that any nation is justified in keeping secret are peculiarly technical military instruments of war.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Take a specific instance, and suppose the Government was trying to develop a gun larger than any yet produced, and they advertised and wanted bids to build the dies or whatever may be necessary to build the gun, referring to it in size, the rest of the world immediately knows that the United States Government is going ahead, and they will likewise go ahead. I do not see any sense in that advertising feature at all.

Mr. McSWAIN. Well, I am sorry to differ with the gentleman, but I submit what is the history of every State in this Nation, that in order to obtain supplies for public use every firm and corporation in the State shall have an opportunity to bid on them. We can not keep things like that secret. You can not hide a big gun, you can not hide the airplane. I am not alarmed for fear somebody will find out our military strength. If we have the strength we need not go around swaggering with the big stick; we take the attitude of manly independence, and say, "Here we are strictly on the defensive, but if you want to jump on us, we know what you will get." We are not intimidating anyone but respecting all, strong and weak alike.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to call attention to one of the provisions in this bill. At the bottom of page 2, it says:

That the Secretary of War is authorized to place such orders with such persons, firms, or corporations as shall, after consideration of all offers and of the circumstances, appear to him, in his discretion, best calculated to serve the interests of the Government and promote the cause of national defense.

Mr. McSWAIN. Here is the answer to that. On page 2 it says:

Provided further, That any person, firm, or corporation receiving any such contract or order shall keep an accurate record of account of all costs for the manufacture of all such gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, and of the munitions and accessories and parts hereby authorized to be manufactured, and such record of account shall be submitted at any time upon demand to the Secretary of War or any person designated by him for inspection and audit, to the end that full information relating to the cost of such production may be had by the Secretary of War, and a certified copy of said record of account shall be delivered to the Secretary of War at the completion of the contract, to be preserved by him for the period of 10 years thereafter.

These must be kept 10 years and reported by the Secretary of War. Now, here is the point: This is to be public. The acts and doings of the Secretary of War must be reported to the Congress. If he abuses that discretion of letting the contracts, then Congress will correct him and charge him with certain malfeasance in office. Under the law, if administered fairly and honestly, you will find out what it costs in peace time to manufacture these things. Therefore, we will have a standard check against graft and greed demanded in an emergency war. Because when the manufacturers say to you that they can not manufacture for less than a certain sum you will answer that in peace time, as shown by the report, here is the time sheet, here is the material sheet, here is the cost of the items of various factories, and so in time of peace it costs so much. So that we will know what the cost is, and if prices are frozen when war breaks out we can then say that it costs no more in war time than in peace time, and we will have a standard to guide us in time of war in letting contracts.

Mr. TILSON. Did the committee have hearings on this bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Was the report unanimous? I see no minority views on it.

Mr. McSWAIN. So far as I know there were no minority views.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will say that the vote in the committee, although I understand it is not in order, was unanimous except that I was one member who voted against it. I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, whenever anyone these days wants to put over something they sloganize it. That is what they are doing here; they put in the word "educational" merely for the purpose of trying to fool us and cram down the throats of this Congress one of the most vicious pieces of legislation ever proposed.

Let us see what the bill actually provides; let us strip it of some of its verbiage and see what is in it. It provides for the manufacture by private concerns of munitions. That includes ordnance, it includes shells, it includes powder, it includes all kinds of explosives, all noncommercial in character. In other words, it includes everything except that which is carried in the stores of the country. It includes uniforms, it includes shoes, unless these shoes are of a commercial nature.

I am stating the facts in this case, and if you will get a copy of the bill and carefully read it you will see for yourselves that I am stating facts correctly. That is all I ask you to do. It includes everything except what is ordinarily commercial in its nature that the War Department wants to buy.

That is not all there is in this bill. It includes "essential accessories"—whatever that might mean—and parts thereof, and these expressions are to be taken separate and apart from munitions of war.

We see now what they are privileged to buy. Let us go on and see what else is provided. It is provided next that there shall be public notice so that business may bid. That is just throwing out a sop to somebody, because it is perfectly meaningless. What is the use of having bids when the bidder can not get the contract? And that is what the bill says. Somebody down in the War Department thinks that we are a lot of dumb-bells and are going to swallow this measure merely because it is labeled "educational order." What next is provided?

That the Secretary of War is authorized to place orders with such persons, firms, or corporations as shall, after consideration of all offers and of the circumstances, appear to him, in his discretion, best calculated to serve the interests of the Government—and promote the cause of national defense.

Some more bunk. What can he do? He can buy anything of the nature first described and pay any sort of price that he may elect to pay in his discretion. He is not going to buy, of course. We talk about the Secretary of War, when we know who is going to buy this stuff. We know that Army officers are going to buy it. Before I read further let me skip to the last part of the bill and see what are to be taken into consideration in these purchases:

and shall account for such other items and factors of cost as the Secretary of War may require, including direct labor, material, general expenses, and overhead.

There is no limit to the profit that may be made out of these orders. It is a bid thrown out to industry so that industry will get behind this big procurement-planning program of the War Department by which they propose, and there is legislation now for it, to have 35,000 Army officers to take care of the factories and fields and transportation companies of this country of ours. They have got some in them now, and in the last War Department appropriation bill they proposed additional officers of this kind in the Medical Corps.

Let us go further and see what else is involved in this bill. This bill also authorizes them to purchase and to put into the hands of manufacturing concerns, gauges, jigs, dies, and those things which are essential to the manufacture of certain classes of munitions. We have always provided for jigs and dies. We have over $25,000,000 worth of jigs and dies and gauges in the War Department now, used in the last war, which are catalogued and are ready for use at any time, and we gave them $25,000 more this year for jigs and dies than was provided for in the 1929 bill. There is only one thing that is left, then, according to their own arguments, and that is to "educate men" to do the work. When you say that, you have said all, even accepting their plans and their proposals. We have navy yards and arsenals in this country, and those arsenals and navy yards are now doing just one-third as much work as they did in 1914, and in 1914 they did one-twelfth of their maximum capacity. In other words, one thirty-sixth of the forces in the navy yards and arsenals to-day are supplying this country with sufficient ammunition to take care of all munitions, and so forth, which we use in practice in the Army and the civilian branches of the Army, and in addition to that we have enough ammunition in reserve now to last a million men one year.

If the word "educational" were left out of this bill, it would not get 25 votes in this House, and the word is absolutely meaningless.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT].

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, sometimes when I hear gentlemen speak in this House on matters concerning the national defense it seems as though they took a ghoulish satisfaction in opposing everything that is for the national defense, and they always seem to be predicating their remarks upon the idea that the War Department is engaged in some fell design to scuttle the finances of the country. As a matter of fact, this measure, in my judgment, has a very vital bearing on the whole subject of national defense. May I call to your mind, particularly to the minds of those who happened to be in the Army during the war, the condition that confronted us with regard to material and supplies required for war. You will remember that there was not an airplane or a bit of ordnance that was delivered upon the western front or used by our armies in battle before the armistice, and that it was not until the war was practically all over that this huge supply of material and munitions referred to here to-day was created or came into being. It is just to prevent a recurrence of that situation, to attempt to prevent that condition, that this measure is brought in. You will remember that in the national defense act Congress attempted to fix the responsibility somewhere for the assurance of adequate material in time of war, and reposed that responsibility upon the Assistant Secretary of War. Congress made him responsible for the assurance of adequate material for war. That has necessitated what is known as the industrial war plan, and the Assistant Secretary of War, under the Secretary of War, has been trying for the last seven years to develop a plan to obviate the condition which existed when we went into the last war, when we were absolutely helpless, so far as anything else but man power was concerned. It has been suggested here that the arsenals can be relied upon to supply us with munitions of war.

The arsenals can never supply us with more than about 1 to 10 per cent of the supplies we will require in war. Where are the other 90 per cent to come from? Manifestly from the industries of the country. One of the things that impressed those who came into the War Department shortly after the war was the vast supplies of munitions on hand, and then we realized that the facilities and appliances in the factories and industries that created that vast supply had been dissipated or been dismantled or, at all events, practically have ceased to exist. The problem presented was, how in case of another emergency can we secure in some reasonable time all these special munitions and appliances we must have, and which require a special knowledge and a long time to make?

How, I ask now, could we get into our stride again without beginning all over again? This measure is designed in a very reasonable and very practical way to enable the industries of this country to acquire the knowledge of what responsibility would rest upon them in time of emergency and of how to meet that responsibility. I say, gentlemen, we should not approach these matters from the standpoint of the frailties of human nature and predicate our action upon the idea that those in the War Department and other departments of the Government are apt to be faithless to their trust. I sometimes think, gentlemen, that our whole course is predicated more upon the idea that we are a dishonest, rather than an honest people. I hope the House will rise to the fine purpose of this measure, and not decide it upon the basis of the local interests of arsenals, but from the broadest standpoint of the national interest. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am opposed to this measure. It is not because I have any prejudice against the War Department. I am opposed to it because it is impracticable. If we are going to be practical—and we should be practical as legislators—we ought to require those in charge of the War Department in looking after our interests to be practical. If we are to maintain arsenals in this country and appropriate millions of dollars every year to maintain them, those arsenals ought to be the great educational institutions, the laboratories of the Army for the purpose of meeting these constant changes in munitions of war. Guns and airplanes built to-day become obsolete to-morrow. It should be the duty of the national factories in this country to keep up with the constant changes in these munitions of war. The arsenals should be so equipped as to keep constantly abreast of these changing conditions, making new patterns and having them at all times up to date, so that in the event of war, when we shall have to expand these other institutions, they may be supplied with these latest patterns and jigs and materials and other devices.

Why, when we got into the World War we talk about not having had time in which to prepare ourselves for the manufacture of munitions. The fact is that every factory in this country had been manufacturing munitions for more than two years before we got into the war for the Allies, notwithstanding this when we got into it we did not manufacture a shell of our own that was ever fired over there, I am told. There was something deficient then, and that should be a lasting lesson as to why we should keep these arsenals up to date. The War Department ought to be supplying them with information which they are supposed to obtain concerning the continual improvements in the science of war and the changes in the munitions of war.

Besides that, we are setting here a very dangerous precedent. If we are going to permit Army officers, in their discretion, to purchase these munitions of war, we will next be asked to give the naval officers discretion in the purchase of all the necessities for the Navy Department. Not long will it be, then, with this precedent before us, until every other branch of the Government will be asking that they have the same discretion. It is a very dangerous proposition.

This million dollars that is mentioned here, $1,000,000 for each of five years, is just the nose of the camel getting under the tent. It will cost, I dare say, $20,000,000, in addition to this million dollars that may be expended for the purchase of munitions, to purchase jigs and patterns that are proposed to be scattered all over this country. We should act practically upon this proposition, and if we are going to adopt this new scheme against the Treasury, the extent of which no one can calculate, we ought to shut up the doors of the arsenals. To adopt this scheme is to declare our arsenals have been a failure, and that we have been wasting our money in times past. The practical thing to do is to have these war officers give their expert knowledge to the arsenals which we are maintaining [applause], and then if war comes—and God forbid that it should come—we can depend upon that agency which we have created for the purpose to keep us in an up-to-date state of preparedness. [Applause.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 13 minutes.

Mr. MORIN. I yield three minutes to the lady from California [Mrs. KAHN].

The CHAIRMAN. The lady from California is recognized for three minutes.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I think the gentlemen who are so deeply interested in the arsenals are unduly alarmed. I am sure there is no disposition on the part of the War Department to curtail in any way the work being done by the arsenals. But in case of emergency, time is the great factor. No matter how desirous you are of expanding your arsenals, you simply can not do it in an emergency rapidly or efficiently enough to supply all the country will need. It would be a physical impossibility.

I think this bill is a real step in advance in our national defense. We are not making millionaires out of these manufacturers. We will divide $1,000,000 among them yearly for five years, so that in cases of emergency they will have the proper tools to adapt to their machinery in order to make certain articles of munitions. For example, we may give Dodge Bros. a contract or we may give the New Britain Tool Co. a contract. Why? So that in case of necessity we can shoot out to them the jigs, dies, and tools they have made and which are fitted for their machinery and which we have kept in our arsenals for just such an emergency. They will have their workmen, which they have trained, their organization, which they can expand, and they can go to work without loss of time. It is simply a matter of precaution, and $1,000,000 expended now will be worth $50,000,000 or $500,000,000 in case of emergency. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am sure the sponsors of this bill claim no originality in the idea. This scheme is not new. It has been tried and put into practice. Only a few days ago I read the statement made by the man who is the original author of this plan, and he says he rues the day that he originated it. The original author of this plan was General Ludendorff, the quartermaster general of the Imperial Army of Kaiser Wilhelm. It is Ludendorff's idea that you have written into this bill. The German plan contemplated the giving of so-called educational orders just as this bill provides under the control of the quartermaster general of the imperial army, so that every factory in Germany and every toy factory was convertible into a factory for the production of munitions.

Now, gentlemen, I do not in the least doubt the good faith of the War Department, but we must take human nature into consideration. We must apply the experience we acquire here every day. Just picture this bill three years from now. When the factory in New Britain has had its order, as suggested by the distinguished and charming lady from California, then the Dodge factory, as some one else suggested, then other orders will be given out, and then the gentleman from South Carolina will want an order for some one in his district. I can picture the stampede to get in every annual appropriation bill. So it will become the greatest log-rolling bill we have ever had. Why, talk about the rivers and harbors bill in the old days and talk about your public buildings omnibus bill, why they will be nothing in comparison with this bill. If you will think about those bills you will realize what you will be up against in this bill if enacted into law.

The statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is unanswerable. He is right at the helm; he is right in the Committee on Appropriations and he knows and speaks from experience. He knows the pressure that will be brought to bear. Then what are we going to do after we have these factories educated? After we have whetted their appetites they will say, "Give us orders," and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania will have to go out and look for a war to keep the factories busy. Anything for business. I believe in taking profits out of war. That is the tendency of the day. This bill is only an advance salesman to put more profits in war.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It has been said repeatedly that this is a matter of preparing for an emergency. Does the gentleman know why this bill, having been introduced on the 5th of December, 1927, is not brought to the floor of the House until the last week of the present Congress, when the rules are suspended?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows from his many years of experience in the House that it is the hope that in the confusion of the last days of the Congress you can get a bill like this through. It is hoped that when we are all occupied in trying to get our own bills through, when there is confusion, haste, hurry, and pressure something like this can squeeze through. I will say that when Ludendorff first applied it it was a very innocent looking thing, but the results we saw in 1914.

Now, gentlemen, it is not a matter of preparedness at all. There is no matter of emergency. To listen to some of the gentlemen, who are on the Committee on Military Affairs, you would think we were facing an emergency within 24 hours. I do not believe there is the slightest or remotest danger now of any emergency unless we go out and look for it, and it behooves us not to look for it. It seems to me that with our natural resources and holding the position we hold in the world to-day, we should assume leadership in the movement for world peace and not set a bad example by passing legislation like this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER].

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, if there had been a law like this enacted by the Congress several years before the declaration of war in 1917 and in force in our country, there would have been a very different story to tell.

Those that followed our country throughout the war all remember that we were ashamed of our shortage in military supplies; we had particularly an inadequate supply of airplanes, and throughout the war and not until the armistice, did we get in shape where we could ship airplanes or all the materials essential to the war in the quantities that were needed for the great army we had sent across the seas.

After the armistice was declared the question of the continuance of the airplane industry was a very vital one, but we saw day after day and year after year, since the war, that the airplane factories did not have customers and our own Army and Navy for a long time, too long, were using old, out-of-date airplanes which were dangerous to the fliers. We were not keeping alive the technical machinery or the technical laborers that are necessary. We became ashamed of our inadequacy in aviation.

There was developed a splendid spirit and the Congress greatly increased the appropriations to overcome this unfortunate situation. A 5-year program was established for the development of aviation for the Army, for the Navy, and for the Department of Commerce, with a generous gift from a millionaire to aid the Department of Commerce in its development of commercial aviation; also through offering prizes in the colleges of our country for inventions relating to aviation. But I want to say that even with this push by the Government with its millions of dollars of increased appropriations for an increased number of airplanes and increased forces in the services, I can not say how long it would have taken us to have filled the place we should have occupied in the world's history as a leader in aviation had it not been for the spectacular and daring flight of Colonel Lindbergh and the flights of others like Chamberlain and Byrd. Our country was thrilled and aviation has developed as it was never dreamed it would be developed in such a very short time.

To-day there are sections in our country where there are being built airplane factories in increasing numbers, sometimes as many as two during a month in order to supply the demand for planes both in this country and Europe.

There is not any hope that in respect to the demands of our Army for materials like the many kinds of guns, ammunition, clothes, shoes, and things of that kind, we will have a like thrill given so that we will get the technical machinery and the skilled men to do this sort of work so that the materials would be available in time of war.

Those who have talked with the men who were on the War Industries Board have heard them tell the story of the great trouble they had and the great distress they were in as to how they were going to get sufficient guns of the various types and how they were going to get a sufficient quantity of munitions. A particular case was as to how they were going to have manufactured new antiaircraft guns, a gun which had never before been manufactured. One of the members of the War Industries Board and an officer of the Army went to a manufacturer to get him to manufacture these machines in quantity production. He had a fine factory, but no machine that could make this particular gun. He was patriotic and wanted to do the work, but he did not even have the skilled men to manufacture them even if he had had the machinery. It took a long time to develop quantity production under such circumstances. It was found by experimentation and experience that these aircraft guns were not the kind they ought to have at all and the plans had to be entirely changed. After the war an entirely different type of aircraft gun was adopted. To manufacture this new gun there is needed special machinery and skilled labor.

How are we to accomplish this purpose? We can not rely on the arsenals like the one at Rock Island with the small group of men there. They could only produce a small percentage of the needs. The experience and the genius that brings out great inventions do not always come from those in the Government service. We must reach out into the private industries of the country, interesting them, so if we ever again have to have a declaration of war we can have them ready to supply the demand. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING].

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER] thinks if we had had this bill in effect for a few years before the war the result of the war might have been more favorable. The gentleman overlooks the fact that far more than mere educational contracts had been given by the allies to the private industry of this country for more than three years before we got into the war.

The trouble is simply this: In this day and age of rapid advance in mechanics and chemistry, warfare as well as every other kind of industrial activity is progressing with such rapidity that the educational contract given to-day is of little value a few years from now. You may build your jigs and your dies, but five years from to-day most of them will be obsolete. They will be stored away somewhere in some storehouse, an expense to the Government. If the armies that went upon the fields of France and Belgium at the beginning of the war, armed as they were, had met another army armed as the armies were armed at the close of the war, your first army would have been wiped out as completely as though they had been armed with bows and arrows.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. I only have three minutes.

The trouble with this whole problem is that this great Government of ours, which has to-day made a record for business administration, is asked now to turn its back upon a fundamental principle of American business. When you let go of competitive bidding, you have no place where you can stop short of discrimination and favoritism.

I was glad that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations rose to protest against this bill and all that it means. He has ably pointed out the waste of funds involved. Four years ago the same proposal was brought upon the floor, but it contained a proviso that these educational contracts could not be let in excess of 25 per cent of what the arsenals and shipyards could do the work for; in other words, 25 per cent over the actual cost; but to-day this bill contains no limitation at all, the sky is the limit, and any kind of a contract that the Secretary of War may see fit to give may be given at any kind of price that the industry may ask for it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the four remaining minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am very much interested in this bill, not alone because the largest arsenal in our country is located in my district, but to me the economic question enters into it. The business side of this bill appeals to me with even less force than the fact that we will abandon the arsenals and allocate the orders with private manufacturers.

We have got the arsenals, they have been here for a long while. You will pardon me if I refer to the Rock Island Arsenal, which is the largest one in the United States, located on an island of 1,000 acres in the Mississippi River. A large business was transacted there before the war and great orders were turned out during the war, and a steady work was maintained there prior to the war.

In the Rock Island Arsenal they could manufacture to-day if they had the orders, airplanes, locomotives, guns, equipment of all kinds that they use in the war. And yet scarcely an order is allocated to the Rock Island Arsenal; the men that are maintained there are without any question of the highest type of mechanics we have in our country. There remain there groups of men who have been employed in the Rock Island Arsenal for 20, 30, and 40 years. It is their life, and these people do not understand the policy of our Government in turning its back in the way of orders for that magnificent and well-equipped arsenal. There are over 15 miles of railroad on the island; millions invested in equipment that belongs to the Government. It is your arsenal, it does not belong to Rock Island, it belongs to the people of this great country.

Mr. UPDIKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. UPDIKE. How many people are employed in the Rock Island Arsenal?

Mr. ALLEN. About 500 now, before the war about 1,500.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I will.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Is it not true that they can manufacture war material at the arsenal cheaper than they can buy it elsewhere?

Mr. ALLEN. No doubt about that; they can manufacture airplanes to-day cheaper than they could be manufactured anywhere else. I think the name of this bill ought to be changed from an education bill to the incubator bill, starting war babies for the next war. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FORT].

Mr. FORT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill has been before Congress in substantially its present form for fully three years, having been originally introduced by the Member from Massachusetts, Mrs. ROGERS. And for much of that time I have been looking somewhat into the matter because of general interest in the subject. It is true that we have adequate arsenals to manufacture the munitions of war at present needed. On that, there is no dispute. It is also true, however, that the arsenals of the Government are run under Government operation, with no independent check whatever as to the efficiency of these operations as compared to like operations in the hands of private enterprise. If this bill which appropriates $1,000,000 a year as a maximum can produce for the Government of the United States cost sheets as is provided in the bill which will enable us to check the operations of the arsenals which are spending $20,000,000 a year for munitions, it will be well worth the entire cost.

Mr. LETTS Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORT. I yield.

Mr. LETTS. Is it not just as practical to have the cost sheets in the arsenal?

Mr. FORT. You then would have no comparison with what is done in the modern manufacturing establishments, which are developing the mass-production methods which American manufacturers have adopted generally, with a resulting efficiency such as has never been known in the world until within the last eight years. I say, as an abstract proposition, that the possible saving through improved efficiency in the arsenals would make well worth while the expenditure of $1,000,000 a year for five years as a check against the $20,000,000 a year the arsenals are now spending.

Mr. LETTS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORT. I am sorry; I have not the time. What are we going to get for this $1,000,000 a year? Suppose you take the General Motors Corporation with its $2,000,000,000 of business a year, or Henry Ford's tremendous industry, and place a $200,000 order with them for some type of gun carriage. Suppose we give Edison an educational order for a sounding device. What are we buying for that? The best brains in America for that kind of a job. We could not buy those brains for the whole million dollars a year in any way except as a patriotic service to the Nation. We are buying efficient, trained engineering and chemical staffs. We are buying the knowledge of alloys, we are buying the scientific knowledge of the staffs of those great enterprises, so that, if a war should come, those trained experts will know when they come to us in the emergency what they have found in their experimentation will improve the efficiency of our munitions and our other accessories. Take the item testified to in the hearings in respect to searchlights. Have we any men in the service of the Government or in our arsenals who have made the detailed, intensive study of the qualities of glass that have been made in our great glass plants?

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman ask that question for an answer?

Mr. FORT. Yes.

Mr. SWING. The indestructible glass was discovered and perfected out here at the Bureau of Standards by a United States expert.

Mr. FORT. I know that to be the fact, but we are not working as they are day after day in great glass factories in America, to perfect the carrying quality of the light ray through glass. We are not working in our arsenals or anywhere else, and we could not without enormously increasing our arsenal appropriations, to improve the ordinary pieces of metal, the ordinary pieces of glass. These great plants with these educational orders will give to the Government of the United States a benefit worth to it, in one single munition which it may have them make, more than it could buy for millions a year, or develop through its own experts, who are not doing that kind of work. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second sentence of the second paragraph of section 5a of the national defense act, approved June 4, 1920, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the period at the end of the sentence, inserting a colon and the following:

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KELLY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 450) to amend section 5a of the national defense act, approved June 4, 1920, providing for placing educational orders for equipment, etc., and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill H. R. 16714, making appropriations for the Navy Department and naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, for printing under the rules.

PAY CLERKS AND ACTING PAY CLERKS, UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, the House yesterday passed a bill (H. R. 14923) to amend the Navy appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, relative to the appointment of pay clerks and acting pay clerks, with an amendment. The effect of the amendment was to quote incorrectly the present statute. I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill was passed in order that the proper amendment may be inserted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Hawaii asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill H. R. 14923 was passed yesterday in order to make the correct amendment. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the correct amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii: Page 2, line 10, after the word "acting," strike out the words "or permanent."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT JUDGE, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1965) to authorize the appointment of a district judge for the northern district of Mississippi, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1965), which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a judge of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Mississippi, who shall reside in such district and whose compensation, duties, and powers shall be the same as now provided by law for other district judges.

SEC. 2. Upon the appointment of such judge, the present judge of the District Courts of the United States for the Northern and Southern Districts of Mississippi shall be the judge of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Mississippi. Such judge for the southern district of Mississippi shall reside in such district.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SCHAFER. I demand a second.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. I just want to get a bit of information. Has the Committee on the Judiciary, by unanimous vote, recommended favorable action on this bill?

Mr. GRAHAM. They have.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

MAKING THE UNITED STATES A PARTY DEFENDANT IN CERTAIN CASES

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13981) to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases and ask that it be agreed to. The conferees have reached a complete agreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 13981, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 13981 having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered one and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out section 4 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment and renumber sections, and the House agree to the same.

GEO. S. GRAHAM,
L. C. DYER,
HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Managers on the part of the House.
G. W. NORRIS,
T. J. WALSH,
C. W. WATERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 13981 submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

By the Senate amendment the United States consents to be made a party to all litigation either in the Federal or State courts to unfetter real estate from Government liens.

The conferees on the part of the House were satisfied that the Senate amendment would effectuate the objects of the House bill just as well as the provisions of the House bill itself, with one exception; that was the fourth section of the Senate amendment, which seemed to the conferees to impose an unusual and unnecessary delay upon the foreclosure and sale under the bill. The House conferees presented their objections to this paragraph, and the Senate agreed to recede.

GEO. S. GRAHAM,
L. C. DYER,
HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman ask unanimous consent to take up the conference report?

The SPEAKER. He called up the conference report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When was it filed?

Mr. GRAHAM. This morning. This is within the last 6-day limit, when under the rule conference reports need not be filed in advance.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

LOAD LINES FOR AMERICAN VESSELS

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine presents a conference report on the bill (S. 1781). Ordered printed under the rule.

The conference report and accompanying statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1781) to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, and 46, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the word "foreign," and at the end of line 8, page 1, change the period to a comma and insert the words "the Great Lakes excepted." and on page 2, at the end of line 3, change the period to a comma and insert the words "the Great Lakes excepted." and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 9. The Secretary of Commerce is directed to make a comprehensive study of load-line legislation in the coastwise and intercoastal trade and the Great Lakes, and all types of vessels, and shall submit his report to the Houses of Congress in the month of December, 1929, accompanying such report with tentative draft of a bill to effectuate the recommendations embodied in said report."

And the House agree to the same.

WALLACE H. WHITE, Jr.,
FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH,
A. M. FREE,
EWIN L. DAVIS,
S. O. BLAND,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. L. JONES,
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
JOS. E. RANSDELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 1781, "An act to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes," submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee:

Of the 46 amendments adopted by the House, the Senate has receded from its disagreement with respect to 44 and has agreed to the same.

On amendment No. 3 the Senate has receded from its disagreement and agreed to the same with an amendment. In the form in which the amendment now appears, section 1 of the bill applies only to vessels engaged in the foreign trade, those on the Great Lakes excepted. This change is effected by the restoration of the word "foreign," in line 8 of page 1, and by the addition of the words "the Great Lakes excepted," after the word "sea," in line 8, on page 1, and after the word "sea," in line 2, page 2.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the House No. 45, and agreed to the same with an amendment in the following terms:

"SEC. 9. The Secretary of Commerce is directed to make a comprehensive study of load-line legislation in the coastwise and intercoastal trade and the Great Lakes, and all types of vessels, and shall submit his report to the Houses of Congress in the month of December, 1929, accompanying such report with tentative draft of a bill to effectuate the recommendations embodied in said report."

The House conferees have agreed to this change. They did so only when convinced that the retention of section 9 in the form in which it was passed by the House meant that no load-line legislation would be adopted at this Congress. The House conferees were satisfied beyond a doubt that its alternatives were to secure a load line law for vessels in our foreign trade only or no legislation. They felt it their duty to save of this legislation what they could. As evidence of the attitude of the House conferees and of the views of the Senate conferees the following vote was adopted unanimously by the conferees:

"On motion, voted that it is the sense of the conferees on the part of the Senate and of the House that load-line legislation should be made applicable to all vessels of the United States of over 250 tons, including those operating in the foreign trade, making a voyage by sea in the coastwise and intercoastal trade or on the Great Lakes; that the conferees have agreed to a report applying the load line only to vessels engaged in the foreign trade because of the parliamentary situation and the apparent impossibility of procuring more comprehensive legislation during the present Congress; and that the conferees advise that they will support and undertake to procure the passage of legislation in the next Congress applying load lines to all of the classes of vessels above enumerated."

ARTHUR M. FREE,
EWIN L. DAVIS,

Managers on the part of the House.

AMENDMENT OF THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a privileged report from the Committee on Rules. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 343

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of (S. 2901) an act to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the act and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the act, the act shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the act for amendment the committee shall rise and report the act to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the act and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, in answer to several inquiries, I expect to call that up to-morrow.

JOINT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE RESPECTING THE RANK AND PAY OF THE ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, COAST GUARD, COAST SURVEY, AND PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

I present another privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents another privileged report from the Committee on Rules. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 430

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 430) for the appointment of a joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to investigate the rank, promotion, pay, and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service.

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee, to be composed of five Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the Vice President, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, shall make an investigation and report recommendations by bill or otherwise to their respective Houses, relative to the rank, promotion, pay, and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the several services mentioned in the title of this joint resolution.

JOINT COMMITTEE TO COOPERATE WITH THE NEW BERN HISTORICAL SOCIETY, NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents another privileged report from the Committee on Rules. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 60

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate be authorized to appoint three Senators and the Speaker of the House to appoint three Members of the House of Representatives to cooperate with the New Bern Historical Society and a committee of the North Carolina Legislature in the observance of certain historical events which occurred during the Colonial and Revolutionary period at New Bern, N. C.

EDITH BOLLING WILSON

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill 4276 be taken from the Speaker's table and passed under suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman to move to suspend the rules. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is a bill to grant a pension to Edith Bolling Wilson. It was unanimously reported by the committee. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4276) granting a pension to Edith Bolling Wilson

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Edith Bolling Wilson, widow of Woodrow Wilson, late President of the United States, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $5,000 per year from and after the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] to act as Speaker pro tempore this evening.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a letter I have received in connection with my campaign to rejuvenate the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and also a poem accompanying the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter and a poem. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with my campaign to rejuvenate the RECORD, I received the following letter-poem, which I include under permission granted me to extend my remarks, as follows:

TAKOMA PARK, MD., February 26, 1929.

Congressman BOYLAN,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: With pleasure, commensurate with the timeliness of the resolution offered by yourself in the House of Representatives on February 22, I have read your able and urgent appeal, looking to the revision, beautification, and improvement, otherwise, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so as to widen its distribution, broaden its influence, and deepen its effectiveness upon the American mind.

With one particular end in view, a by-product of your own great aim—one which I prefer especially to stress—I am enclosing a series of related verses, entitled "Poet Laureate of America," trusting that you may see fit to have them printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or, better still, have them read on the floor of the House, if you feel so disposed.

In addition to the daily doings of Congress, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should carry daily the pictures of the President and his cabinet officials, the justices of the Supreme Court, and the Members of both Houses of Congress—most of whom multiplied millions of the American people have never seen—and, as suggested in your resolution, it might be made yet more interesting, and thereby more instructive, by the daily creations of the best cartoonist to be had, and by the adoption of other modern accessions which have made the newspapers of to-day the greatest and most far-reaching educators in all the world.

Respectfully,

HORACE C. CARLISLE.

POET LAUREATE OF AMERICA

By Horace C. Carlisle

Everybody who reads the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD
Reads the widest-read daily, perhaps, in the world,
For it carries, verbatim, the doings of Congress
Wheresoever the Stars and the Stripes are unfurled—
And it ought to be read by a sovereign people
In whom all the great powers of sovereignty dwell—
For Americans justly have boasted their freedom
Ever since independence rang liberty's bell.

But from that day to this there has one thing been lacking—
With the volumes of poems that have sung her renown
As a nation, our Congress has chosen no poet
Yet to wear the unworn poet laureate's crown.
On its blank cover page, now subserving no purpose,
The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD might carry each day
A short poem, effervescing with dynamic power,
To America's heart in a national way.

What a great opportunity for a real service!
Like Niagara's waters, now running to waste!
On this now wasted page a nonpartisan poem
Of American interest ought to be placed.
Who can say that this page was not left for this purpose,
In accord with the infinite's unquestioned plan,
Until He, in His wisdom, could properly fashion
For this wonderful service a suitable man?

This poetical page should give daily a picture
Of some pertinent phase of American life,
And help crystalize sentiment throughout the country,
In these days of distrust and distraction and strife.
It should soften the hearts of divergency's factions,
In the North and the South and the East and the West,
And should seek a solution to national problems—
And point up, past the better, always toward the best.

And when death calls a man from the House or the Senate,
Or from any high office of national trust,
This poetical page, in appropriate sweetness,
As it sadly commends his dead form to its dust,
Might express the great heart of a sorrowing people,
As they inwardly weep o'er their visible loss,
And remind a wide world that the man or the woman
Who would win a real crown must first bear a real cross.

May we hope that, some day, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD
Will of this wasted page make a real beauty spot,
Where the roses of truth and the laurels of honor
May engender a fragrance that can't be forgot—
And reflect, in poetical beauty and splendor,
'Neath the stars and the stripes of Old Glory unfurled,
Our American life, in its manifold fullness,
To the multiplied millions all over the world.

STATE TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bank-tax question.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, there having been so many inquiries during the past sessions of Congress relative to the question of amending the law effecting the State taxation of national banks, in view of the fact that there can now be no action by Congress at this session I deem it advisable to give expression to my own personal views on this important subject.

The bills H. R. 8727 and H. R. 14001 would permit the State taxation of national-bank shares at no "greater rate than that assessed within the taxing district of the bank's location upon real estate used for mercantile or like business purposes," nor higher than is assessed upon shares of corporations engaged in the business of receiving deposits subject to check or the capital of individuals likewise employed in that business.

From the very inception of the permission by Congress to the States to tax national bank shares and in making subsequent amendments thereto, Congress has recognized the fact that to allow a tax classification of national bank shares with only a very limited part of the moneyed capital competing with banks would not safeguard the national banks against excessive taxation by the States.

It is well known that there is a vast amount of moneyed capital competing with banks outside of that employed in the business of receiving deposits subject to check. Under the proposed legislation it is alleged that such moneyed capital could be favored and national banks discriminated against.

The Comptroller of the Currency, in his 1928 annual report to Congress, says of this pending legislation "that I feel it my duty to call the matter to the attention of the Congress and recommend that none of these bills be enacted into law." The report further states:

> It is contended by the State tax authorities interested in the passage of such bills that since the States would not impose an undue burden of taxation on their own State banks that national banks would be amply protected. While the State tax authorities are undoubtedly sincere in their contentions, the fact remains that under such bills the States would have the right to place an undue burden upon national banks and upon their own banks to such an extent as would make banking unprofitable or at least burdensome, which in the last analysis is the right to destroy a Federal instrumentality.

It is not merely a question of what the States might do, if unchecked, to national and State banks alike. It is a matter of history that present attempts have been made to discriminate against banks and in favor of moneyed capital in the hands of individuals used in active competition with the banks. In the many cases which have come before the courts it has been proved to the satisfaction of the courts that the States, by discriminatory taxation, have allowed individuals, finance companies, and other groups engaged in the lending of money to escape with taxes from one-half to one-tenth of the tax imposed upon banks. If the national banking system is to survive, it must have more substantial protection than the mistaken supposition that the States will be concerned for its welfare.

In 1923 and 1926 amendments to section 5219 provide for four exclusive alternative methods for the State taxation of national banks, as follows:

(1) Taxation of the shares, but at no "greater rate than is assessed upon moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State coming into competition with the business of national banks."

(2) Taxation of the dividends or their inclusion in the taxable income of an owner or holder, but not at a greater rate than is assessed upon the net income from other moneyed capital.

(3) Taxation of the net taxable income of the banks themselves, but at no greater rate than provided in (4).

(4) Taxation of the banks themselves, "according to or measured by their net income," from all sources, "but the rate shall not be higher than the rate assessed upon other financial corporations nor higher than the highest of the rates assessed by the taxing State upon mercantile, manufacturing, and business corporations doing business within its limits."

Practical application of the above alternative methods has been satisfactorily demonstrated.

Those States adhering to the general property tax apply the share-tax method, as they have been doing for over 60 years. Low rate intangible-tax States can, as Pennsylvania has done for over 40 years, tax national-bank shares at the same rate as other intangibles or else adopt the net-income methods under the third and fourth alternatives. Wisconsin is taxing its banks under the net-income tax, the third alternative. Massachusetts and New York have adopted the fourth alternative and tax their banks "according to or measured by" their net income from all sources. California, under a recent constitutional amendment, will also presently follow Massachusetts and New York.

Under the fourth alternative method which is in effect an excise tax, any State, regardless of its present system of taxation, may tax its national banks directly upon net income from all sources, providing only that the rate—i. e., the tax burden—shall not be higher than the rate—i. e., the tax burden—assessed upon other financial corporations—which includes State banks—nor higher than the highest of the rates—i. e., the tax burden—assessed by the taxing State upon mercantile, manufacturing, and business corporations.

In the face of the plain duty of Congress to safeguard the national banks against discrimination in taxation, the bars of protection as now established under section 5219 can not, in the opinions heretofore expressed and made of record, be lowered. The States are afforded the fullest opportunity to tax national banks fairly, and it is for State legislatures to mold their bank tax laws according to the general rules prescribed by Congress which, of necessity, must consider the subject from the broad standpoint of the Federal Government and of all the States. It is manifestly impossible to vary a national standard in order to meet the peculiarities of a few State taxing systems. Taking the country as a whole, the earnings of national banks do not warrant permission to States to tax them at a greater rate than they tax the same kind of property as that in which national banks employ their funds nor more than they impose upon financial, mercantile, manufacturing, and business corporations.

R. H. KING

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1766) for the relief of R. H. King.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROWBOTTOM. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state to the gentleman that this bill was reported from the Claims Committee, of which he is a member, by a unanimous vote. I was chairman of the subcommittee that reported the bill. It appears from the report of the Post Office Department that this postmaster thought there was something wrong in the accounts of his office and requested an investigation by post-office inspectors. The inspectors did not make the visit until some time after the request, and then it was found that the assistant postmaster was spending more money than he was making, and after a thorough investigation, upon the recommendation of the postal inspectors, the assistant postmaster was discharged. I think it is a very meritorious bill. It received careful and serious consideration by the Claims Committee before it was reported out by a unanimous vote.

Mr. ROWBOTTOM. The Postmaster General states that this postmaster was very lax in the handling of his office.

Mr. SCHAFER. I hope that the gentleman will carefully study the entire report of the Postmaster General, where he will find a statement of all the facts in the case, and if the gentleman will read the report in full I am sure he will find that the bill is meritorious.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, here is a chance where we have an opportunity to override the opinion of a department officer.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I do not think you override him entirely. This is simply a case where a postmaster is required to take such employees as are furnished to him by the Government and has suffered by the action of those employees.

Mr. O'CONNELL. That is just the situation. They have got to take anybody who is sent to them and be responsible for what they do.

Mr. SCHAFER. I would state to the gentleman that this postmaster has made good every penny of the bond. He borrowed up to the limit on his life insurance to do so. The record indicates that he did not embezzle this money.

Mr. ROWBOTTOM. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements that have been made, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is withdrawn. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to R. H. King, of Alvin, Tex., former postmaster at that place, $2,283.28, the amount paid by him to the Government of the United States on account of defalcation in the post office at Alvin while he was postmaster, said defalcation having occurred without fault or negligence on his part.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ALICE SARRAZIN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5950) for the relief of Alice Sarrazin.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Alice Sarrazin, mother of Jules A. Sarrazin, late of Company K, Sixth United States Infantry, Fort McPherson, Ga., shall be regarded as the duly designated beneficiary of the late Jules A. Sarrazin under the act approved May 11, 1908, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1909.

With a committee amendment as follows:

In line 5, after the word "beneficiary," insert the words "and dependent"; and on line 7, after the word "approved," strike out "May 11, 1908, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1909," and insert "December 17, 1919 (41 Stat. 367)."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PAUL WALLERSTEIN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3675) for the relief of Paul Wallerstein.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. UPDIKE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what does this bill do?

Mr. SCHAFER. This bill makes the discharge of a Civil War veteran honorable. It appears from the record of the War Department that he deserted while on furlough about February 28, 1865, and reenlisted nine days later, on March 9, 1865, and served until he was honorably discharged from that enlistment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws, Paul Wallerstein, who was formerly a private in Company D, Seventy-fifth Regiment, and Company K, Forty-sixth Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said companies and regiments on July 28, 1865.

With a committee amendment as follows:

At the end of line 9 insert: "Provided, That no pension, bounty, pay, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

W. L. INABNIT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9530) for the relief of W. L. Inabnit.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon its compensation roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the compensation laws of employees of the United States, the name of W. L. Inabnit, former employee of the United States, and pay him compensation at the rate of $66.67 per month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LEO BYRNE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14850) authorizing and directing the United States Employees' Compensation Commission to pay Leo Byrne at the rate of $100 a month, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Leo Byrne, on account of the results of injuries received while on duty with the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, at Camp Knox, Ky., on July 21, 1927, the sum of $100 per month, payments to start from the date of the accident, July 21, 1927.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Leo Byrne, on account of injuries sustained July 21, 1927, while in the performance of his duty as a student of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, University of Missouri, Ky., the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 6, 1916, as amended by the act of February 12, 1927."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Leo Byrne."

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. On page 2, line 10, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:

Pay and allowances not to exceed $150 per month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IRWIN to the committee amendment: On page 2, line 10, strike out the period, insert a colon and add the following: "Pay and allowances not to exceed $150 per month."

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I think the amount should be $117 instead of $150.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The pay of the Employees' Compensation Commission is based on two-thirds of the salary.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The pay of the Employees' Compensation Commission in no case exceeds $117 per month.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. This pay and allowances amendment is necessary according to the legal department of the Compensation Commission. They must have some figure upon which to base the allowance and as it is intended to grant this young man a reasonable amount it was agreed that if an amendment was offered in this form it would enable the commission to carry out the intent of Congress. The bill in the form it was reported would not have brought the desired result, the Compensation Commission holding it could not pay any compensation. The bill in its original form as I introduced it was worded properly. This young college boy injured in a training camp spent 1 year and 6 months in Walter Reed Hospital. I visited him at every opportunity. He was sent home just before Christmas, the doctors stating nothing further could be done for him.

The mother of this young man came to Washington from St. Louis and remained here for over a year so she could be near her disabled son. At his home he is under the care of a private specialist. Added to this expense is the cost of surgical dressings which amount to over $1 a day.

Unfortunately there is no general law under which he would have title to recognition, but recently, due to this case and several others, the Secretary of War recommended the passage of a bill placing students injured in training camps on the rolls of the Compensation Commission. The recommendation came too late for consideration at this session but I desire to express the hope it will be speedily enacted in the next Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ELIZABETH ROBINS PENNELL

The next business on the Private Calendar was House Joint Resolution 33, to relieve Elizabeth Robins Pennell from necessity of providing a surety on her bond for the benefit of the United States as residuary legatee and remainderman under the will of Joseph Pennell.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate Joint Resolution 58, an identical resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the Clerk will report the Senate resolution.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows;

Resolved, etc., That the United States of America hereby waives any claim for security from the said Elizabeth Robins Pennell other than her own bond, for its benefit as residuary legatee and remainderman under the will of the said Joseph Pennell, and it is declared to be the opinion of Congress that such personal bond without surety would, if approved by the orphans' court, of Philadelphia County, adequately secure the interests of the United States under section 23 of the fiduciaries act of Pennsylvania.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House joint resolution was laid on the table.

BEY MARIO AROSEMENA

The next business on the Private Calendar was House Joint Resolution 373, authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Bey Mario Arosemena, a citizen of Panama.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit Bey Mario Arosemena to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that Bey Mario Arosemena shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the courses in the various departments of instruction, and that said Bey Mario Arosemena shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or in conduct and so recommended by the academic board: And provided further, That in the case of said Bey Mario Arosemena the provisions of section 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

FELIX COLE

him arising out of the performance of his duties in the American Consular Service.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,414.37 to Felix Cole, consul of the United States of America, formerly stationed at Petrograd and Archangel, Russia, as reimbursement for losses by theft, pilferage, or confiscation of personal effects stored at Petrograd, Russia, due to his hurried departure from that city under orders in 1917; and for his personal effects stolen from a railroad car between Harbin, China, and Vladivostok, Russia, in 1920; and for the expenses of travel of his wife and child to the United States from Russia, which expenses were refused payment on technical grounds by the Comptroller of the Treasury; all said losses and expenses having arisen during and out of his performance of duty in the American Consular Service.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 5, strike out the sign and figures "$7,414.37" and insert in lieu thereof the sign and figures "$4,691.10."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CAPT. WILLIAM CASSIDY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14975) for the relief of Capt. William Cassidy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of Capt. William Cassidy, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, in the sum of $4,740.39 on account of stoppage of pay as the result of the loss of public funds due to financial irregularities and frauds against the Government, in the handling of public funds by a civilian employee of the Quartermaster Corps at Camp Custer, Mich., during the period from April, 1924, to October, 1927, for part of which Captain Cassidy has been held responsible, and to certify the same to Congress for an appropriation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SAGINAW & MANISTEE LUMBER CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12198) to authorize the exchange of timber with the Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant to the Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co. timber from national forest lands in Arizona, to be cut and removed under such conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture may require, in exchange for timber or seed trees of at least equal value, as determined by the said Secretary, on lands of the United States on which the said company has timber rights under the act of April 1, 1918 (40 Stat. 1358).

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SAMUEL HOOPER LANE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14765) for the relief of Samuel Hooper Lane, alias Samuel Foot.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Samuel Hooper Lane, alias Samuel Foot, shall be hereafter held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a teamster of Company F, Fourteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, on July 19, 1862, and as a private of Battery I, Fifth Regiment United States Artillery, on July 20, 1865: Provided, That no pension, back pay, or back allowances shall be held to have accrued by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

KATHERINE ELIZABETH KERRIGAN CALLAGHAN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16666) for the relief of Katherine Elizabeth Kerrigan Callaghan.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that there is no evidence whatsoever submitted in this report to show that this man came to his death through any fault of the Government.

It is true that some years previous to his death he was knocked down and slightly injured by a truck that was owned by the United States Government. He was taken to his home, stated he was all right, and long, long afterwards he put in a claim. This claim has been heretofore on two occasions to my knowledge before the Committee on Claims and has been turned down. If the House chooses to pay a gratuity of $750 to this man, I am not going to stop it by objecting to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Katherine Elizabeth Kerrigan Callaghan, widow of John Callaghan, of Alexandria, La., the sum of $750. Such sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States on account of the death through injuries sustained by the said John Callaghan as a result of being run over on June 9, 1922, by a Government-owned ambulance attached to United States Veterans' Hospital No. 27, and operated by an employee of the hospital, through the carelessness and negligence of the driver of the ambulance.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "ambulance," insert:

"Provided, That no part of the amount of any item appropriated in this act in excess of $50 thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum which exceeds $50 of the amount of any item appropriated in this act on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider in lieu of the House bill the Senate bill (S. 5058), a similar bill.

Mr. ROWBOTTOM. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if that is an identical bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George A. Hormel & Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $44 in full satisfaction of said company's claim for excess amount paid by it to the Department of Agriculture for transcript of testimony in docket No. 269, Secretary of Agriculture v. George A. Hormel & Co. and Rath Packing Co.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

GALLUP UNDERTAKING CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4890) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the Gallup Undertaking Co. for burial of four Navajo Indians.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, how does a bill like this come before the House? Why does the United States have to bury these Indians?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNELL. Reserving the right to object, I would like to get some explanation from the committee.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who introduced the bill not being present, I do not think it is incumbent upon me to defend it.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Since the committee passed it, I will withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $120 to the Gallup Undertaking Co., or as much thereof as is necessary, in full and final settlement for the burial of four Navajo Indians, to wit: Mary Uxhi, John Short, an unknown Navajo Indian woman, and Hasteen E. Bai (Kinticini), in the State of New Mexico during the fiscal year 1926.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill seems to authorize a credit in the accounts of a certain naval officer.

I am not going to object to these bills, but I think the House is entitled, when a committee reports legislation of this kind, to have the comptroller's opinion touching all of these reports. In the reports on the next seven or eight bills there is no statement at all from the Comptroller General, who in every case has disallowed the claim. So we are taking it on the faith of the committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Did the comptroller submit a report to the committee?

Mr. WARREN. I do not know.

An act (S. 4811) for the relief of C. J. Colville

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle in an amount not exceeding $4,867.91, the claim of C. J. Colville arising out of an agreement to purchase in 1920 certain steel, and which sale was not consummated because of a misunderstanding as to the quality of the steel. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $4,867.91 for the full and final payment and discharge of any and all claims arising out of the transaction.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get some information in regard to this bill from some member of the committee. It has no apparent author.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I doubt, Mr. Speaker, if any member of the committee knows anything about it. I will read from the report—that the Comptroller General has stated that the claimant has an equitable right to the money. Now, Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to question the Comptroller General when he gives out any money or recommends the payment of money to anybody. [Laughter.]

ESTATE OF C. C. SPILLER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11339) for the relief of the estate of C. C. Spiller, deceased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we ought to have some explanation about this bill.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I think I can give some explanation. C. C. Spiller was a part owner of a vessel called Paint Rock, down on the Cumberland River in Tennessee during the time of the Civil War.

I want to state to the gentleman—and I will be very brief about this—that in the beginning of the Civil War C. C. Spiller was in the Confederate Army. How he came to be in the Confederate Army is not wholly explained; but, as you know, in the War Claims Committee and in the Court of Claims loyalty is a prerequisite in allowing claims of this sort. He was in the Confederate service for a few months, but it is claimed by those who knew him down there that he was forced into that service. However that may be, the fact remains that after he had been in the Confederate service for a few months he got into the Federal service, in a semimilitary capacity, piloting this steamboat on the Cumberland River. He was with the Federal Government from 1862, I believe, to the close of the war, conducting this steamboat along the river, where he was fired upon on several different occasions while piloting Federal troops on the river.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I believe the gentleman, and I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that the committee report conclusively shows that this man served as a captain in the Confederate Army and did not render service to the Union Army at all during the Civil War?

Mr. HOOPER. I have just been trying in a voluble and vehement way to tell the gentleman from New York (Mr. O'CONNELL) all about that.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman from Michigan did not give the gentleman from New York any reason why we should pass this bill.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I would state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that——

Mr. SCHAFER. I will tell the gentleman from New York that I have the floor and have not yielded to him.

Mr. HOOPER. This man was in the Confederate service for a brief time. Later on, whatever the circumstances may have been, he took the oath of allegiance to the United States, and from that time, according to a mass of testimony taken in the matter, he was loyal to the United States. He was not only loyal to the United States but his life was in peril on several occasions when piloting Federal soldiers back and forth on the Cumberland River. His boat was destroyed by Confederate troops in the Cumberland River. The court in its early findings, during the early part of the war or shortly after the war was of opinion that he was not loyal, but later on he was considered as loyal, and the records prove it.

Mr. SCHAFER. The record shows that he was operating this boat in a semimilitary way. This bill does not cover any payment for corn or hay or things like that that were included in the original claim?

Mr. HOOPER. No. This applies only to the losses of his interest in the steamboat.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of C. C. Spiller, deceased, late of Hamilton County, Tenn., the sum of $8,000, found to be due him by the Court of Claims, in congressional case No. 10549, as appears by Senate Document No. 173, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, being his share of the reasonable charter value, together with the destruction thereof, of a small steamboat known as the Paint Rock, taken and used by the United States, and while in their possession accidentally destroyed and never paid for, all while the said C. C. Spiller, deceased, was a loyal citizen of the United States, as evidenced by the findings or report, dated June 27, 1864, of a board of claims designated by the commanding officer of the Department of the Cumberland, by Special Field Order No. 104, dated April 12, 1864, still of record in the War Department.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate bill, S. 5787, be substituted for this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it at the desk?

Mr. HOOPER. It is not on the calendar, but it is identical with this bill. It passed the Senate and is identical with this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We have no record of it here.

Mr. HOOPER. I suggest that the bill be withheld temporarily, and then we can pass the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Senate bill is not here.

Mr. HOOPER. Can not this bill be passed over temporarily? I will ask unanimous consent later to return to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I think we shall have to pass this bill, and the gentleman can take it up again if he so desires.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the line selection board of the Navy, as provided by United States Code, title 34, section 292, in its consideration of the officers eligible for consideration for selection for promotion to the grade of rear admiral may base its recommendation in the case of Capt. Walter R. Gherardi upon his comparative fitness for the shore duties of the grade of rear admiral: Provided, That in the event of his selection and subsequent promotion he shall be carried as an additional number in grade.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOMER N. HORINE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9515) for the relief of Homer N. Horine.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAWLEY). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Homer N. Horine, who was a member of Company G, Fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a sergeant of that organization on the 1st day of November, 1898.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "shall hereafter be held and considered to have become a member of Company G, Fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, on the 11th day of July, 1898, and."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WARREN: Place a semicolon after the figure "1898," at the end of the bill, and add the following: "Provided, That no back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WILLIAM P. FLOOD

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13288) to authorize a cash award to William P. Flood for beneficial suggestions resulting in improvement in naval material.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill or some member of the committee who is going to fix the cash award to Mr. Flood under the proposed legislation.

Mr. SCHAFER. I am not a member of the committee and I am not the author of the bill, but I can state that the Secretary of the Navy will fix the amount, and this bill has the approval of the Secretary of the Navy and the approval of the Director of the Budget.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Is this the ordinary process of legislation?

Mr. SCHAFER. It is the ordinary process for taking care of these cases.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Under the statute?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes; and this bill has the approval of the Director of the Budget and the Secretary of the Navy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may have prescribed for a like procedure under the act of Congress approved July 1, 1918 (vol. 40, Stat. L. p. 718), to pay a cash reward to William P. Flood for such designs, inventions, or suggestions as he may have made during his employ in the governmental service which resulted in an improvement in naval material or an economy in manufacturing processes: Provided, That such sum as may be awarded to him under this authority shall be paid out of current naval appropriations in addition to his retirement pay or allowances: Provided further, That no award shall be paid under this act until the said William P. Flood has properly executed an agreement to the effect that the use by the United States of the designs, inventions, or suggestions made by him shall not form the basis of a further claim of any nature against the United States by him, his heirs, or assigns.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LIEUT. ARTHUR W. BABCOCK

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16891) for the relief of Lieut. Arthur W. Babcock, Supply Corps, United States Navy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Lieut. Arthur W. Babcock, Supply Corps, United States Navy, in the amount of $402, which sum represents payments made to Willie Perry Conway, aviation chief machinist's mate, Fleet Naval Reserve, for retainer pay during the period from July 1, 1927, to December 31, 1927, disallowed by the Comptroller General in Statement of Differences K–25607–N dated April 28, 1928.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LIEUT. ARCHY W. BARNES

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16899) for the relief of Lieut. Archy W. Barnes, Supply Corps, United States Navy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Lieut. Archy W. Barnes, Supply Corps, United States Navy, in the amount of $804, which sum represents payments made to Willie Perry Conway, aviation chief machinist's mate, Fleet Naval Reserve, for retainer pay during the period from July 1, 1926, to June 30, 1927, disallowed by the Comptroller General in statement of differences K–30398–N dated July 31, 1928.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JAMES L. M'CULLOCH

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4604) for the relief of James L. McCulloch.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized and directed to recognize as valid the assignments of military bounty land warrant No. 61756 for 160 acres, issued June 19, 1849, under the act of February 11, 1847 (9 Stat. 123), to John Barman, notwithstanding the provisions of section 9 of said act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOMER ELMER COX

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10611) for the relief of Homer Elmer Cox.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed $147.73, to reimburse Coxswain Homer Elmer Cox, United States Navy, for losses of clothing and other personal effects sustained by him when the U. S. S. San Diego was sunk off Fire Island Light on July 19, 1918: Provided, That such reimbursement shall be made under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and upon vouchers to be approved by him.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 5, after the word "reimburse," insert the word "former."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEONARD T. NEWTON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15489) for the relief of Leonard T. Newton, pharmacist mate, first class, United States Navy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $485 to Leonard T. Newton, pharmacist mate, first class, United States Navy, which sum was deposited by the said Leonard T. Newton while he was serving on the U. S. S. Henderson, for safekeeping with a pay clerk of said vessel, who subsequently absconded with said funds and deserted from the naval service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTATE OF JAMES GLOVER, DECEASED

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9119) for the relief of the estate of James Glover, deceased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to get some information on this bill. This is a lot of money, $25,000, for a Civil War claim.

Mr. HOOPER. I realize, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman has said, that this seems to be a pretty large sum of money. The committee has cut down the sum very largely from what was originally claimed; but I would ask the gentleman to remember that even if these claims seem large—and they always seem old, of course, because they are survivals of the Civil War or of that period—nevertheless I think that this claim is a just one.

In 1857 a citizen of Pennsylvania and two of his sons went down to Louisiana and established a grist mill in that State. The father came home to Pennsylvania and saw nothing more of his sons for three or four years. One of the sons was taken prisoner, as a loyalist to the United States, by the Confederate soldiers. The other one escaped into the swamps, and later on came back into the neighborhood where the grist mill was and was captured and put in prison.

This grist mill is inventoried very carefully in the information which we have had before us. The grist mill was taken first by Confederate troops, and then—as I recall the evidence in the case—was seized and burned by Union troops in order to prevent it from falling into the hands of the Confederates operating in that vicinity.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOPER. Certainly.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Where has the claim been since it was originally incurred?

Mr. HOOPER. The claim has never been through the Court of Claims.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Where has it been all this time?

Mr. HOOPER. The claim has been pigeonholed in the committees.

Mr. UNDERHILL. What has become of the policy of the War Claims Committee with reference to these Civil War cases? The committee did adopt the policy at one time in this House of refusing to go back to these cases, but this is the second or third one that has been brought out here to-night.

Mr. HOOPER. I will answer the gentleman's question, and very gladly. The War Claims Committee did have for a good many years a policy that no claim growing out of the Civil War should be considered in this Congress. Four years ago when I came here, with other new men coming in, some of us thought that it was not just for the United States Government, as strong and rich and powerful as it is, to have old, unpaid, and unliquidated claims kicking around here year after year and never to dispose of them. The gentleman may object, but I am going to get this out of my system. Finally we came to the conclusion that if a plain majority of the committee, whether Republican or Democrat, southern or northern, favored it we would take up these claims. We have done it and the committee has considered those claims as carefully as we can. We have passed out only just and honest claims.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he approves of this change of policy?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Three years ago the War Claims Committee was attacked on the floor of the House by half a dozen Members, and after that the Senate began the policy of attaching to bills from the War Claims Committee bills rising from the Civil War, and to meet the attempt of Senators and Members we thought we would, by a majority vote, send these bills to a subcommittee for consideration.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Are you going back to the War of 1812 and the Revolution?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. We had a bill reported out of our committee for the War of 1812.

Mr. HOOPER. Will gentlemen allow me one more statement: I do not know whether it is a proper policy or not, but I have been one of those, and there are many others, who feel that if there is no statute of limitations running against the Government, the Government ought not to continue, even after the lapse of years, to neglect to do justice to people having these honest claims.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Up to the third generation.

Mr. HOOPER. I realize that we have claims going back to the War of the Revolution, but the mere lapse of time does not make an honest claim bad.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I want to say that I have the profoundest respect for the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Claims, with whom I served for many years, and if the bill gets by him it must be pretty nearly right.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think it is time that the House put a stop to going back three and four and five generations on claims that have been refused heretofore by Congress after Congress. We are getting into a liberal mood, and we are giving away from the Public Treasury funds that are raised by taxation to people who have really no more claim in justice to the amounts awarded than I have.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I would like to say that this bill has not been rejected by Congress, and is not an unjust claim. It is a just claim.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The House has time and again determined against the French spoliation claims, so much so, that it has not considered them, and those claims have the prestige of having been reported out of the Court of Claims.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas how proof can be had of these old claims?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. They come from affidavits of people who claim to know the facts. I want to say that this claim was sent to the subcommittee by a majority of the committee.

The subcommittee holds hearings, listens to the proof, and makes a report, and then the bills are passed only by a majority of the full committee. In every case these bills have been reported out by a unanimous vote.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With all that, I will say that none of these claims dating away back to 1860 and prior thereto can be justified in law, in equity, in morals, in logic, or in common sense.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And if I have left out anything else, I shall be glad to put it in later.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I suggest that he say that they are incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on War Claims, if there are any lawyers' fees connected with this that he knows of?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Not in this case at all.

Mr. UNDERHILL. If this case goes through, you will have a whole lot of them brought here that have been dug up by lawyers.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. We have passed a good many Civil War claims at this session of Congress.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would not brag about it.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do brag about it, because I take the position that if the Government owes a just claim we ought to pay it. If you do not want to pay this because it is old, that is your business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of James Glover, deceased, late of Westmoreland County, Pa., the sum of $72,565 for use and destruction of property by the military authorities of the United States during the late War of the Rebellion.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 7, strike out "$72,565" and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000 in full settlement."

The committee amendment was agreed to and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN P. WHIDDON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4234) authorizing the purchase of certain lands by John P. Whiddon.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to John P. Whiddon, of Inverness, Fla., patent for lots 7 and 8, section 8, and lots 4 and 5, section 9, township 19 south, range 20 east, Tallahassee meridian, Fla., upon payment for the same at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHARLESTOWN SAND & STONE CO. OF ELKTON, MD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11659) for the relief of the Charlestown Sand & Stone Co. of Elkton, Md.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, in August, 1917, the Charlestown Sand & Stone Co. entered into a contract with the United States Engineers to furnish and deliver to Fort Saulsbury in Delaware certain quantities of cement, sand, and gravel at a certain price. In January, 1918, the Government took charge of the railroads, and in April and again in June, the Government raised the freight rates. A little later they started condemnation proceedings against this company. The company then allowed the Government to take charge of its property and to have the property run under the Government's supervision. The consequence was that they loaded this concern, which had a capacity of about 5 carloads a day, with from 18 to 20 carloads, so that at the end of the Government's control it cost those people $12,000 to refit their plant and get it back in proper condition. In addition to that, when the Government was running the plant under its supervision, it took out the stone from the top and instead of dumping it in the regular dump, they put it on top of other stone and rendered that of no value, so that the company's loss was $36,000. But all this bill is reported out for is the actual loss in freight rates due to the fact that the Government, which was the person with whom the Charlestown Sand & Stone Co. had a contract, raised the freight rates.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why single out this company and make an adjustment for freight rates? Are there not hundreds and thousands of other companies that are in the same situation by reason of increased freight rates at that time?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No. No; because both the War Department and the Navy Department immediately after this bid changed their contract so that those contracts provided that there should be a change in compensation commensurate always with the change in freight rates.

Mr. SCHAFER. Did that apply to all contracts where freight rates entered into the matter?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. That will clear up that point in my mind. Here is another point. We are at the close of the session. The bill passed the Senate carrying an amount of $18,547.88, which included $6,161.89 by reason of an increase in the cost of sand and gravel.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; it was an increase in the cost of production.

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes; but this contract was made several months after the war was declared, and I am absolutely opposed to making an adjustment on that part of the claim. If I am assured by the gentleman and by the chairman of the committee reporting this bill that the gentleman and that the committee will see to it that in the closing days of the session this amount of $6,161.89 is not inserted, due to a parliamentary situation in a conference, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Absolutely not, sir. It was agreed in the subcommittee that this claim should be cut down to the freight rate, and that is all that was left in.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman who now has the floor and the committee try to stop every effort to include the $6,161.80 in conference?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I would consider it bad faith not to do so.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I try to carry out the wishes of the committee and of the House.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Charlestown Sand & Stone Co., of Elkton, Md., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $18,547.88, in full settlement of the additional freight charges and the increased cost of labor and materials incurred by said company in the fulfillment of the requirements of the United States engineer office under the contract of August 23, 1917, for furnishing and delivering cement, sand, and gravel (or broken stone) to Fort Salisbury, Del., for the construction of gun and mortar batteries.

With committee amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$18,547.88" and insert "$12,385.99."

On page 2, line 4, strike out "Salisbury" and insert in lieu thereof "Saulsbury."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHARLES H. YOUNG

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15900) for the relief of Charles H. Young.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice that the committee report indicates that the department has made a thorough investigation and has recommended an allowance of $580.38 following that investigation, which amount was not acceptable to the claimant. Now, they have a bill to submit the matter to the Court of Claims. Is there any limit as to the amount we shall have to pay under this procedure if the Court of Claims should find favorably for the claimant?

Mr. SINCLAIR. The Court of Claims will adjudicate it as the evidence in the case indicates.

Mr. SCHAFER. In the District of Columbia there are strange actions by some of the courts these days.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think the gentleman will find that most cases have been decided justly and equitably.

Mr. SCHAFER. When the bill was before your committee was there any estimate of the amount of the claim? What amount was claimed by the party who is asking for the passage of this bill?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I believe the difference between the Government and the claimant was something like $200. I have not had opportunity to look the bill over carefully, and I do not recall the exact amount. I think, however, that the difference between the Government and the claimant is about $230.

Mr. SCHAFER. If that is so, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and hereby is, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of Charles H. Young and to render judgment against the United States for damages, if any, suffered by reason of the occupancy by the United States between June 30, 1917, and November 30, 1919, of two parcels of land, with buildings and improvements, situated in Middlesex County, Mass., containing 64 acres, more or less, as conveyed by two deeds from Lincoln F. Spear to Charles H. Young, recorded in Middlesex County registry of deeds, dated July 23, 1914, book No. 3901, page 501, and September 2, 1915, book No. 3996, page 544.

SEC. 2. Such claim may be instituted at any time within four months from the approval of this act, notwithstanding lapse of time or any statute of limitations.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF THE UNIVERSITY OF KANSAS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15942) for the relief of the University of Kansas.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WARREN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER] or some other gentleman explain the bill to the gentleman.

Mr. HOOPER. I am not going to make any more speeches this evening on any of these bills.

Mr. WARREN. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him——

Mr. HOOPER. Certainly——

Mr. WARREN. I understand the few bills remaining over on this calendar will be called up again before March 4. This is a most unusual bill.

Mr. HOOPER. I will admit that it is out of the ordinary.

Mr. WARREN. This happened six years prior to the outbreak of the Civil War.

Mr. HOOPER. I think that is true.

Mr. WARREN. I would like to have this bill passed over.

Mr. HOOPER. On the question of jurisdiction, I am sure that comes into the gentleman's mind as to why this comes here as a war claim. It came before the Committee on Claims first and they held that they did not have jurisdiction, and then it was sent to the War Claims Committee, which took jurisdiction of it. I hope the gentleman will examine into that matter carefully.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FRENCH STEAMSHIPS "P. L. M. 4" AND "P. L. M. 7"

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16691) to authorize the Secretary of War to settle the claims of the owners of the French steamships P. L. M. 4 and P. L. M. 7 for damages sustained as the result of collisions between such vessels and the U. S. S. Henderson and Lake Charlotte, and to settle the claim of the United States against the owners of the French steamship P. L. M. 7 for damages sustained by the U. S. S. Pennsylvanian in a collision with the P. L. M. 7.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle the claims of the Compagnie des Chemins de Fer de Paris à Lyon et à la Mediterranée in the sums of 12,401 pounds sterling 2 shillings 8 pence and 1,384 pounds sterling 15 shillings 9 pence, amounting in all to 13,785 pounds sterling 18 shillings 5 pence, for damages sustained by the French steamship P. L. M. 4 in a collision with the U. S. S. Henderson, in the roadstead of St. Nazaire, France, on October 14, 1917, and for damages sustained by the French steamship P. L. M. 7, in a collision with the U. S. S. Lake Charlotte, in the roadstead at Brest, France, on August 25, 1918; and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle at the same time the claim of the United States against the Compagnie des Chemins de Fer de Paris à Lyon et à la Mediterranée in the sum of $51,598.04 for damages sustained by the U. S. S. Pennsylvanian in the roadstead at Brest, France, on February 13, 1918: Provided, That the sums claimed by the said Compagnie des Chemins de Fer de Paris à Lyon et à la Mediterranée shall be offset against the sum claimed by the United States, and upon exchange of releases, such offset settlement shall be accepted by the claimant company and the United States as full and final settlement of all claims whatsoever arising from the collisions described in this act.

With committee amendments as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "on," insert "or about."

On page 2, after line 14, insert "in a collision."

On page 2, line 16, after the figures "1918," insert "with the French steamship P. L. M. 7."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MINA BINTLIFF

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3002) for the relief of Mina Bintliff.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, Mina Bintliff shall be held and considered to be the dependent mother of Charles Bintliff, who was killed in the performance of his duties as a prohibition enforcement officer.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HARRY E. GOOD

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3233) for the relief of Harry E. Good, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Ephraim N. Good, deceased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of Harry E. Good, of Winamac, Ind., administrator de bonis non of the estate of Ephraim N. Good, deceased, United States registered notes Nos. ETTA PEARCE FULPER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5453) authorizing the payment of Government life insurance to Etta Pearce Fulper.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to state that I intend to offer an amendment to limit attorneys' fees to $10, and in a few words I want to give the reasons before the bill passes the objection stage.

Under the World War veterans' act as amended, an attorney could receive but $10 for taking up a case like this with the Veterans' Bureau. It appears that this man under a strict interpretation of the law was not entitled to take Government war-risk insurance because he was not in the active military service of the Federal Government. However, he executed an application in good faith at the time he was a member of the New Jersey Militia. This application was accepted by the Veterans' Bureau, he paid his premiums on the war-risk insurance in good faith, and applied for conversion under the law, and the application for conversion was favorably acted upon. Premiums were paid on the converted policy until the time of his death. In all fairness and justice the widow is entitled to receive this $10,000 Government insurance, and I serve notice that I intend to offer an amendment to have the attorneys' fees in the case limited the same as they are limited in war-risk insurance cases under existing law, in order to protect the widow and to see that no attorney or agent receives more than he would be able to receive under the general provisions of the World War veterans' act.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNELL. It is all right for us to offer such an amendment to this bill and tell the recipient of the money that $10 is all she can pay the lawyer under the bill, but what is to prevent her from giving the lawyer whatever she wants when the money is paid to her?

Mr. SCHAFER. I will state that I have an amendment in the usual form which the Claims Committee generally puts on these bills where they desire to limit the fees of attorneys. It is a pretty strict enactment, and if there is a violation the lawyer would be subject to a fine and would, therefore, be subject to disbarment. This is as far as I can go to help this widow. If the amendment is not acceptable, I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr O'CONNELL. Offer the amendment and let us get along with the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized and directed to pay to Etta Pearce Fulper, widow of William H. Fulper, late second lieutenant, supply officer, Second Battalion, New Jersey State Militia, the amount of his Government life-insurance policy No. K-446185, as if such William H. Fulper had been in Federal service when such policy was issued.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SCHAFER: At the end of the bill, in line 9, after the word "issued," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That no part of the money appropriated in this act in excess of $10 thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with the said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum which in the aggregate exceeds $10 of the amount appropriated in this act on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN W. ELKINS, JR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10912) to reimburse or compensate Capt. John W. Elkins, jr., for part of salary retained by War Department and money turned over to same by him.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to John W. Elkins, jr., former recreation officer at Fort Benning, Ga., but now a captain in the United States Army at Davidson, N. C., the sum of $940, the same being in full compensation of the amount remaining due on his salary because of the stoppage of pay arising out of a shortage found in the motion-picture fund at Fort Benning, Ga., in 1924, due to embezzlement by a subordinate officer.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Bowie, of Annapolis Junction, Md., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,000 for damage to his farm in Anne Arundel County, Md., on account of the occupation by the United States Army during the years 1917, 1918, and 1919.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6, strike out the figures "$12,000.00" and insert the figures "$2,610.00."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

W. H. PARSONS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15424) for the relief of Dr. W. H. Parsons.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, I notice that there is an adverse report on this bill from the Secretary of War. It appears that the veteran was sent to a hospital but elected to go on home and while there incurred medical bills while on the furlough.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I think, Mr. Speaker, the report of the War Department is inaccurate and misleading. This is not the usual case of a man on furlough incurring medical treatment while on a furlough. This man was in the military service stationed at Fort McKinley, Portland, Me. He came down with the measles which developed into pneumonia. He was hospitalized, and after some time his life was despaired of. After some time the man was sent to his home in the belief that only by that act could the man's life be saved. His mother was sent for. He was, with the concurrence of the military authorities and his mother, placed upon a boat and started for home. At a point about 16 miles from his home he was unable to go farther. He remained there some time but subsequently went on home. His condition again became critical and this doctor was called in to treat the case as an emergency case.

From that time on, almost until the time the man was discharged, the doctor was in attendance. He made telephone reports and reports by letter of the man's condition to the medical authorities, and a captain of the Medical Department, and a lieutenant of the Medical Department came to the man's home and consulted with the doctor. From time to time the medical authorities extended the man's furlough; from April until September there were various extensions of the furlough by the military authorities. Ultimately the man was discharged.

This case resolves itself into a simple proposition whether this country doctor—and if there ever was a good samaritan it is the country doctor—who was called upon and treated this man, should treat this man, taking the chances that he would be paid, or leave the soldier to die. He treated this man and saved his life, and the single issue before Congress is whether the doctor must bear the burden, or whether the Government should pay it.

Mr. SCHAFER. In view of the gentleman's statement I will withdraw my objection. I will state that if the gentleman had incorporated his statement in the committee report it would have saved considerable time. [Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $663.17 to Dr. W. H. Parsons, Damariscotta, Me., for professional services rendered Austin V. Sproul, private, Battery E, Fifty-fourth Artillery, while on furlough during the period from April 27, 1918, to September 6, 1918.

LOUISE A. WOOD

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 61) granting an increase of pension to Louise A. Wood.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I intend to ask that the committee amendment be rejected. I was glad that we passed a bill by unanimous consent to-day granting a $5,000 pension to the widow of former President Wilson. I believe we should grant the same amount to the widow of this very distinguished general of the Army, statesman, and former Governor of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill, and if we pass the Senate bill as it is it will mean something to Mrs. Wood. If we pass the bill with the House committee amendment it may be defeated. General Wood rendered 40 years' valuable service to the United States and died a poor man.

Mr. SCHAFER. I agree with the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louise A. Wood, widow of Leonard Wood, late a major general in the United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $5,000 per year in lieu of that she is now receiving.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

In line 8, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert "$1,800."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER. I hope that the committee amendment will be defeated by a unanimous vote. This afternoon we passed by unanimous consent a pension for the widow of former President Wilson at $5,000 a year. There remains only a few days of this session of Congress. The pending bill as passed by the Senate by a unanimous vote carried $5,000. Vote down the committee amendment and pass this bill as it came to us from the Senate carrying $5,000, so that the bill can speed on its way to the other end of the Avenue to-night and do justice to the widow of one of the greatest American soldiers and statesmen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is the third reading of the Senate bill.

MAJ. O. S. M'CLEARY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11001) for the relief of Maj. O. S. McCleary, United States Army, retired.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to find out how the War Claims Committee obtains jurisdiction of this bill. It does not seem to refer, directly or indirectly, to any war period and it has an adverse report from the Secretary of War. The Secretary states that it will establish a dangerous precedent.

Mr. PEAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I do not know why the bill was referred to the War Claims Committee. It pertains to the Regular Establishment and I suppose for that reason would belong to that committee.

Mr. COLTON. If the gentleman please, this bill was introduced by my colleague, who is detained to-night on account of illness. I do not know as to the jurisdiction between the two committees, but I have investigated and I think the committee has carefully investigated and found that this is a very just claim and that it is only following a precedent that has been established for years.

The man had asked for a leave of absence; it was granted; it was expected that his pay would continue as it had continued theretofore, and, due to a ruling of the Comptroller General, the rule was changed.

Mr. SCHAFER. Then, it appears that the War Department must have made the adverse report without having all of the facts.

Mr. PEAVEY. I will say to the gentleman that the claim grows out of a change in administration policy on the part of the Comptroller General, and this man had already gone on his leave of absence. Just as soon as he was apprised of the facts about the change, he immediately returned to active duty.

Mr. SCHAFER. But, at the time he went on leave of absence, he would have been entitled to the money which this bill provides?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. PEAVEY. The bill grows out of a change in his status while he was on leave of absence.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will not object, but I would suggest that when similar bills are introduced they should be referred to the committee which has jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the account of Maj. O. S. McCleary, United States Army, retired, in the sum herein set forth which now stands as a disallowance on the books of the General Accounting Office, to wit, the sum of $148.98 deducted from the pay due Maj. O. S. McCleary for the month of July, 1927.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE MACK COPPER CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12057) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to ascertain the damage by the United States to real property of the Mack Copper Co., a corporation, and to render judgment therefor as herein provided.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, the title of the bill does not correctly indicate the contents, because the bill is amended and provides for a direct appropriation of $268,500. The committee report states that part of this claim arises out of the taking of top soil from 200 acres of land, and the report shows that the value of the 200 acres of land is $200 per acre. The amount arrived at from the taking of the top soil from this 200 acres is $150,000, while the total value of the 200 acres based on a value of $200 is only $40,000.

Mr. PEAVEY. This involves practically 4,000 acres immediately adjacent to the city of San Diego. If the gentleman cares to have me, I can give him the facts.

Mr. SCHAFER. I know what the facts are. Page 8 of the report states that there is $150,000 damage arrived at by reason of taking the top soil from 200 acres of land.

Mr. PEAVEY. That item is not in this bill at all.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The facts in the case are that the Court of Claims was called upon to render judgment and find the facts, which our committee and other committees have discarded. We now ask the Court of Claims to render judgment in their findings of fact. I do not know by what process they have reached the compromise, but it would seem that if the Court of Claims has made the findings of fact and reported them and the damage to the extent of $500,000, the Government is lucky to get off for that amount.

Mr. SCHAFER. I do not agree with the distinguished chairman of the Claims Committee. If the findings of the Court of Claims are based on the same facts and the same methods by which they arrived at a damage of $150,000 as the proper sum to be considered as damage for taking the top soil off of the 200 acres of land valued at $200 an acre, I would not pay much attention to the findings of fact of said court.

Mr. PEAVEY. Our committee did not find any such value as that. The evidence before our committee was that the land was valued at $1,000 an acre.

Mr. SCHAFER. Look on page 7 of the report where it states:

XXI. At the time the Government took possession of the 4,000 acres of plaintiff's land, said land was of the value of approximately $200 per acre. The 1,039 acres of plaintiff's land that were not covered by the lease, but which land was used by the Government, were of the value of $175 per acre.

Mr. PEAVEY. I do not know from what part of the document the gentleman is reading.

Mr. SCHAFER. I am reading from the Court of Claims findings of fact which appear on the top of page 7 of the committee report.

Mr. PEAVEY. The Court of Claims considered only the legal liability and allowed the further sum of $150,000 for the removal of the top soil from the 200 acres which was used for a drill ground, but that does not comprehend the value of the whole tract.

Mr. SCHAFER. The bill seems to be a remarkable one. The people gave a lease of this land to the Government. What did they expect the Government to do if they located a camp there? They knew that it would be used for the purposes that it was used for. I shall have to object.

ANNA E. STRATTON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15562) for the relief of Anna E. Stratton.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

HELEN GRAY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8691) for the relief of Helen Gray.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Helen Gray, of San Diego, Calif., the sum of $10,715.50 in full settlement of all claims against the Government and as compensation for damage to property and personal injuries to her resulting from her being struck and knocked down by a United States Government truck, then and there, on the 24th day of September, driven by Paul Perry, an enlisted man in the United States Marine Corps, and operated in the service of the United States Marine Corps.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, page 1, strike out "$10,715.50" and insert "$3,851.50."

The committee amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 339

Resolved, etc., That in the settlement of all claims of Mrs. Robert G. Moss as the widow of the late Robert Graham Moss, captain of Infantry, United States Army, who died at Columbus, Ga., on April 6, 1928, and who was entitled to promotion to the grade of major on March 24, 1928, and whose nomination for such promotion was pending in the United States Senate at the time of his death, said Robert Graham Moss shall be regarded as having been promoted to the grade of major on March 24, 1928, and as having been entitled, from and including that date, to the pay and allowances authorized for an officer in the grade of major with his length of service.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

T. A. GILLESPIE LOADING CO., MORGAN, N. J.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15769), to pay certain claims, heretofore reported to Congress by the Secretary of War, arising from the explosions and fire at the plant of the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co., at Morgan, N. J., October 4 and 5, 1918.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PEAVEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. PEAVEY. As chairman of the subcommittee that reported this legislation I ask unanimous consent that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Claims for the purpose of amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER. The amendment ought to be to strike out the enacting clause. This bill is the biggest monstrosity that I ever saw on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PEAVEY. We ask unanimous consent to have it rereferred to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

FRANCIS X. CALLAHAN

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 825, H. R. 15220, a bill for the relief of Francis X. Callahan, which was objected to by me, and I now withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the Clerk will report the bill H. R. 15220, Calendar No. 825.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I shall not object. This is a very meritorious bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summons Francis X. Callahan, late provisional second lieutenant, temporary first lieutenant, United States Infantry of the Regular Army of the United States, before a retiring board for the purpose of hearing his case, and to inquire into and determine all the facts touching on the nature of his disabilities, and to find and report the disabilities which in its judgment have produced his incapacity, and whether his disabilities are an incident of service; that, upon the findings of such a board the President is further authorized in his discretion either to confirm the order by which the said Francis X. Callahan was discharged or in his discretion to nominate and appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Senate the said Francis X. Callahan, late provisional second lieutenant, temporary first lieutenant, United States Infantry, and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or hereafter may be provided by law and regulations for the officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said Francis X. Callahan shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That any disability incurred in line of duty by Francis X. Callahan while serving as an officer of the Army of the United States during the World War from August 15, 1917, to September 18, 1919, inclusive, shall be deemed and considered to have been so incurred while serving as an officer of the Army of the United States other than as an officer of the Regular Army, so as to entitle said Callahan to the benefits and privileges of the emergency officers' retirement act (Public, No. 506, 70th Cong.): Provided, That such disability rating is sufficient and said Callahan is otherwise eligible for retirement under the terms and conditions of said act: And provided further, That said Callahan shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by the passage of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CADET ADRIAN VAN LEEUWEN

Mr. STOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 7887) placing Cadet Adrian Van Leeuwen on the retired list.

Mr. ROWBOTTOM. The bill is back of the star.

Mr. STOBBS. We have just taken up a bill that was back of the star.

Mr. WARREN. Reserving the right to object, did the gentleman consult the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] about the bill?

Mr. STOBBS. No; I have not seen the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SCHAFER. If newspaper reports are correct, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BLANTON, is not in Washington.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to the bill, but I understand he objected to it.

Mr. STOBBS. The gentleman objected to it after a colloquy with somebody else; but the bill is meritorious.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Adrian Van Leeuwen, late cadet at the United States Military Academy, at West Point, to the position of second lieutenant of Infantry in the Army, and to place him upon the retired list with pay of a retired second lieutenant of Infantry.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the provisions of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, are hereby extended and made applicable to Adrian Van Leeuwen for the purpose of the allowance to him of compensation and hospital and medical treatment on account of a physical disability contracted in line of duty while a cadet at the United States Military Academy; and the United States Veterans' Bureau is hereby authorized and directed to award and pay to said Adrian Van Leeuwen such compensation, and provide for him such hospital and medical treatment as he would be entitled to if his said disability had been contracted in line of duty in the military service of the United States between April 6, 1917, and July 2, 1921."

Mr. STOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the committee amendment will not be agreed to.

The committee amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHNS-MANVILLE CORPORATION

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1547) for the relief of Johns-Manville Corporation. This is a Senate bill and when it was called the last time the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON] made some inquiry. I sent the inquiry to the Comptroller General and I have a letter here in which he says that as an equitable proposition he considers the bill just.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, did the Comptroller General say it is a just bill?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; I have the letter from the comptroller here to that effect.

Mr. SCHAFER. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Johns-Manville Corporation the sum of $6,316.31 for increased cost of labor services and material on contract No. 3839–B for roofing at naval ordnance plant, South Charleston, W. Va.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point the report of the Comptroller General on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, February 6, 1929.

Hon. CHARLES L. UNDERHILL,
Chairman Committee on Claims,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In the matter of S. 1547, Seventieth Congress, second session, entitled "An act for the relief of Johns-Manville Corporation," submitted by you to the House of Representatives January 5, 1929, with recommendation for its passage (H. Rept. 2022), which bill, as before the House (Private Calendar No. 754), reads:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Johns-Manville Corporation the sum of $6,316.31 for increased cost of labor, services, and material on contract No. 3839–B for roofing at naval ordnance plant, South Charleston, W. Va."

I have the honor to advise that I am in receipt of a letter of January 31, 1929, from the Hon. CARL R. CHINDBLOM, House of Representatives, requesting that the matter of the bill be the subject of a report by this office along equitable lines.

The records of this office show that the H. W. Johns-Manville Co. (referred to in S. 1547 as the "Johns-Manville Corporation") presented a claim to this office for additional compensation under Yards and Docks contract No. 3839–B, dated June 19, 1919, for roofing of certain buildings at the naval ordnance plant, South Charleston, W. Va., amounting to $6,465.37, the items of which are as set out in the report of your committee on the bill, claim of October 25, 1922 (H. Rept. No. 2022, p. 3). The claim was disallowed (settlement No. N–133420, April 11, 1923) and the disallowance affirmed (Review 4966, January 16, 1924, August 18, 1924, and February 13, 1925), the contractor not being found legally entitled to be paid the additional compensation claimed. See herewith copies of such Review 4966; also Crook Company (Inc.) v. United States (270 U. S. 4); Detroit Steel Products Co. v. United States (62 Ct. Cl. 686), referred to on page 2 of the report of your committee; and conclusion of the Secretary of the Navy as set forth on said page 2 in his report on the bill, that—

"It appears to be clear * * * that the Johns-Manville Co. has no legal claim against the United States under the contract. * * *"

Viewed entirely as an equitable proposition—as distinguished from a legal one—I have to advise that certain elements of equity appear in favor of the contractor, as a result of its having been unduly delayed by the United States in the completion of the roofing; as, for example, as recognized in connection with the completion of the fourth building (heat treatment building) in my decision of January 16, 1924 (pp. 3, 4), where I said:

"At the time the contractor undertook to do the work on this building within five days after receipt of notice that the building was ready it was contemplated that the building would be ready about the time the three other buildings would be ready and that the contractor's force, equipment, and material would be at the site. It appears, however, that there was a delay of more than 17 months between the date of completion of the last of the three buildings and date of receipt of notice that the fourth building was ready and that because of this delay the contractor did not have, and could not be expected to have, its force, equipment, and material at the site ready to complete the work within five days after receipt of notice that the building was ready. Accordingly, it must be held that the contractor's delay in completion of the work on this building was unavoidable. * * *"

Accordingly, you are advised that the possession by the contractor of certain equitable—as distinguished from legal—rights in the matter has been and is recognized by this office.

A copy of this letter is being forwarded to Representative CHINDBLOM.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. LANHAM, for three days, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 27, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, February 27, 1929

(Legislative day of Monday, February 25, 1929)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1727) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes,' approved May 22, 1920, and acts in amendment thereof," approved July 3, 1926, as amended, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names.

Mr. WATERMAN. I announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is necessarily detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I regret to say that yesterday, in the course of a colloquy which arose between the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and myself, I used some expressions which were decidedly more heated than the circumstances justified, and I take the blame for that occasion, so far as it is one that calls for notice at all, entirely upon myself.

Everyone who knows me knows that there is no Member of this body for whom I entertain a profounder respect than I do for the Senator from Virginia—respect for his stainless public and private character, for his great abilities, for his unflinching courage and his lofty independence of spirit.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the conferees on the naval appropriation bill met and reached an entire agreement. There are four matters which have to go back to the House for a separate vote because under the rules of the House they are construed as legislation and must be passed on by that body.

The principal changes that we have made are, first, to reduce the amount available for the second batch of cruisers from $500,000 to $200,000. This will enable us to start those cruisers under the terms of the cruiser law in 1930. They will be started, of course, at the extreme end of that fiscal year.

The House insisted that the Senate conferees give up the amendment providing for a dry dock at Puget Sound. The appropriation for this was $400,000. The Senate conferees were very strong in their insistence upon having the item kept in the bill, but we were unable to prevail.

There was also an item of $154,000 in the bill as it passed the Senate to increase the pay of certain draftsmen. The House would not agree to this and the Senate conferees were compelled to recede on the matter.

On the question of helium production the House provided $160,000 and the Senate restored the Budget figure of $300,000. In coming to an agreement we have split the difference on these figures and have made the appropriation $230,000.

The conference report as agreed to by the conferees takes from the Senate bill $634,000, leaving only very small additions to the House bill, somewhere in the neighborhood of about $100,000, and, of course, the large item that was estimated for by the Budget Bureau, and which we have kept within the figures of the Budget Bureau, for the increase of the Navy, to take care of the cruisers and the new aircraft carrier.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Maine will let me ask him before he concludes his remarks what was done with amendment numbered 17 appearing on page 48?

Mr. HALE. That has to be voted on in the House of Representatives. That is the labor amendment. The conferees made no change whatever in it.

Mr. NORRIS. That amendment is technically in disagreement?

Mr. HALE. It is technically in disagreement.

Mr. NORRIS. If the House shall refuse to recede, then it will come back to the Senate and be adjusted in conference, of course?

Mr. HALE. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. But if the House does recede, then the controversy will be ended so far as that amendment is concerned?

Mr. HALE. It will be ended so far as that is concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in my own right I want to take the floor for just a few moments.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to occupy the floor now?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; for a few moments.

Yesterday, Mr. President, when the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] asked unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the conference report I objected. I had asked the Senator if he would not let the conference report go over until to-day, in order that I might examine it. As soon as the objection was made, the Senator moved to take up the report, a motion he had a perfect right, of course, to make under the rules, but I thought my request, since the report had not been printed, was very reasonable under the circumstances. However, if the Senator from Maine at that time had said that if after he had explained the conference report I still wanted it to go over for the day he would consent to that, the conference report would undoubtedly have been agreed to on yesterday, and one day on this bill would have been saved.

It did not seem to me, Mr. President, that a conference report on a bill of this importance, embracing as it does the appropriation of hundreds of millions of dollars of public funds, having to do for an entire fiscal year with the management, control, and operation of our Navy, ought to be agreed to without proper consideration. It did not seem to me that I had made an unreasonable request when I asked that the report be printed and that the Senate might not be required to vote upon it without having it printed. However, the Senator from Maine made a motion to proceed with the consideration of the conference report, and the Senate decided to do it.

I believe, Mr. President, since I have been a Member of this body and of the House of Representatives I have never yet made objection to any Member resorting to any course that the law and the rules of the body gave him the right to follow, and I have never felt piqued or hurt or injured because some other Senator or Representatives pursued that course. It is a right that he has, in which he must be protected; that is the object of law; that is the object of rules. So, realizing as I did and as I do, that the Senator from Maine had done nothing that was in any way a violation of the rules, I concede that he had a perfect right to take the course he took; but, Mr. President, when one resorts to technicalities that are afforded him by the law, he must not complain if other Senators or other Members of a body pursue the same course, and I intended to resort to the same right that the rules give to me to see that the conference report was properly debated. As a matter of fact, I did not have anything to do. All I had to do was to watch the proceedings; other Senators did my work for me more fully and completely than I could have done it.

Upon an examination of the report, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I find no fault with it, and it took me less than half an hour of time this morning to satisfy myself as to what the report really was. So that if the consideration of the report has been delayed a day, as it has, the Senator from Maine has himself to blame for it, for not acceding to what I believed to be a reasonable request under the circumstances.

I want to repeat that in no sense am I criticizing the Senator from Maine. I concede he did what he had a right to, and I did nothing but what I think I had a right to do. However, we are confronted now with the fact that one day later the conference report is still before the Senate. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the adoption of the conference report.

THE AMERICAN FLAG

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I send to the clerk's desk a resolution which I ask to have read and then I ask that it may lie upon the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator that the question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is what I want to discuss at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 343), as follows:

(By Mr. HEFLIN)

Whereas the United States flag is the symbol of our national sovereignty and is the emblem of both civil and religious liberty, and as such is entitled to occupy the first and uppermost place on its own staff or hoist: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, requested to formulate such rules and regulations as will prevent the flying of any emblem or pennant on the same staff or hoist above the United States flag on any battleship or other vessel in the naval service of the United States.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask that the resolution may lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. HEFLIN. I now ask the clerk to read the letters which I send to the desk in my time.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not just now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: I, too, believe that no other flag should fly above the Stars and Stripes.

Yours truly,

GEO. FREDERICKSEN,
341 New York Avenue, Union City, N. J.

And my friends, Joe Sachs and his mother, 20 Cook Street, Jersey City, N. J.

---

75 WOODLAND AVENUE, Glen Ridge, N. J.

To the Hon. Senator HEFLIN:

We desire to express our appreciation of your activities with respect to the use of our flag on war vessels, and we earnestly hope that you will continue your courageous and patriotic efforts. Certainly there is only one proper position for the Stars and Stripes in all public places, and that is on a staff by itself, and at the highest point above all flags and pennants. Let any other flags or pennants be placed on entirely separate staffs and at a point lower than the Stars and Stripes. We hold up your hands and trust you will persevere to a triumphant outcome of this question.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Please accept my sincere congratulations and best wishes for your consistent and courageous stand for our country and its best traditions against the alien power that is constantly seeking to break down free government in America.

I hope that you will be accorded the appreciation you deserve and that more of the people's representatives follow your lead in trying to preserve America for the Americans.

It is certainly fine to see that there are still a few American statesmen who, regardless of foreign influences, can still work for our best interests in the face of the obstacles we ourselves have built up catering to a bogus tolerance.

More power to you, Senator, and may the American public wake up while there is still time.

With my sincere good wishes and appreciation of your efforts, I am

Respectfully,

J. W. SMILEY,

HILLCREST, N. Y., February 16, 1929.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: I would certainly like to go on record as being very much against any kind of a flag or pennant going above our own American flag at any time or place.

Just heard Mr. Ford over Station WHAP read the speech you made to the Senators the other day on your amendment * * *.

It is surely too bad that in America you have to get up and plead with American Senators to fly their own flag first. We need more Senators like you, real Americans, who are not afraid to say what they think.

Sincerely hoping you get another chance to put your amendment through and that our American flag will be the only flag flying at the top of its staff on all American ships.

Respectfully yours,

M. RANNER,
Hillcrest, Spring Valley, N. Y.

ADAMSVILLE CIVIC ASSOCIATION,

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Hello, stormy petrel, keep it up. I don't want to see any flag or banner hoisted above the Stars and Stripes, and in fact don't want to see them on same staff * * *.

Yours truly,

M. W. SCOTT.

Senator HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I feel I should congratulate you on your stand on the flag question. Glad that we have one man in our Senate who is not afraid to uphold the best interests of the American people. The flag is the standard, the supreme emblem of our Nation, representing all that is good and pure in thought and deed, and it should never be placed second in any position for any purpose, sect, or creed.

Very truly yours,

A. DAVISON SHAW.

WEST ORANGE, N. J., February 17, 1929.

DEAR SENATOR: In regards to our flag, please use your influence to have it on a staff of its own and do not allow any other flag above it on any of our ships. If there is to be a flag to denote there is a service, let it fly somewhere else. It is wrong to put anything above the Stars and Stripes.

Let us know the votes for and against, and we can vote accordingly when they come up again for reelection.

Respectfully yours,

Mr. and Mrs. F. KOZI,
71 Whittlesey Avenue, West Orange, N. J.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I certainly agree with you that "no emblem, flag, or pennant shall be hoisted above the flag of the United States."

I further believe that every red-blooded American indorses your stand on this subject.

I hope that you will introduce a bill of similar nature and continue the fight. * * *

You are opening the eyes of sleeping American citizens to the dangers that confront us.

* * * * * * * * * * * If I can be of service to you, please call on me.

TUCKERTON, N. J., February 18, 1929.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: After reading your speech on the flag in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as a red-blooded American I could not help writing and telling you how I admire you for the stand you are taking to uphold the rights of the flag that we love so well. You are absolutely right and you have many millions of good Americans with you. Keep up the good fight, do not falter for a moment, and victory will be yours in the end. I thank God for your life and hope that in His wise providence He will permit you to live many more years and that the good people of Alabama will return you to the United States Senate as long as you are able to serve. Good luck and may God bless you.

Sincerely yours,

S. S. ANDERSON,

INDIAN SPRINGS, IND., February 19, 1929.

Senator THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I want to express my thanks to you for the courageous fight for the rights of the American flag. It is men like you that live forever in the hearts of the people. It is to be regretted that other men with equal opportunity do not display the statesmanship, patriotism, and Americanism that you do.

Sincerely,

E. M. HUFF.

INDEPENDENCE, W. VA., February 19, 1929.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have read with great interest of your fight to keep dear Old Glory on the top of the pole, and can say that I am mighty proud to know that there is one man who is not afraid to say what he thinks when our American rights and interests are at stake.

Let me congratulate you on the noble and patriotic stand that you have taken, and may God give you health and power to keep this constantly before the people.

What has recently happened in Italy and Mexico should wake us up and put all true Americans on guard.

Sincerely yours,

E. H. SHAY.

AUXIER, KY., February 16, 1929.

Hon. TOM HEFLIN,
Member United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I heartily agree with you in your opposition to putting any flag above the most outstanding emblem of our Nation or of any other nation in the world.

I speak the voice of one of the most powerful fraternal institutions in America whose principles are founded upon the most patriotic American ideals.

* * * * * * * * *

We are entertaining the hope that the enlightened people of the States hereafter will send men to the Senate who will uphold the free institutions of the United States.

Very truly yours,

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have been reading with interest in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD your noble stand in defense of Old Glory. * * *

I have been thankful to God many times for your stand in the recent presidential campaign. I think our winning was due largely to such men as Straton, Cannon, and yourself.

May I say in closing that I am for you in your defense of our American principles. I am sorry that we do not have more men that have courage and conviction enough to be real Americans.

Hoping that your next bill in regards to the American flag goes over in a great way.

Yours sincerely,

C. L. MILLS.

Senator J. THOMAS HEFLIN.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I thank God for a Senator like you, who will tell certain people where to head in. It was you who saved us from war with Mexico.

Please send me your speech in regard to preventing the flying of the church pennant above the American flag.

Yours truly,

J. E. BARNFIELD, M. D.

GUTHRIE, OKLA., February 8, 1929.

Senator HEFLIN.

DEAR SIR: Am sorry to see that your flag amendment was voted down. I'm a Republican, but I hope I can have the honor of voting for you for President of the United States.

Yours respectfully,

F. V. HAMMERSLY.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, these are but samples of hundreds and even thousands of letters that I am receiving upon this subject. I wanted to have them read into the RECORD this morning in order that Senators here may know how the people back home feel upon this very important question.

I have a letter that seems to have been misplaced from an ex-service man, who said that he and others would fight and give their lives, if necessary, to put our flag back upon its staff from which an enemy had taken it, and he resents the action of United States Senators who voted to pull it down from its rightful place on its own staff in order to fly some other banner or pennant above it.

One of the letters read there deplores the fact that a Senator is obliged to get up here and plead with American Senators to fly their own flag first. The chief chaplain of the Navy wrote a letter here a few days ago which was read to this body in which he admitted that the pennant now used above our flag had never been adopted by any American religious group as a church pennant; and I assert to-day that no Protestant group of Christians and no Jewish group has ever indorsed this pennant that is now being used in the United States Navy, a Latin cross, as a pennant to fly above the Stars and Stripes.

As I said before, the chief chaplain admits that Great Britain does not lower the British flag when a church pennant is used at religious services on a man-of-war. The pennant is flown by the side of the British flag or below it. So we have a custom here, it seems, of flying a pennant called a church pennant; and if my Protestant friends do not know, they probably will learn that when one of our Roman Catholic friends refers to "the" church, he refers simply to the Catholic Church, and no other church. With them there is no other "church." The others are religious societies; and when they say "the church pennant," they mean that church.

Mr. President, it is rather shocking and somewhat discouraging, although I am pretty hard to discourage, to see a group of Senators vote twice to continue the practice of flying a cross, a foreign pennant, above our flag. The chief chaplain has told you plainly that it never has been adopted by any religious group in America as a church pennant. He has told you that sometimes they hold service on our ships without flying it at all.

I have suggested that we are willing to fly the pennant somewhere else on the battleship. By doing that you can continue to use a pennant when religious services are being held. Then I ask again why are you not willing to do that and let the United States flag continue to fly on its own staff in its own right? Senators, what is going to be your final answer.

I have brought to the attention of the Senate the fact that the national flag conference approves this plan of flying the pennant somewhere else. It protests against flying a pennant or any other flag above the United States flag.

I have brought to the attention of the Senate, and shall do so again, the fact that the American Legion, brave boys, who took that flag to the battle fields of France and offered to give their lives under its sacred folds in the war with Germany, have approved this plan of flying the pennant at another place on our ships. They protest against flying any pennant or banner above the United States flag. Do you respect their wishes?

I have brought to the attention of the Senate the fact that the United States Flag Code Commission have a provision in the code they have submitted to the American people in which they say that "no flag or pennant should fly above the United States flag."

I have brought to the attention of the Senate, to both Democrats and Republicans, the fact that 126 patriotic societies, fraternal and otherwise, have indorsed the proposition of flying the pennant at another place on our ships and ceasing to fly it or any other flag above the United States flag.

Mr. President, this debate about the flag is being read as perhaps no other debate has been read in a long time because of what has recently occurred in Italy, the Pope becoming a temporal sovereign, a crowned king. Our people are having their eyes opened. They are thinking more seriously about this subject than they have hitherto. They know the secretive and insidious efforts that were made by Mussolini and the Fascists to bring about the undoing and downfall of Italy. They have followed, step by step, the betrayal of the Italian people by this bastard tyrant of Italy. They have seen this man Mussolini, Mr. President, kill off the great Protestant leaders of Italy. They have seen him strike down the Masonic order established by Garibaldi, the great Italian patriot of other days. They have seen free press destroyed, free speech destroyed, the right of peaceful assembly and religious freedom destroyed in Italy, when those in power denied all the time that that is what they were doing.

Now, what is the situation in Italy with regard to Protestants and Masons. The Knights of Columbus are permitted to have their fraternal orders here in the United States, but the Masonic order is not permitted to operate in Italy. The Masonic order is one of the very greatest American fraternal orders. When the Mexican Government does something that Catholic priests do not want done, this Knights of Columbus group in the United States urges us to go to war with Mexico; but when they kill Freemasonry in Italy, when they deprive the Protestant churches and the Jewish churches of Italy of the right to worship as they choose, which they have done, they seem to think that it is all right and is none of our business.

Now, let me say something to you Senators that I want every one of you to hear.

A Senator said to me the other day that while talking to a leader of the Catholic group he said: "The greatest mistake that has been made by the Catholics in recent years was when the Pope permitted himself to be made a king, a temporal ruler." This Catholic leader to whom he was talking said: "You don't understand, Senator. The Pope can not afford to be under any government. He has to be at the head of his own government. Nothing must be above the Pope. He represents the universal church." The Senator then said: "If that is true, then the Baptists, Methodists, and other religious groups can not afford to be under the authority of any government. The Catholic leader replied: "Oh, that is different. They are religious societies and divided groups, but the Pope represents the universal church." Then the Senator said: "That is a matter about which there is a difference of opinion." I am satisfied many of you did not know that situation existed here. But it does.

What has been announced in the concordat agreed on between Mussolini and the Pope? The Protestant Church in Italy can not, it dare not, go out and solicit or even invite people to join that church. I am giving you the facts, Senators. The Jewish Church of Italy is precisely in the same condition and is not allowed to carry on its propaganda—that is what it means, getting others to join, to increase its number. That is forbidden now.

Senators, this recent move in Italy is the most dangerous step toward destroying religious liberty that has been witnessed in the world in a hundred years. Think of one group of religionists taking charge of a country and saying to all other religious groups—those whose forbears worshiped as they are now worshiping, who died and have gone to their reward, that "You can no longer carry on your religious activities as you have done in the past. You can meet in your churches, those of you who are already members"—that is precisely what it means—"and you can go through your form of service until you die, but when you die, your church must go out of business. You can not carry on your church propaganda to get in new members and build up your church."

I challenge anybody here to deny that. That is what you have in Italy to-day under the agreement entered into by Mussolini and the Pope of Rome. Little by little and bit by bit they have crucified civil and religious liberty in Italy. Free government has perished there.

Now we come to the United States, and I have told you two or three times about how American citizens in Rhode Island have been treated by Roman Catholic authorities in Italy. I do not think it will hurt to remind you again, because you need to be reminded in view of the way some of you have been voting on the flying of the cross above the American flag. By the way, hundreds of my letters are asking me to send the writers the record showing how you voted on the roll call. They want to know how you voted, and they say they will vote too next year. They want to be informed as to your position on the matter of flying the American flag first on its own staff.

I told Senators before that there is no division here in the Senate amongst the Catholic Members on the matter of flying this cross above our flag. Every one of them, without a single exception, votes to continue to fly the cross above our flag, and they carry Protestant Senators along with them, strange, strange indeed, to say.

They know what it means. They are bound to know that when a foreign vessel passes one of our vessels on the high seas and they see the cross flying above our flag what it means to them. So it is certain, I think, that back yonder somewhere somebody put something over on our Navy and ordered the "cross" to fly above our flag. They know what it means when they see it flying above Old Glory at sea, and when you come forward and say, "We want to change that custom," they rise up in solid phalanx here and vote to continue the custom.

Why do they do that? If there were not some significance to it to Catholics, do you not know they would say, "We do not care. Fly the pennant, any sort of a pennant you want, anywhere else on the ship." Why is it that they are fighting to continue this particular custom of flying the cross above the United States flag? These are questions that you must consider. You may not want to consider them here, but you are going to consider them at home amongst the people who sent you here.

Let me tell you what is going on here. That group is writing letters to you thanking you for continuing that custom and saying that you are not "intolerant." They are writing letters to me and to those who voted as I voted to break up this indefensible custom. They are taking me and the Senators who voted as I voted to task, and they are praising those of you who voted to continue the custom of flying the cross above our flag.

Mr. President, I know a Member in one of these bodies who was defeated at the last election because of his secret subserviency to the Roman Catholic political influence in the United States. I have had brought to my attention a number of instances where a question like this arises—perhaps a Senator or a Member of the House would be besieged by some priest or somebody else on that side—and they are keenly alert to anything that interferes with their political program in the United States.

I know of a Senator to whom a group of them went and told that if he did not vote to expel me from the Senate, they would vote against him for reelection. Talk about intolerance! There it is in its most hideous form—Roman Catholics demanding that I be expelled because I did not want to go to war with Mexico for the Catholic Church. Just a few days ago the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] suggested that these matters ought not to be discussed here, that he was getting tired of it.

Think of that! They have scared out and driven out nearly all the courage there is left in the public men of our country. If the American people do not wake up and make themselves felt you may well tremble for the safety of our country. We ought to discuss the Catholic question here, just as we discuss the Democratic or the Republican question, or the Methodist or the Baptist question. Any question that affects the welfare of this country ought to be discussed here, and people should not rise up and become so sensitive because we get up and talk plainly about great issues in America.

I should think that we have an issue here that needs attention when Catholics seek as they did here and ask to have me expelled from this body because they did not like what I said. They wrote the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] demanding that he should have a caucus and read me out of the Democratic Party. A Roman Catholic from Massachusetts wrote the governor of my State and asked him to call the legislature together to remove me from office. O Mr. President, but when we get up and talk about Roman Catholic dangers in the United States and give the facts, we are "intolerant."

Not long ago I was down at the station in this city boarding a train, and the conductor, whom I had seen frequently, although I did not know his name, was speaking to a young man standing there. He came into the train and said, "Did you see that tall young man talking to me there just before the train started"? I said, "I saw a tall boy there with you." The conductor said, "He asked me who you were, and I told him. He said, 'I am glad to see him. I like him. I am a Catholic, but I like him. I think he is telling a lot of truth, things that we ought to know. But my mother does not like him. She is a Catholic. She could kill him.'"

When I was speaking in Iowa last summer I reached Des Moines, and a young man by the name of McGuire phoned up and said he was a newspaper man and wanted to see me. I told him to come up. He came in and said, "Senator HEFLIN, I am a Catholic. I want you to know it. I want to interview you." I said, "That is all right. It does not make any difference to me what you are just so you are a good American. Sit down." He sat down. He said, "I want to ask you some questions. I am a graduate and I have always regarded the Pope only as the spiritual leader. Have you any specific instances that cause you to think to the contrary?"

I said, "Yes. On September 10, 1924, the Pope issued a statement in Rome published in the United States and published especially in Boston newspapers, from which I clipped it, in which he said that it was not only his right but his duty to advise Catholics how to vote." He seemed surprised. I said, "That is taking a good deal of authority, is it not?" He said, "It certainly is." I said, "The idea of the Pope living over in Rome undertaking to tell Catholics how to vote in the United States looks to me like an interference with our civic affairs and meddling with this Republic, and it is a dangerous practice." He said he thought so too.

I said, "There is another one, the Rhode Island incident where Catholics rebelled against the bishop and the priest who collected several hundred thousand dollars from them did not use it for the purpose for which they collected it. They went into a State court to make the priest give an accounting and while the court was proceeding with the case, a continuance being had, the bishop and the priest took the case to Rome and tried it before the college of cardinals, condemned these American citizens in Rhode Island, and the decree ordered that the newspaper belonging to one of those citizens should cease to be published, a newspaper run by an American citizen of the Catholic faith.

"The decree ordered Catholics to stop supporting his paper and excommunicated those people and condemned them in their absence—American citizens. That was done in a foreign country by a foreign potentate. Do you agree with me that that was wrong?" He said, "I do."

Mr. President, we have got to appeal to the young Catholics of America. They do not know the trouble that is awaiting them unless they wake up and inform themselves and face about. The priests must be made to know that they can not control America. We are not going to permit the Pope to have and control America. This is the American Government, a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people, not a government by the Pope and for the Pope, and it never will be such a government.

Mr. President, the Pope claims that he is above all authority on this earth, and Catholics hold that the will of the Pope is the supreme law of the world and they hold that the supreme duty of all Catholics is to do the will of the Pope. Then, if the Pope wills that the church is above the government and he is the ruler of the world, what are we to do and say in the Government of the United States when a case like the one in Rhode Island comes before us? Does it mean anything to have your flag pulled down and the Roman cross flown above it when religious services are being held by Protestants on a ship? Does it mean anything to lower Old Glory and run the cross above it when religious services are being held by Jews upon a ship? Does it mean anything to lower that flag which represents our sovereignty, the thing by which we are recognized in the family of nations, the thing that is the emblem of both civil and religious liberty? Does it mean anything to pull it down and put another banner or pennant above it? It means much to millions of patriotic Americans.

Later on I am going to ask you to pass my resolution, which simply provides that the United States flag shall be permitted to fly in its own right on its own staff on American battleships.

Let me say before I take my seat, if Senators will not vote to change the custom, men will come here in your places who will vote to keep our flag flying first and uppermost on its own staff.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senate voted an amendment on the naval appropriation bill providing for the extension of the dry dock at Bremerton, Wash. This was recommended by the Budget Bureau and strongly recommended by the Navy Department. It is felt to be absolutely essential for the care of the Navy. While I do not profess to be an expert in matters of that kind it seems to me under the conditions that the amendment should have been agreed to. As I understand it, there is no Government dock in the Pacific that can dock the two airplane carriers which are on the Pacific. There is a private dock in which they can be docked, but if any substantial repairs are to be made on a vessel there are not the facilities connected with the private dock, as I understand it, that can make such repairs. So that our Navy, so far as the necessity of these ships is concerned, might be in a very unfortunate condition.

In addition to caring for those two vessels, however, I think the extension of dry dock No. 2 is necessary from other standpoints. If the dry dock should be extended a little bit farther, then when there is a congestion of vessels needing repairs two vessels could be put into the dry dock at once and the necessary work done upon them. It seems to me that it is very unfortunate that the extension is not provided for.

I know that as a general rule conferees are not permitted to disclose what takes place in conference, but I would like a brief statement from the chairman of the Senate conferees as to the main reasons why the amendment should not have been agreed to, and whether there is any likelihood of a different conclusion in regard to it hereafter.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I can only say to the Senator, without revealing what went on in conference, that the Senate conferees were very strong in their insistence upon the amendment, and we tried in every way possible to have it agreed to, but we could do nothing with the House conferees. I propose to do everything I can to see that the dry dock is extended so that we shall have at least one Government-owned dock on the Pacific coast that will take care of our largest ships.

Mr. JONES. The Senator, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, has given a great deal of study to matters of this kind and I take it he appreciates the importance of the addition.

Mr. HALE. I appreciate fully the importance of the matter and I do not intend to have it dropped now permanently, but I can state that at the present time we were unable to do anything because we could not prevail on the House conferees.

Mr. JONES. I am not disposed to unduly delay the conference report. I feel very much like doing it, but I appreciate the situation of the conferees and the situation that confronts us in case the bill should fail, and I so feel regretfully that we have to accept the final decision of the conferees.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to say that I agree with everything my colleague has said and that I do not understand the reasoning by which the conferees would eliminate an amendment providing such a badly needed addition for naval purposes as this $400,000 appropriation would have provided.

Mr. HALE. I can only say to the Senator that the Senate conferees were as strong as they could be for the amendment, but we could not allow the bill to fail and we could not get the House conferees to yield.

Mr. DILL. Is there any provision in the bill for a similar construction of any kind of dock for naval purposes on the Pacific coast?

Mr. HALE. No; there is not.

Mr. DILL. While I have the Senator's attention may I ask what happened to the amendment providing an increase in wages for the technical employees, in which amendment the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is also interested?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I had risen to ask the same question.

Mr. HALE. That item was stricken out. We made a fight to have it retained, but we could not get the House conferees to agree.

Mr. DILL. I think that is as serious, if not more serious, than the other grievance.

Mr. HALE. The Senator knows that in a conference neither the Senate nor the House can have its way completely. We yielded on certain things and the House yielded on certain things.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, we find that is very true, but the trouble is that we also find that the Senate always yields. Some of us are getting rather tired of the practice.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; the Senate does not always yield.

Mr. GLASS. Here was a proposition to make an almost inappreciable readjustment of a very great difference in the pay received in the bureau here in Washington by draftsmen and the pay received by draftsmen in navy yards. I say it was almost inappreciable. It was such a small readjustment that I felt almost ashamed to ask for so little. But now the Senate conferees have surrendered again to the House. Some of us are getting tired of the process. I would like to inquire of the Senator if this is a complete conference report?

Mr. HALE. This is a complete conference report except as to certain items on which the conferees agreed and which under the rules of the House have to be voted on there under a separate vote.

Mr. GLASS. I suppose whatever the House does will be the final action. This body apparently no longer counts in legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I believe that the Senate conferees have been too ready to yield on the dry dock amendment and the draftsmen's pay amendment. I do not for my own part see any justification for the attitude of the other branch of the legislative body in refusing to allow these technical men to have at least some increase compared to what they are entitled to when their pay is compared with that of men in the service here in Washington.

Mr. HALE. I may say without violating any confidence that we tried to do that, but we could not get any agreement at all on the part of the House conferees. In order to reach an agreement we had to yield.

Mr. DILL. It seems to me the other House might as well begin to realize its responsibility and that the Senate conferees might well impress upon them that they must necessarily yield on some things. In a matter that is so just as the appropriation which has been stricken out it seems to me the Senate conferees could have held out on that item at least.

Mr. HALE. We left the matter with the understanding on the part of the conferees that if there is an inequity in the pay which these men receive, the subject should be looked into very carefully next year and corrected.

Mr. DILL. I do not see how there can be any question of the lack of equity; I do not see how there could be any doubt about it on the part of anybody.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator from Washington, and that is the reason why I was in favor of the amendment and reported it.

Mr. DILL. The Senator's amendment did not give them equity, but it did give some small relief and recognized an inequality to exist. I do not want to be put in the attitude of holding up a great appropriation bill over a matter of this kind, but I really think that the only way that some of these questions can be satisfactorily adjusted will be for some of us to take the position that these bills can not pass unless these inequalities are removed. I do not want, in the closing days of the session, to take that attitude, but I feel that the Senate conferees have been altogether too ready to yield on a matter that is so vital to these employees.

Mr. HALE. No, Mr. President; we were very far from being ready to yield. We simply yielded because we had to do so.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I wish to say that I agree with my colleague, the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] with reference to the other amendment, and I think that we ought to insist when this bill again comes in that action be taken with reference to both those amendments. The next time the bill goes to conference containing these provisions I hope the conferees will take a firm position, especially with reference to the claim as to pay of the draftsmen, which I think was demonstrated very clearly before our committee to be very deserving and very just. I think the time is coming when the Senate may take a firm stand with reference to these matters, so that the responsibility will rest at least as much upon the House of Representatives as upon the Senate for the failure to pass a bill of this character. If the House of Representatives is ready to assume the responsibility of defeating an appropriation bill because of certain amendments which the Senate, after very careful study and consideration, has added to it, let the House take that responsibility.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington will recall that the difference in salary between these two classes of Government employees aggregated nearly $800,000, and we compromised the controversy by accepting a pitiful $150,000.

Mr. JONES. With the hope, however, that the balance would be taken care of in a year or two.

Mr. GLASS. We propose by progressive steps gradually to reduce the disparity.

Mr. JONES. That is correct.

Mr. GLASS. The Senate amendment involves simply an expenditure of $150,000, whereas it would have required $800,000 properly to adjust the difference.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Virginia is entirely correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I believe that it ought to be stated here in defense of the conferees on the part of the Senate that they were confronted with an insurmountable barrier, and I want to come to the defense of the conferees. I agree with the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Virginia that this is a very important matter and that the amendment proposed by the Senate ought to be incorporated in the law.

We are confronted with the condition of having provided for airplane carriers without a dry dock on the Pacific coast where they may be repaired. It might mean the difference between success and failure in a time of war.

However, Senators will remember that our conferees were confronted with the fact that on the 4th day of March next this Congress will be dead; it will have adjourned. This is a "lame-duck" Congress, and we have not been able to get an amendment to the Constitution to eradicate that evil. The House of Representatives is responsible and has been for six years for that failure. We are confronted every two years with this condition. This is only another illustration of the illogical position in which the country as well as the Congress is placed every two years. We shall never recover from this, Senators, until some of these bills are allowed to die, and Senators quit surrendering and let the responsibility fall upon those who are responsible for the failure of the "lame-duck" amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I should like to make some inquiries concerning the possible and probable result of the conference report on this bill. As I understand, the Senate conferees have yielded to the House conferees on the provision with regard to dry docks on the western coast. I understand that those dry docks, without the extension proposed by the Senate, will not accommodate the larger vessels, especially the airplane carriers. I also understand that those dry docks are a part of navy yards owned by the Government of the United States on the western coast. If I am mistaken in my conclusions, I hope the Senator from Maine will correct me.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the dry dock on Puget Sound is at the navy yard at Bremerton.

Mr. BLAINE. And it is not sufficiently commodious to accommodate the larger vessels?

Mr. HALE. It is large enough to accommodate any of the vessels of the fleet with the exception of the two new aircraft carriers, the Lexington and the Saratoga.

Mr. BLAINE. But neither one of those dry docks will accommodate two cruisers at the same time?

Mr. HALE. I do not think they will accommodate two cruisers.

Mr. BLAINE. Or two ships?

Mr. HALE. It was figured that with the proposed extension, this dry dock would accommodate one battleship and two destroyers.

Mr. BLAINE. That is my information.

I also understand that the question of whether or not every alternate cruiser is to be constructed in Government navy yards has not as yet been settled by the conferees.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the amendment which the Senate adopted, the so-called labor amendment, has been agreed to by the House conferees, but under the rules of the House a separate vote has to be taken on it by that body.

Mr. BLAINE. But the so-called Dallinger amendment has not been agreed to or that part of the Dallinger amendment that affects this appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. The conferees have agreed as to every amendment that was added in the Senate. The conferees have accepted the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. The House conferees?

Mr. HALE. The conferees on the part of the House have accepted the Senate amendment as to that.

Mr. BLAINE. Do I understand that when this report goes back to conference that a movement is on foot to eliminate the Dallinger amendment or the requirements of the Dallinger amendment as inserted in the bill authorizing naval construction?

Mr. HALE. No; the Senate amendment specifically provides—

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as altering or repealing the proviso contained in section 1 of the act to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels approved February 13, 1929, which provides that the first and each succeeding alternate cruiser upon which work is undertaken, together with the main engines, armor, and armament shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States except such material or parts as are not customarily manufactured in such Government plants.

The conferees have agreed to the Senate provision.

Mr. BLAINE. The House conferees have agreed to that provision?

Mr. HALE. They have.

Mr. BLAINE. Then what is the specific disagreement with reference——

Mr. HALE. There is no disagreement but the amendment has to be voted on in the House under the rules of that body.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not finished my question. What is the specific disagreement with respect to the provision concerning wages of those employed in the navy yards?

Mr. HALE. There was another amendment that was added on the floor of the Senate providing $154,000 for increasing the pay of draftsmen. That was a separate amendment and had nothing to do with the labor provision. The amendment in regard to the draftsmen was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand this is only a partial report.

Mr. HALE. No; it is a full report.

Mr. BLAINE. It is a full report subject to the action of the House on four amendments which under the House rules require a separate vote?

Mr. HALE. Yes; subject to the action of the House.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand.

Mr. HALE. But it is a complete agreement on the part of the conferees.

Mr. BLAINE. Should the House action be adverse then will the Senate conferees——

Mr. HALE. Then, the bill will go back for a further conference.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senate conferees strenuously refuse to recede from the position of the Senate?

Mr. HALE. On what?

Mr. BLAINE. On the question in dispute on which the House has to vote.

Mr. HALE. I can not tell until that question comes up. I do not think there is much chance of that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if I understand the parliamentary situation——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the parliamentary situation, if this conference report shall be agreed to everything in dispute is settled except amendment No. 17.

Mr. HALE. No; there were four amendments that have to go to the House.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but the amendment which the Senator from Wisconsin is talking about is included in the conference report and if the conference report is agreed to that question is settled.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator is referring to the appropriation for draftsmen, that is settled in this conference report.

Mr. BLAINE. That is settled.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. I had no desire to retard the progress of this conference report. My only object in making these inquiries was to be certain of that which we are going into when this conference report is adopted, if it is adopted.

THE RADIO COMMISSION

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement, not directly on this subject, which will take about five minutes.

On Monday last I made some remarks about the District Court of Appeals and its attitude toward the Government side of the radio case, and said at that time that I thought the court's action was indefensible. I still believe that. In fact, I think the court's action constitutes reversible error; but I desire now to say a word about the decision.

The District Court of Appeals in this case applied the rule of common sense in furnishing radio service to the people of this country, as against the theories of radio engineers, when it overruled the Radio Commission in the WGY case on Monday. This decision lays down two vital principles of radio jurisprudence: First, that no station has any property or vested right to the air; second, that the Radio Commission's regulations and rulings must be reasonable and in the public interest.

The decision wisely points out that the slight interference for radio listeners at long distances from WGY in Schenectady and KGO in Oakland is not to be compared to the loss of radio service in the suburbs by listeners among the 2,000,000 people who live within a reasonable listening distance of WGY.

Radio engineers maintain that there must be only one station on the air for each channel. They argue that the interference area is such that the people could not hear either WGY in Schenectady or KGO in Oakland; yet, owing to the injunction granted by the court, those two stations have been operating simultaneously, and the members of the Radio Commission tell me that there has not been a single complaint of interference. This fact in itself is a most complete answer to engineers who claimed these two stations could not operate at the same time and give efficient radio service.

If radio channels were unlimited in number, it would be all right to follow the theories of the radio engineers; but the fact is that there are only about 85 or 90 free channels for radio, and there are several hundred stations on the air and other stations are asking for licenses, and communities are asking for service. The commission undoubtedly can serve the public interest much more fully and satisfactorily by keeping down the power of radio stations and giving more stations and more communities the right to have local radio service. I hope the commission will profit by the order of the court.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. In just a moment.

When we passed the radio law we feared that the commission might become so engrossed in theories and engineering arguments that they would forget the public interest, and that their rulings might sometimes be unreasonable and arbitrary, and for that reason we gave the District Court of Appeals the power it has exercised in the hope that it would protect the public interest just as it has done in this case. So, from that standpoint, I think that the District Court of Appeals has served a real need in the radio situation. I think the court should be commended for applying the rule of common sense and calling the commission back to the purpose of the radio law—namely, to give as many people as possible efficient radio service, regardless of these engineering theories that do not work in practice.

Now I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am much interested in the statement made by the Senator from Washington. To my mind, this decision is very helpful to the radio cause. In the first place, it makes it clear, as the Senator from Washington has stated, that these stations do not have vested rights. That is very clear from this language:

The construction of plaintiff's plant and its operation under the license obtained prior to the act of February 23, 1927, did not create property rights which may be asserted against the regulatory power of the United States if that power is properly restricted.

This language was quoted from the United States district court, and appears to be accepted by the court in its decision.

To my mind, that is a very important, far-reaching decision and makes it clear that Congress had the right to take charge of the air. I hope that part of the decision will be confirmed. Of course, there is a further point in the decision, which, to my mind, indicates very clearly that it is a mistake for the same body which administers the law to pass upon its acts.

I have the feeling that this decision indicates, as is stated in the decision, that the commission failed to recognize the importance of the public convenience, interest, or necessity. In my judgment, if the commission had been a purely appellate body, as the law contemplated it should be after its first year, it would have been more watchful of that particular condition. It would not have been swayed by the engineering problems which were dealt with in the administrative acts of the commission. Of course, when the matter was finally brought from the commission acting as an administrative body to the commission acting as a judicial body, it naturally confirmed the acts that it had done as an administrative body.

So this decision, in my judgment, fully justifies the opinion that many of us have, that there should be an absolute separation of the two functions of radio control, so as to have the administrative control worked out by the engineers of the commission, and then to have these larger things having to do with the public convenience, interest, or necessity, and all legal rights acted upon through appeal to the commission acting as an appellate body.

Mr. DILL. I want to say to the Senator, in reply to that, that the trouble is that under the law, until the commission has laid down the principles of allocation fully, the duties of the Department of Commerce are not administrative; they are legislative and judicial. The work of the commission has been largely legislative and judicial, and until these decisions are made there is no administrative work as such to be compared with the legislative and judicial work; and if this function goes back to the Department of Commerce now, then the decision such as was reversed in this case will be made in the first instance by the Department of Commerce, when these decisions should be made in the first instance by some such body as the Radio Commission.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me further——

Mr. DILL. I have finished.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. Hoover pointed out very clearly in his testimony that it is necessary to have an administrative body deal with these things which are purely technical, and then that the judicial body should determine on appeal what should be done further in the matter.

I observe that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is somewhat restless. Does he want to go on with his conference report now?

Mr. HALE. I hope to get a vote on it.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be very glad to have that done.

ADDRESS BY DR. FRANKLIN FORD

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Mr. Franklin Ford, of New York, on Washington's Birthday.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ANNIVERSARY OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

To-night we honor the memory of the greatest American, George Washington, the founder of the American Nation. His life and his character offer so much for comment and for eulogy that we can not adequately cover it all to-night. We may picture him as a boy who could not tell a lie; we may see him as a youth, daring to mount and ride the unbroken horse belonging to his father, and succeeding; we may see him as a young surveyor in his native province of Virginia, but to-night we will present an aspect of George Washington which is not usually to be found, namely, his record as a Protestant.

George Washington was an ardent Freemason, and in his young manhood was grand master of Alexandria Lodge, of Alexandria, Va. He was thoroughly taught in the principles of Freemasonry, and accordingly believed in freedom of speech, the free press, liberal democratic forms of government, and universal, free education, which is to-day embodied in our public-school system. Of the Masonic craft, Washington said: "Freemasonry is a fraternity whose liberal principles are founded upon the immutable laws of truth and justice, and whose grand obligation is to promote the happiness of the human race."

Washington was a man of broad culture and had a thorough knowledge of history. He studied the political institutions of the Old World and recognized that the European system, based upon the fictitious "divine right" of the monarch to rule over subjects, was the great opponent of the rising idea of young America, which was government by the people through popular suffrage. As a Freemason, he was well aware that the chief of all "divine-right" systems was the Roman Catholic organization, headed by the triple crowned Pope; also that the Vatican was a bitter enemy of Freemasonry. As we know, various Popes have condemned this patriotic order. For example, Pope Leo XIII in his encyclical letter against Freemasons dated April 20, 1884, makes the objection to the craft that Masons believe in the separation of Church and State. This is expressed in his words, which I quote from page 90 of his Great Encyclical Letters, as issued by Benziger Bros., under the imprimatur or approval of Cardinal Farley:

"In those matters which regard religion let it be seen how the sect of the Freemasons acts, especially where it is more free to act without restraint, and then let anyone judge whether in fact it does not wish to carry out the policy of the Naturalists. By a long and persevering labor, they endeavor to bring about this result—namely, that the office and authority of the [Roman Catholic] Church may become of no account in the civil State; and for this same reason they declare to the people and contend that [Roman Catholic] Church and State ought to be altogether disunited. By this means they reject from the laws and from the commonwealth the wholesome influence of the Catholic religion; and they consequently imagine that States ought to be constituted without any regard for the laws and precepts of the [Roman Catholic] Church."

Pope Leo XIII further condemns Masonry because the order believes that all men are free and equal, that no one has a divine right to rule over them without their consent, and that government should be by the consent of the governed. On this point, hear these reactionary expressions of the so-called Vicar of Christ, Pope Leo XIII, from page 96 of his volume of letters, from the same encyclical condemning Freemasonry:

"Then come their doctrines of politics, in which the Naturalists lay down that all men have the same right, and are in every respect of equal and like condition; that each one is naturally free; that no one has the right to command another; that it is an act of violence to require men to obey any authority other than that which is obtained from themselves. According to this, therefore, all things belong to the free people; power is held by the command or permission of the people, so that, when the popular will changes, rulers may lawfully be deposed; and the source of all rights and civil duties is either in the multitude or in the governing authority when this is constituted according to the latest doctrines. It is held also that the State should be without God; that in the various forms of religion there is no reason why one should have precedence of another; and that they are all to occupy the same place.

"That these doctrines are equally acceptable to the Freemasons, and that they would wish to constitute States according to this example and model, is too well known to require proof."

George Washington, as a Master Mason, was well aware of the traditional attitude of the Papacy in condemnation of Masonic principles, for the Popes of his time condemned Freemasonry, as Leo XIII did a century later, and he understood that the Roman Catholic organization, with its political allies on various thrones in Europe, was an enemy of American principles of freedom, liberty, and separation of Church and State. His devotion to Freemasonry persisted throughout his entire life, and when he laid the cornerstone of the Capitol he did so in Masonic regalia and with Masonic rites, thus dedicating this country to liberty and free government, in contrast with the papal system of rule by so-called divine right. The oath of office, as our first President, was administered to Washington by Chancellor Livingston here in New York, April 30, 1789, on a Bible borrowed from the Masonic Lodge of St. John. This Bible, I believe, is still preserved to-day by the Masons.

George Washington is on record regarding the Roman Catholic question, as I shall now relate, so that these statements are not matters of mere opinion but of historic fact.

King George III of England, to whom the united English colonies of America attributed the oppressions of which they complained in the Declaration of Independence, was born in the home of a Roman Catholic, the Duke of Norfolk, and educated by another Romanist, the Earl of Bute. When he ascended the British throne, the Earl of Bute was his chief counselor and minister. The administration which precipitated the Revolutionary War was controlled by Roman Catholics. During the entire struggle, the heads of the British War Department, Viscount Barrington and Mr. Charles Jenkinson, were Roman Catholics. The tyrannical spirit of the administration of George III was a result of this reactionary Roman Catholic cabinet.

In the spring of 1774, this Romish administration in England procured the passage of an act establishing the Roman Catholic Church in the Province of Quebec. This act occasioned consternation and great resentment in the American Colonies. George Washington, Samuel Adams, Patrick Henry, Alexander Hamilton, and other colonial leaders, roundly condemned the Quebec act as a menace to the liberty of the American Colonies, and protested against the ascendency of the Roman Catholic Earl of Bute as minister of George III.

The First Continental Congress met at Philadelphia on October 24, 1774, and shortly afterwards in an address to the people of Great Britain, which is now one of our historic State papers, declared:

"At the conclusion of the late war [1763] * * * which was succeeded by an inglorious peace, formed under the auspices of a minister of principles, and of a family unfriendly to the Protestant cause, and inimical to liberty—we say at this period, and under the influence of that man, a plan for enslaving your fellow subjects in America was concerted and has ever since been pertinaciously carrying into execution." (Journal of First Continental Congress, p. 40.)

Speaking of the Quebec act, the First Continental Congress passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the following acts of Parliament are infringements and violations of the rights of the colonists, and that the repeal of them is necessary, in order to restore harmony between Great Britain and the American Colonies, viz: * * * the act passed in the last session of Parliament establishing the Roman Catholic religion in the Province of Quebec, abolishing the equitable system of English laws, and erecting a tyranny there to the great danger from the total dissimilarity of religion, law, and government, of the neighboring British colonies, by the assistance of whose blood and treasure the said country was conquered from France." (Declaration of Rights, by the First Continental Congress, p. 31 of Journal.)

Bear in mind that George Washington was the leading spirit in these declarations of the First Continental Congress condemning Romanism in Quebec. The address to the people of Great Britain of 1774 was personally signed by George Washington, as well as the other members of that great body of American patriots. The address strongly condemned the establishment of the Roman Catholic Church in Quebec, in the following language, which I quote verbatim from this great State paper, which is available to any student in the Public Library:

"Now mark the ministerial plan for enslaving us:

"Well aware that such hardy attempts to take our property from us, to deprive us of that valuable right of trial by jury, to seize our ports, to destroy our charters, and change our forms of government, would occasion, and had occasioned great discontent in the Colonies, which might produce opposition to these measures, an act was passed to protect, indemnify, and screen from punishment, such as might be guilty even of murder, in endeavoring to carry their oppressive edicts into execution; and by another act the Dominion of Canada is to be so extended, modeled, and governed, as that by being disunited from us, detached from our interests, by civil as well as religious prejudices—that by their numbers daily swelling by Catholic emigrants from Europe, and by their devotion to administration so friendly to their religion, they might become formidable to us; and on occasion be fit instruments in the hands of power, to reduce the ancient, free Protestant Colonies to the same state of slavery with themselves.

"This was evidently the object of the act, and in this view, being extremely dangerous to our liberty and quiet, we can not forbear complaining of it as hostile to British America. Superadded to these considerations, we can not help deploring the unhappy condition to which it has reduced the many English settlers, who, encouraged by the royal proclamation, promising the enjoyment of all their rights, have purchased estates in that country. They are now the subjects of an arbitrary government, deprived of trial by jury, and when imprisoned can not claim the benefit of the habeas corpus act, that great bulwark and palladium of English liberty. Nor can we suppress our astonishment that a British Parliament should ever consent to establish in that country a religion that has deluged your island with blood, and dispersed impiety, bigotry, persecution, murder, and rebellion through every part of the world."

George Washington, therefore, was clear in his mind on the question of Roman Catholicism as an enemy of political liberty, as were the other Members of the Continental Congress. Alexander Hamilton, his chief adviser and our first Secretary of the Treasury, likewise condemned the establishment of Romanism in Quebec, and in a public letter to the people of New York, issued in 1775, he expressed his apprehension in the following words, describing the future condition of Quebec under the Government of Roman Catholic priestcraft. Note that his protest against Roman Catholic immigration is virtually the same as has been voiced by other patriots from colonial days to the present. The following are Hamilton's words:

"The nature of its [Quebec's] civil government will herewith put a stop to emigration from other parts of the British dominions thither, and from all other free countries. The preeminent advantages secured to the Roman Catholic religion will discourage all Protestant settlers, of whatever nation; and on these accounts the Province will be settled and inhabited by none but Papists. If lenity and moderation are observed in administering the laws, the natural advantages of this fertile infant country, united to the indulgence given to their religion, will attract droves of emigrants from all the Roman Catholic States in Europe, and our Colonies (to the south and east of Canada) in time will find themselves encompassed with innumerable hosts of neighbors disaffected to them, both because of difference in religion and government [who] will be the voluntary instrument of ambition, and will be ready at all times to second the oppressive designs of the administration against the other parts of the empire." (The Thirteen Colonies. Hamilton's Works, vol. 1, pp. 186–187.)

The oppressions of the Romanist administration of Great Britain continued, and the Revolutionary War broke out in 1776, with George Washington as Commander in Chief of the American Army. Washington's genius as a military tactician carried the day against forces superior in number, equipment, and training. This period of his history presents him in heroic colors. Whether we see him on his horse leading the dangerous charge at the Battle of Princeton, rallying his scattered forces to victory amid a rain of British bullets, or whether we see him kneeling in the snow at Valley Forge praying to God for support in a righteous cause, his nobility of character, strength of purpose, and gifts of unselfish leadership stand forth in clear light.

An historic incident of the Revolutionary period is little known. This was the effort to poison Washington, planned by a treacherous group, through the hand of one Thomas Hickey, reported to be a Roman Catholic of Irish extraction. Indeed, the number of Roman Catholics in the British Army prosecuting war against the United Colonies was large. The war was unpopular among a large section of the British people, and to carry on the struggle the administration was compelled to pass a law enabling Roman Catholics to serve in the army. Before that time papists had been prevented by law from serving in the British Army, because of suspicion as to their allegiance to the government, in contrast to their allegiance to the Vatican. Gen. Charles Lee, of Washington's staff, has testified that the ministerial troops in America were "composed of the scum of the Irish Catholics." Those are his own words.

Attempts upon the lives of American Presidents have been numerous, and Roman Catholic responsibility therefor, in a number of instances, is well known. The attempt upon Washington's life is known to very few. The facts are related in the official magazine of the Daughters of the American Revolution for January, 1918, in an article written by Augusta Huiell Seaman. Her article is of great historic interest, and so I quote it as follows:

"In June of 1776 General Washington arrived in New York, after the successful campaign that had resulted in the British evacuating Boston and sailing for Halifax. The Commander in Chief at first selected the Kennedy House, No. 1 Broadway, as his headquarters. But summers in the city, then even as now, were at best hot and trying periods. Washington soon removed to Richmond Hill, and there established himself with his military family, among whom was young Aaron Burr.

"What arrangements he may have made with Madame Mortier [the chatelaine of the Richmond Hill estate] are not known. She may have offered him the hospitality of her home, which is highly unlikely, being, no doubt, a staunch Tory. Or, more probably, she may have removed in high dudgeon to the congenial company of Tory relatives and friends, leaving her home at his mercy. Whichever may have been the case, there is no doubt that ample compensation was made her for the use of her domicile. Washington was punctilious in such matters.

"While in residence at Richmond Hill, his excellency was fated to be the center of a singular plot, and had one of his narrowest escapes from death.

"It seems that Tory Governor Tryon, having found it convenient for obvious reasons to take up his abode on the British man-of-war Asia, lying in the harbor, decided on a scheme that would simultaneously soothe his ruffled feelings and deal a smashing blow to the new-fledged Continental Army. It was a well-laid plot, wherein at a duly selected moment the Tories were to break down Kings Bridge, blow up the magazines, spike the guns, and massacre every American field officer. The chief item of this little surprise party, however, was that Washington should be killed or delivered over alive to the enemy. Governor Tryon even managed to corrupt one of Washington's own life guards, a man named Thomas Hickey.

"The scheme was cleverly worked out and bade fair to be a success. But, as usual, there was a woman in the case. Thomas Hickey was not above being susceptible to feminine charm, especially when that charm was embodied in the person of pretty Phoebe Fraunces! She was the daughter of the well-known Sam Fraunces of tavern fame, always a loyal admirer of Washington. When the general came to take up his headquarters at Richmond Hill, Sam at once proffered his daughter's services as housekeeper, an offer that was no doubt gladly accepted. Thus it was that Hickey found ample opportunity to carry on a flirtation with Miss Fraunces. So infatuated did he become at length that he committed the indiscretion of confiding to her the conspiracy and beseeching her assistance.

"It is altogether probable that Miss Phoebe had no particular admiration for Thomas—how, indeed, could she?—and her loyalty to Washington was almost a religion. But, shocked and disgusted as she must have been, she was astute enough to feign an absorption in Hickey's interests that completely hoodwinked her lover. She even went so far as to mix with her own hand the poison in the green peas and serve them to His Excellency on the fateful day of the plot's culmination.

"But she had previously sought and obtained a long interview with the General, and it is needless to say that the peas remained uneaten. Hickey and 20 others were arrested. The traitorous life guardsman was court-martialed and sentenced to pay the full penalty of his treachery. He was hung in Rutger's Square, with the full approval of Washington, and with a gaping audience of 20,000 to witness his end."

Here ends the quotation from Mrs. Seaman's account in the Daughters of the American Revolution magazine, and thus we see how a quick-witted and loyal American girl, Phoebe Fraunces, saved the life of General Washington from the cowardly and treacherous poison plot of Thomas Hickey. Fraunces's Tavern still stands in lower New York City, as a museum and patriotic shrine.

Washington's greatness is further illuminated by his steadfast refusal to yield one iota from democratic principles. After the Revolution had ceased, on October 17, 1781, with the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, a group of reactionaries conceived the idea of destroying the democratic movement for government by the people, and endeavored to establish our Government as a monarchy, with George Washington as the king. The conspirators drew up a long letter dealing with the financial troubles of the country, the defective political organization which had hampered the conduct of the Revolutionary War, expressed disapproval of the democratic idea, and ended with the suggestion of an American crown. Washington received this extraordinary letter when he was encamped at Newburgh-on-the-Hudson. He sat at his table when he had recovered from the shock and wrote the following letter. In all his correspondence, there is nothing more direct, strong, or more cold:

NEWBURGH, 22 May, 1782.

SIR: With a mixture of great surprise and astonishment, I have read with attention the sentiments you have submitted to my perusal. Be assured, sir, no occurrence in the course of the war has given me more painful sensations than your information of there being such ideas existing in the Army, as you have expressed, and as I must view with abhorrence and reprehend with severity. For the present the communication of them will rest in my own bosom, unless some further agitation of the matter shall make a disclosure necessary.

I am much at a loss to conceive what part of my conduct could have given encouragement to an address which to me seems big with the greatest mischiefs that can befall my country. If I am not deceived in the knowledge of myself, you could not have found a person to whom your schemes are more disagreeable. At the same time, in justice to my own feelings, I must add that no man possesses a more sincere wish to see ample justice done to the Army than I do; and, as far as my powers and influence, in a constitutional way, extend, they shall be employed to the utmost to effect it, should there be any occasion. Let me conjure you, then, if you have any regard for your country, concern for yourself or posterity, or respect for me, to banish these thoughts from your mind and never communicate, as from yourself or anyone else, a sentiment of the like nature.

I am, sir, your most obedient servant,

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Such was George Washington's repudiation of the suggestion that any citizen of America be subject to a crowned head. Yet there are still to-day, in the democratic United States, people supporting and bowing down to a triple-crowned head, who surrounds himself with all the mummery and flummery of human royalty and extends the pontifical toe to be humbly kissed by his subjects.

From his clear vision of the inevitable conflict between American democracy and Romanized European autocracy in government, Washington saw that the United States must therefore beware of European entanglements. Such institutions as the League of Nations and the World Court would have been anathema to the spirit of the Father of his Country. In his great Farewell Address, he warns us in these words:

"Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote relation; why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice? * * * Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government."

Thus, we honor to-night the memory of a great man, a great patriot, a great military genius, a great democrat, a great President, a great Freemason, and lastly, a great Protestant.

In closing, we reverently speak again the tribute paid to George Washington by that humble backwoodsman but great servant of liberty, justice, and honor, Abraham Lincoln, who said:

"Washington is the mightiest name on earth—long since mightiest in the cause of civil liberty; still mightiest in the moral reformation. On that name a eulogy is expected. It can not be. To add brightness to the sun or glory to the name of Washington is alike impossible. Let none attempt it. In solemn awe pronounce the name, and in its naked, deathless splendor, leave it shining on."

AMERICAN COTTON VERSUS EAST INDIAN JUTE

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that excerpts from statements before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives made by Representatives Cox and JONES, Mr. McCampbell, and myself as to the desirability of substituting American-grown cotton for jute may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpts referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN COTTON VERSUS EAST INDIAN JUTE

[Excerpts from the remarks of Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL, of Louisiana, before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, February 4, 1929, together with excerpts from the testimony of Members of Congress and others as to the desirability of substituting American-grown cotton for jute; and a comparison of the wages, standards of living, and other factors in British India and the United States]

Senator RANSDELL. I do not think I overstate the fact in saying that the crisis now confronting the American cotton industry is the most serious in all its history, and that if we can loosen the strangle hold by which its East Indian competitor is slowly choking it to death, a greater service will be rendered the small American cotton farmer, now barely able to coax a hard living from the soil, than anything that has happened since Eli Whitney invented the cotton gin. Our present situation results from the policy we have pursued in the past of admitting jute and its products free of import duties, or practically free; and it has brought the American cotton farmer, as well as the American cotton manufacturer, to a point where that policy must be changed or they will inevitably perish. Under the proposed amendment to the jute schedule, which I have introduced, entries under the free list, as now provided for, would be eliminated, and in lieu thereof a duty of 3 cents a pound would be levied on "waste bagging and waste sugar-sack cloth; jute and jute butts, not dressed or manufactured in any manner and not specially provided for."

ANALYSIS OF RANSDELL AMENDMENT

Under the policy pursued in the past this material has entered free, under the mistaken idea that the cotton farmer could thereby secure a cheaper covering for his crop. As a result millions of pounds have been imported annually to fabricate cotton bagging, and the practical effect has been to leave unused other millions of pounds of domestic low-grade cotton that should have been utilized for this purpose.

The latest complete data dealing with these imports covers the entries for the calendar year 1927 and was prepared by the Tariff Commission. It shows the quantity, the value, the duty collected, and the actual or equivalent ad valorem rate of duty under each of the paragraphs dealing with jute. This table shows that during the calendar year 1927 we admitted free 207,009,600 pounds of "waste bagging, sugar-sack cloth, jute, and jute butts not dressed or manufactured," the equivalent of 414,000 bales of 500 pounds, and the appraised value was given at $12,154,074. The Tariff Commission table for the same calendar year shows that we imported some 2,900,000 pounds of jute sliver, yarn and roving, twist twine, and cordage, valued at $351,556.

This is one of the least important paragraphs dealing with jute duties, and I only refer to it now to explain the amendment that I have suggested. The changes in rates, as proposed by my amendments, on these manufactured products, are in harmony with the proposed removal of jute and jute butts from the free list. These jute imports are very largely the output of the cheap agricultural labor in India, which receives even less wages than the labor in the Indian jute mills. This especially applies to cordage which is provided for under this paragraph. In a report on the jute industry of India made by the Department of Commerce while Mr. Hoover was Secretary, and published in Commerce Reports for August 15, 1927, the statement is made that "labor is so cheap in the jute sections of India that no attempt has been made to introduce labor-saving devices, most farming being carried on with teams of bullocks and wooden plows. * * * Hand spinning of jute twine is still carried on as a cottage industry throughout the jute-growing districts."

It is with paragraph 1008, however, that we are principally concerned. Again using the data furnished by the Tariff Commission for the year 1927, we find that the jute fabrics entered, consisting mostly of burlaps, amounted to 568,707,735 pounds, the equivalent of 1,113,000 bales of 500 pounds, valued at $67,236,554; and this represented goods which could easily have been substituted by cotton grown and fabricated in America. In this paragraph I have suggested striking out the words "1 cent a pound" and substituting in lieu thereof "10 cents," which is not an abnormal figure if the cotton farmer who produces his crop under American standards of living and wages, and the American mill worker are to be placed on terms of equality with their Indian competitors.

With reference to bags, bagging, and gunny cloth, there were imported under paragraph 1019 during the year we have been considering 111,307,946 square yards, and there is hardly anyone who would have the hardihood to deny that if cotton could have been substituted it would have been more desirable in every respect. The bags or sacks, bagging, and gunny cloth brought in under paragraph 1018 on which a duty of 1 cent a pound was paid, plus a small ad valorem duty ranging from 10 to 15 per cent, amounted to 37,845,815 pounds, or over 75,000 bales of 500 pounds. Unfortunately the 111,307,496 square yards of these fabrics entered under paragraph 1019 have not been reduced to pounds. It would amount to a very considerable and unwholesome increase of the total equivalent in bales, of this pauper-grown substitute for cotton, with which we have been flooding the American market.

These, in substance, are the amendments I have offered to the jute paragraphs of the existing tariff law. They are based on the enormous wide spread in the standard of living and the costs of production here and in India, and wherever possible I have made use of statistics and other data whose accuracy can not be successfully challenged. We are fortunate, in this instance, to have the official reports of both the British Government and our own, for these data collected in the ordinary course of governmental routine and published annually by the Governments are free from all bias or ex parte influences, and should enable Congress to enact a tariff schedule that will be fair to all conflicting American interests.

INDIAN AGRICULTURE MORE PROFITABLE THAN AMERICAN

For the purpose of the first comparison I will use data supplied by the United States Department of Agriculture on the one hand and by the Secretary of State for India on the other. In order to avoid any unfairness I have selected the decade preceding the World War. During that period the British pound sterling was not debased, nor was the American dollar abnormally inflated. Labor and trade conditions in both America and India were likewise normal, and it will thus be seen that we have a fair basis for comparison. My purpose is to show that the American farmer, with his higher standard of living, greater efficiency, and higher cost of production, is hopelessly outclassed by his East Indian rival, whose return per acre from jute is double that of the American cotton farmer. Last Friday, January 25, I received a letter from Mr. Nils A. Olsen, Chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, in response to a request for data, in which he shows that the average value per acre returned by the American cotton farm during the decade 1904 to 1913, both inclusive, and based on the New Orleans price of cotton, was $21.69 for lint cotton. As against the average yield of $21.69 per acre on the American cotton farm I now propose to show that the Indian ryot enjoys an average return of $41.76 from an acre of jute. Those figures are obtained from the Indian Trade Inquiry-Reports on Jute and Silk, and published under the auspices of the Imperial Institute of London in 1921.

On page 3 of that report is a table showing the market value of produce per acre for rice, wheat, cotton, and jute in India. These figures are given for the 10-year period, 1904–1913, both inclusive, as in the case of the data furnished by our own Department of Agriculture. The results in the British document are published in both Indian and English measures, the Indian maunds being translated into English tons; and the wholesale price is given in Indian rupees and English pounds, shillings, and pence. In translating this English money into our own I have figured the English pound at $4.87, the shilling at 24 cents, and the pence at 2 cents, which was its value during the period in question.

By referring to this table it will be seen that the average return to the East Indian ryot from an acre of land during the period covered was as follows: Rice, $17.69; wheat, $10.16; cotton, $8.07; and jute, $41.76. In other words, the average return per acre to the American cotton farmer during the period under consideration for his lint cotton was $21.59 as compared with an acre return for jute in India of $41.76, or a difference in favor of the East Indian of approximately 93 per cent. Small wonder that the British in their official reports speak of their Indian jute industry as a world monopoly that should be fostered.

In making the above comparison it is fair to say to that the ryot and his family cultivate and harvest about 2½ acres of jute, which, at $41.76 per acre, gives an annual return of $104.40, whereas the upland cotton farmer with the aid of his family cultivates and harvests an average of about 12 acres of cotton, which at $21.89 gives an annual value for the crop of $262.68.

Wages in the cotton fields range from $1.25 to $2 for men, and 75 cents to $1 for women, per day. In addition thereto fairly comfortable houses with garden spots, water, fuel, etc., are furnished them free of cost. A pair of mules with a driver can be hired at from $2.50 to $3 per day. In India on the other hand in the jute fields the man is paid 16 cents per day, the woman is paid nothing, except that she is permitted to carry home for fuel the refuse bark and cores of the plants from which she strips the jute. A pair of bullocks and a man to drive them costs 48 cents per day. It thus appears that the wage of the agricultural male laborers in India is about one-seventh to one-tenth of that of the males of the cotton fields of America and it is impossible to make a comparison between the female cotton laborers in this country who receive a modest wage and the women of India who receive no money. A fair question is, How can the American cotton farmer, whose wages are eight times as great as those of the Indian jute farmer, compete with him, if his commodity is permitted to come into this country free of duty, and how can the American factory worker, whose wages are from nine to ten times as great as those of the jute factory worker in India compete with him if his commodities are permitted to enter America free of duty? The question suggests its own answer. It is impossible to compete under such circumstances, and the only way to save our American farmers and American factory laborers from this unfair pauper competition is to impose proper rates of duty on the raw material and the manufactured products.

SLEDDING COTTON CREATES NEW COMPETITION

So much for the rivalry which the American cotton farmer has been compelled to meet from British India. But that is by no means the only competition he must endure. Almost overnight, or, to be strictly accurate, since this committee drafted the existing tariff law six years ago, he has been confronted with a new and unexpected Frankenstein created within our own borders, which threatens his destruction unless an outlet is provided for the new product. I refer to the system of "sledding cotton" which has transformed millions of acres formerly devoted to grazing cattle in the far West into cotton fields, with a resulting supply, especially of low grades, which are produced at a price with which the farmers in the old Cotton Belt can not hope to compete.

I have stated that much of the sledded cotton is of low grade, but all of it is not of that character. A vast amount of it meets every requirement of the United States cotton standards act, and I for one believe the practice of sledding is not only here to stay, but that the greatest expansion of the American cotton crop in the future will be on those vast western plains which were formerly devoted to grazing cattle or sheep. That part of their cotton crop known as bollies and snaps, which does not meet the standard of spinnable cotton tenderable on contract, is a growing problem in the trade, and many of the best minds who have given thought to the subject are of the opinion that this material furnished a substitute for the enormous supplies of jute that are now brought in annually from British India. While sledding has greatly increased the annual output of American cotton, that growth has been inconsiderable when compared with the enormous expansion of the Indian jute crop. In discussing this phase of the question the Textile World, in its issue of February 2, 1926, page 1380, had this to say:

"To appreciate the growth of the (jute) trade, a glance at the statistics of the crop for the last 50 years will be interesting:

"In 1874 the crop (jute) yielded 1,500,000 bales; in 1884, 3,500,000 bales; in 1894, 5,500,000 bales; in 1904, 7,500,000 bales; and in 1914, 9,500,000 bales.

"In other words, the crop has increased about 2,000,000 bales every decade."

HOW AMERICAN AND INDIAN WAGES COMPARE

The inequalities in the cost of production are even more glaring on the manufacturing than on the agricultural side of the picture. This especially applies to the pittance paid in the jute mills of India as compared with the wages paid in our own mills for the same class of labor.

I have received from the United States Department of Labor a letter giving some statistics on this subject and have also compiled the latest available data from the official records of the Indian government, and I would like to call the attention of the committee to these comparative wages furnished by the United States Department of Labor for the same class of work performed in the Indian mills and our own. The Indian figures are taken from "Prices and Wages in India" (1923, p. 220), and the American figures are taken from the Monthly Labor Review, issued by the United States Department of Labor, and will be found at page 91 of the issue of October, 1928.

The only instance where it is impossible to give the comparative wages paid in the two countries is in the case of "shifters" or child employees, whose average wages, as will be seen by the table, amount to 63 cents per week.

Here is the table:

Occupation	India weekly rates	United States currency	United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, October, 1928
	Rupees
Carding	2.9	$0.83	$17.42
Rovers	5.75	1.65	15.35
Spinners	5	1.43	31.75
Shifters (children)	2.2	.63
Winders	6.3	1.69	15.10
Beamers	7.6	2.15	26.13
Weavers	9.2	2.64	21.07

These figures, in fine, tell the whole industrial story. They explain how the British may well boast of a monopoly of the jute industry; they make clear why American corporations have been dismantling manufacturing plants in this country and transferring their activities to the banks of the Ganges; and, finally, they put the finger on the sore spot of the American textile problem, for while our own mills have been idle and hunger and want have been stalking through the American textile centers, the Indian mills have been enjoying an era of almost unparalleled prosperity. To quote from the issue of the Textile World of February 20, 1926, already cited:

"The growth of the trade in India has been very rapid. There are now over 50,000 looms running in Calcutta, using between five and six million bales of jute annually. Nothing shows the growth so well as the comparison in shipments of the years 1892 and 1924 to this country and Canada: 1892, 40,000,000 yards; 1924, 1,250,000,000 yards; or over 3,100 per cent increase.

"The trade has been very profitable, remarkably so during the last 10 years, as the following figures show:

"Enormous dividends of Indian mills: Of 51 mills that publish their reports, 43 paid over 50 per cent on the average for the last 10 years. Of these, 22 averaged over 75 per cent; 9 over 100 per cent; 3 over 125 per cent; 1 over 175 per cent."

Mr. Leavelle McCampbell says on page 29 of his Rising Tide of Jute: "If every pound of jute bagging, burlap, and bags (I presume he means twine also) were translated into cotton, there would be consumed annually 1,573,000 bales. It should be remembered, however, that burlap substitutes for cotton cloth are substantially heavier in weight and that acquiring this entire market is not possible. A fair statement would be approximately a million bales. At the present rate of production this would mean 3,000,000 additional acres planted in cotton."

Any student of cotton economics will readily admit that the creation of a market for an additional million and a half bales will add at least 3 cents a pound to the value of that staple.

It is imperative to find additional uses for cotton instead of allowing it to be set aside by jute or anything else. Cotton must reach out for new and additional uses, otherwise the price will fall below the cost of production. There is strong reason to believe that the yield of cotton will increase rapidly as soon as mechanical devices for harvesting it are developed. Engineering talent of the finest quality is striving hard to overcome this difficulty and place the harvesting of cotton somewhat on the same basis as other products of the farm which are handled by machinery. Heretofore cotton has been gathered almost entirely by human fingers, but it is thought that mechanical devices have already been developed which will answer these purposes and greatly reduce the cost of production. If such prove true, many additional acres will be planted, with much increased yields of cotton, and the price of the commodity will be greatly reduced. Above all things we must stop the flow of American capital and American skill to India where the movement has already seriously started to use its jute and its pauper labor as a substitute for our cotton and our domestic labor. We fully recognize that jute is an important and valuable commodity, and is entitled to its place in the sun, but in securing that place it must not push into the shade the greatest textile in the world—cotton.

I have already cited some figures from our Department of Labor, but in order to show the different scales prevailing in New England and the South as compared with British India, I include another quotation from Mr. McCampbell, which will be found on page 13 of the booklet already quoted.

Average mill wages per week

Occupation	Indian, Bengal	American
		Southern	New England
Carders	$0.94	$13.20	$18.10
Spinners	1.62	12.23	18.50
Weavers	2.98	18.81	22.08
Average	1.80	16.65	21.24

While fully appreciating that all tariff legislation must originate in the House, in order to focus the attention of the country on this subject I introduced in the Senate two years ago a bill to impose such rates on jute and its manufactures as to place them upon terms of parity with similar commodities in the United States. That bill was reintroduced at the opening of the present Congress; and in a somewhat modified form was again introduced on the 26th of last month. Suffice it to say that under my proposed measure, no jute either in the raw or manufactured state will be permitted to enter free of duty. I have attempted to work out such schedules as will enable the high-priced labor in the cotton fields of our country, who are obliged to live under totally different conditions from those prevalent in India and to maintain a much higher degree of civilization in every way and our skilled mill labor, to complete at least to some extent on terms of equality with the pauper labor of India. We must remember that American cotton is produced largely by the very best classes of our white farmers, descendants of the original stock which settled this country more than a hundred years ago. More than two-thirds of our cotton is cultivated and harvested by these white farmers who are the bone and sinew of our land, and the greater portion of the remaining one-third is produced by negroes, many of whom are first-class citizens, progressive and up to date in every way, who emulate their white neighbors in standards of living.

[Excerpts from questions by members of the Ways and Means Committee and answers thereto]

Mr. MARTIN. Senator, have you stated what duty you think should be imposed on this article?

* * * * * * *

Senator RANSDELL. Yes; I have. I have stated it in my bill, which I will file as an appendix. I have said that the duty on raw jute should be 3 cents a pound and that the duty on burlaps, the manufactured commodities of jute, should be 10 cents per pound instead of the present low rate of about 1 cent, I believe it is now, with a small ad valorem.

Mr. MARTIN. Senator, do you think that cotton bagging is equal in value to jute bagging?

Senator RANSDELL. I am satisfied that cotton bagging is better than jute. We have a large mill in my State at Shreveport, which is manufacturing cotton bagging. I have examined it there. I examined it when we had it here. The Agriculture Department has tested it, and, gentlemen, there is no doubt that the strength of the cotton is greater than that of jute; there is no doubt that the durability of cotton is greater than that of jute. It answers every purpose better than jute, and with a reasonable duty on jute it would certainly compete favorably with jute.

Mr. COLLIER. Senator, you live right across the river from me and I know that you have been associated with the cotton business all your life. We are both trying to do all we can to help the farmers of this country. I was unfortunate in not getting here in time to hear your opening remarks, which I shall read in the record. What did you have to say in reference to the tariff on cotton bagging itself? Have you given a rate for cotton bagging?

Senator RANSDELL. About the same rate practically on cotton bagging that I put on raw jute.

Mr. COLLIER. Because of your great experience in the cotton country—I think that like most of us you are a cotton farmer yourself?

Senator RANSDELL. I am a cotton farmer.

Mr. COLLIER. I should like to ask a few questions to clear up some matters in my mind.

I have found from the Tariff Commission's report and other reports that for the last seven years there has been imported an average of 34,375,000 yards of cotton bagging, which weighs, I understand, 2 pounds a yard. That means about 68,000,000 pounds of cotton bagging, which, taking a 500-pound bale, which is our regular bale, would be about 137,500 bales of cotton, in round numbers. What is the weight per yard of cotton bagging?

Senator RANSDELL. It is in the neighborhood of 1 pound per yard.

Mr. COLLIER. A pound per yard. The jute bagging weighs 2 pounds, does it not?

Senator RANSDELL. One and three-quarters to two and a half pounds, but they rarely ever use 2-pound jute bagging now. I used to cover mine with 2½-pound bagging.

Mr. COLLIER. I have been informed by one of the largest sellers of bagging that the average price of this bagging is about 12½ cents a yard, which at 6 yards would cost the southern farmer about 75 cents to wrap a bale. There are 6 yards to the bale. That would be 12 pounds of bagging in that bale which goes into the weight of the bale of cotton. In other words, he would be paying 75 cents for his bagging, and at 20 cents a pound for his cotton he would get back $2.40 from his cotton, whereas if he used the cotton bagging, which weighed just half that much, and paid the same price for it, he would get back only $1.20. Have you investigated that?

Senator RANSDELL. I have investigated it very carefully, and I have a bill pending in the Senate to require the sale of cotton by the net weight. In an ordinary bale of cotton the tare of the steel ties and the cotton ranges about 23 to 24 pounds to the bale. Does any human being imagine, especially a man of your great intelligence, sir, that the mills of this country pay 20 cents a pound for that tare, those rusty ties, and that bagging? Of course, when they buy a bale of cotton weighing 500 pounds they take into consideration the fact that 23 or 24 pounds of it is useless bagging and useless iron ties, and they fix the price accordingly.

How do the European buyers act? They place upon it a tare of 6 per cent, and when that cotton leaves an American port, to go to Europe, 6 per cent on the weight is deducted, and a bale that weighs 500 pounds is paid for at the rate of 470 pounds. They deduct 30 pounds for tare, and our cotton shippers knowing that, in order not to lose the difference between the 24 pounds of bagging and ties, actually placed on the bale and the 30 pounds that the Englishman is going to deduct, add a patch that weighs 6 or 8 pounds.

So, when that bale of cotton reaches Europe, it weighs 30 pounds or more of actual tare. When the cotton comes from India or from Egypt or any of those countries, the custom of the trade abroad is that they sell by net weight and deduct the bagging and ties. That is a fallacy that has been fooling a number of our southern people for a good while and I am trying to correct it. When you buy a keg of nails you get 100 pounds of nails. They do not charge you for the 25 or 30 pounds that the keg weighs.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CRISP. Senator, in order for this plan to be effective to protect the cotton farmer and the textile manufacturers, the tariff would have to be sufficiently high to be practically an embargo on the importation of raw jute and burlap, would it not?

Senator RANSDEL. Pretty nearly that, sir.

Mr. CRISP. If that were true, about how many bales of American cotton do you estimate it would take to manufacture the wrappers for cotton bagging and for the grain industry, the wholesale houses, and others that now use bags, some of which are cotton and some burlap?

Senator RANSDELL. For all the purposes for which jute is used—and you omitted one very important item, in my judgment, to wit, twine—for containers of every kind and sort, for every imaginable kind of groceries, for fertilizers, for cement, and for bagging to wrap our cotton, from the best information I have, sir, it would be about 1,500,000 bales of cotton per annum. Of course, everything in the grocery line requires twine to tie things. That is a simple name for it. It takes an enormous quantity of that.

Mr. CRISP. I have heard it estimated at from 1,000,000 to 1,200,000 or 1,300,000 bales.

Senator RANSDELL. There is a difference of opinion. I was just going to add that even though there be some mistake on that, Mr. Crisp, if we could get a market for 1,000,000 bales of our cotton, that would add 2 or 3 cents a pound to the price, and that would be a wonderfully beneficial thing to the cotton grower, and, I would like to add, would not hurt the ordinary consumer.

Mr. CRISP. That was the next question I was going to ask you. If cotton were spun in this country to meet that requirement, which would, of course, reduce the surplus or carry-over, how much would it increase the price of cotton to the farmer per pound?

Senator RANSDELL. In my judgment a minimum of 3 cents a pound, certainly on all the low grades, Mr. CRISP.

Mr. CRISP. I agree with your figures, that cotton is sold net weight, in effect. While some of the farmers have the opinion that they are making something on account of selling the bagging and ties, I do not agree with that.

Senator RANSDELL. They are just fooled?

Mr. CRISP. The price, of course, is fixed on the net weight. Then, you think that if Congress should pass such a law as you are advocating, the farmer would receive a large benefit by virtue of getting a higher price for his cotton?

Senator RANSDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRISP. And that benefit would overcome any loss or additional burden that he might have to undergo by reason of paying a higher price for bags, wrappers, and so forth.

Senator RANSDELL. Absolutely, Judge CRISP; not only that, but the manufacturers of America who sell to the cotton growers would find a market for many more millions of dollars worth of their products. The great grocery business of the country does not thrive unless agriculture thrives. If agriculture in all that southern region, and in Arizona, New Mexico, and California, is in the slough of despond, do not the manufacturers of every kind of farm machinery suffer? Do not the grocery merchants throughout the land suffer? Does not everyone in America suffer? It makes better business, sir, all around if you can get a reasonable living price for that great product of the farm.

Not only that, sir, but it will give employment to a great many laborers who, if I am correctly informed, are now out of employment in the mill sections of America.

Mr. CRISP. One other question. How much additional cost do you estimate would follow, per bag used by the grain farmers, the users of fertilizer, and so forth, if the bags they used were manufactured out of cotton rather than jute?

Senator RANSDELL. It is so small that I could not pretend to tell you. It would be a very small fraction of the total cost of the bag. I can not tell you that. I have never found anybody else who could, but I know that a great many of the people who use these bags are extremely anxious to get a chance to use cotton bags.

Mr. GARNER. Following up Judge CRISP's question, it would be a fraction of a cent, less than half a cent?

Senator RANSDELL. I think so.

Mr. GARNER. It would be quite difficult to compute it?

Senator RANSDELL. I thank you for the suggestion.

Mr. GARNER. Senator, Mr. CRISP has asked you about an embargo. What you are asking for is the same consideration for the cotton farmer that other industries have under the protective-tariff theory?

Senator RANSDELL. Absolutely; no more and no less.

Mr. GARNER. That is what you are asking for?

Senator RANSDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARNER. If they will give you the same consideration in the protection of the cotton farmer against jute competition that they give the steel industry, with reference to the production and the consumption in this country, where the importations are less than one-tenth of 1 per cent, you would be willing to take that protection, would you not?

Senator RANSDELL. Entirely so.

I want to call your attention to this one thing. Jute is made in India. They also make sugar over there, and rice and cotton over there.

Mr. GARNER. We are considering now the question of jute bagging.

Senator RANSDELL. I was going to say this: There is a protective duty on rice and sugar, and these things that come in competition. Why not give it to us on cotton?

Mr. GARNER. I can see no reason, speaking for myself, if you want me to answer the question.

Senator RANSDELL. I thank you.

Mr. GARNER. There are coming into this country something over $100,000,000 worth of products of jute.

Senator RANSDELL. Fully that much.

Mr. GARNER. $67,000,000, under the particular paragraph you are speaking of.

Senator RANSDELL. Of burlaps.

Mr. GARNER. If Congress should give you the suggested duty for which you ask, or a duty that will cut that down, say, to 1 per cent of the total consumption in this country—and, I repeat, the steel schedule has less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of foreign importations in competition with its schedule—we would be able to produce in this country from half a million to a million and a half bales of cotton to substitute for that article.

Senator RANSDELL. Beyond any question.

Mr. GARNER. That would undoubtedly increase the price received for cotton, and that is the theory you advocate, in order to protect the cotton grower in this country.

Senator RANSDELL. That is absolutely my theory.

Mr. CROWTHER. Senator, with respect to this fabric for which you are making a plea, I want to know how many mills there are making that, and how many people are employed at the present time, and what the yardage is.

Senator RANSDELL. I could not tell you. I do not think, with all due respect, that that matters very much, because the competition from India has been such that our people could not afford to make the cotton bagging and the cotton sacks in competition with the Indian mills, which make the jute sacks and the jute bagging. Let me state this fact: The jute business over there has grown at a rate of production of 2,000,000 bales per decade for the last 50 years, taking it by 10-year periods, beginning in 1874. The mills over there have actually been earning, according to official reports, a yearly earning of from 75 to 135 per cent on their investments. They have been growing rich and powerful and strong all the time. You know that our mills have not been making very much money.

Mr. CROWTHER. Then your plea here is for an infant industry—one that is not really born yet, in fact?

Senator RANSDELL. It is not born yet, as far as the cotton bagging is concerned, and scarcely born, so far as the cotton bags are concerned.

* * * * * * *

Mr. DOUGHTON. Senator, in answer to Mr. Garner's statement, I understood you to state that by increasing the duty on jute you would thereby increase the production of cotton in this country to the extent of a million or a million and a half bales.

Senator RANSDELL. No. It would increase the possible uses of cotton that amount; not necessarily production. We have too much of it produced now. That is why we do not get enough for it. We have overproduction now.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is what I was wondering. If you increased the production in proportion to the increased use——

Senator RANSDELL. I did not mean that, if I said that. I meant it would increase the uses for cotton and furnish a market for the additional amount, if we do make more than we are making now.

Mr. CRISP. Senator, is it not a fact that Ludlow & Co. are the greatest manufacturers of cotton bagging, and so forth, in this country, and they have one or two mills in India where they manufacture jute and bagging in India at Indian wages, and bring it into the United States in competition with the industry in this country?

Senator RANSDELL. They have a wonderful mill on the Hugli River, about 17 miles below the city of Calcutta. I have got pictures of it here. It is a perfectly beautiful place—100 buildings there—railroads, wharves, and docks; everything, sir; and they bring not only jute but they make enormous quantities of burlaps and bring them in in competition.

Mr. GARNER. Also Ludlow & Co. are in very close touch with all compresses and oil mills in this country, are they not?

Senator RANSDELL. I presume so.

Mr. GARNER. I know they are.

Mr. CROWTHER. I would like to ask you if you at any time have used any quantity of this new material on your own cotton? Have you tried it?

Senator RANSDELL. I have not done it, but my neighbors in the city of Shreveport, La., have. It is a wonderful commodity. They tell me it is better than jute. The Agricultural Department shows that it stands up better than the jute bagging. I can furnish you this report.

Mr. CROWTHER. Would you say as a whole that the cotton farmers are trying to develop this industry by patronizing these people?

Senator RANSDELL. Yes, sir; and they would be glad to do it if they had a chance.

Mr. CROWTHER. And they could get it at a price, do you think?

Senator RANSDELL. I think they would get it at a price slightly in advance of the present prices on jute, but they would be in a business which would help to sell their low-grade cotton; help make a market for the low-grade cotton that they sell at a loss now. While they might lose on the one hand they would make on the other.

The CHAIRMAN. We thank you very much for the information you have given the committee.

[Excerpts from the brief of Leaville McCampbell in behalf of domestic cotton manufacturers who are seeking increased duties on jute products]

I am a cotton manufacturer, and I am here representing other cotton manufacturers. These manufacturers are engaged principally in the production of the coarser grades of cotton cloth, such as ducks, osnaburgs, drillings, and sheetings.

The idea seems to be prevalent that cotton cloth is used for some purposes and jute cloth is used for other purposes and that there is little competition between them. This is not the case. There are a great variety of uses in which it is possible to employ either cotton or jute. Most of these uses have to do with packaging or wrapping commodities. In a way cotton has quite an advantage. It is not only more sightly, softer, and easier to handle but to attain the same strength requirements jute substitutes for cotton must run approximately one-third heavier in weight.

* * * * * * *

The use of jute burlap in the United States, historically, is a rather recent thing. During 1928 substantially over a billion yards came in. In this country the average increase in its use for the past 35 years has been about 25,000,000 yards a year. A reasonable proportion of this increase is proper and is coupled with the industrial expansion of America, but the major portion represents business that has been taken away from American cotton mills. An increase of 5,000,000 yards a year might roughly be said to be due to the former cause. The remainder, or about 20,000,000 yards a year, represents the inroad into our industry.

* * * * * * *

As a specific instance of the havoc wrought among cotton mills by this incoming tide of jute products, I cite the production of seamless bags. If you ever lived in the country you will remember when you saw these bags on every hand. They were made in 11, 12, 14, and 16 ounce weights; 2, 2½, and 3 bushel sizes. There was not a dry-goods jobber in America who did not carry them in stock. There were dozens of mills making them, among others:

Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., Manchester, N. H.

Stark Mills, Manchester, N. H., now part of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co.

Androscoggin Mills, Lewiston, Me.

Boott Mills, Lowell, Mass.

Harmony Mills, Cohoes, N. Y.

Royal River Mills, Yarmouth, Me.

Columbia Cotton Mills, Columbia, Tenn.

Grahamton Manufacturing Co., Grahamton, Ky.

Cherokee Falls Mill, Cherokee Falls, S. C., now part of the Henrietta Mills.

Lynchburg Cotton Mills, now part of the Consolidated Textile Corporation.

Mount Vernon Mills, Baltimore, now part of the Mount Vernon-Woodberry Mills.

A mill at Randelman, N. C., now known as the Deep River Mill.

Royal Mills, Charleston, S. C., now known as the Williamson Mills Co.

Sherman Bag Co., Sherman, Tex., now known as the Sherman Manufacturing Co.

Worth Manufacturing Co., Worthville, N. C., now known as the Leward Cotton Mills.

Androscoggin and Royal River still produce them in a small way, but one at a time the others have had to abandon this product. At least five of these mills had to pass through the process of financial reorganization before they got their machinery changed over and were able to go ahead on other products.

I have seen a comparatively small southern jobber lay down an order for 1,500 bales of part waste osnaburgs. I have seen one of my partners take out of St. Louis in a single day orders for 2,500 bales of cotton duck for use as cotton-pick sacks. This business has been cut to ribbons by the competition of jute burlap.

These are the reasons we are here to-day. These are the reasons that we ask you to give serious consideration to a reconstruction of the tariff schedule on the foreign product that has worked this hardship upon us.

* * * * * * *

We understand that as manufacturers we are expected to confine our argument to the processes in which we are interested, but while this subject is under discussion, we would like to put on record our belief that the cotton farmers of America are just as much entitled to protection from jute, a fiber raised at wage levels far below their own by people accustomed to vastly lower standards of living as we and those who work in our mills are to be protected from the competition of foreign manufacturers of jute products.

We want to point out and emphasize that the manufacture of textiles has a definite and positive relation to farming, for the raw materials which feed our textile plants, whether they be cotton or jute, wool, or even silk, originate on the farm. These mills can not run at capacity, can not vie with each other in purchasing these materials, can not prosper without sharing their prosperity with the farmer.

This is more than just a pretty gesture, for in 1928 American cotton mills paid out to American farmers $700,000,000 in hard cash, and we now seek your permission to pay them a hundred million more.

While we are primarily manufacturers, we also lay claim to your attention as large purchasers of jute burlap. Mills which I personally control purchased, during 1928, 364,000 yards of this material. Our industry, as a whole, purchases annually approximately 40,000,000 yards, so if this commodity is protected as we advocate we will at least pick up a sizeable share of any burden created by increased prices so brought about.

* * * * * * *

The last yardage figures given on the shipments of jute burlap from Calcutta to North America are for the year 1927. Since the booklet was written, the Daily Mill Stock Reporter, January 15, 1929, published unofficial figures giving 1928 shipments as 1,067,454,445 yards. Of this total 988,044,556 yards came to the United States and the remainder went to Canada. The same proportionate division of shipments is approximately applicable to the table and chart used in the booklet, but it should be borne in mind that these are shipments from Calcutta alone, do not include other Indian ports and do not include imports from Europe. The Daily Mill Stock Reporter gives shipments from Europe for 1927 as 50,909,870 yards, and for the first nine months of 1928 as 38,053,135 yards which nearly offset the shipments to Canada.

It is interesting to note that the total shipments from Calcutta to all parts of the world were 1,552,071,080 yards, so that the United States took over 63 per cent of the total.

The greater part of all jute yarn is fabricated into some form of jute cloth and the fabrics so manufactured practically all fall into one of two groups. The first is the finer cloth commonly known to the jute trade as "Hessians," although in America the term "burlap" is in general use. The second group, which consists of the coarser and heavier cloth, is designated by the exclusive term "sackings." As it happens, the industry has so developed that Hessians are sold by the producer in cloth lengths, while sackings are usually made up by him into bags and sacks. The Hessian cloth is eventually purchased by bag manufacturers located in various parts of the world. In the United States, bag making from Hessian cloth is an important branch of the trade. The difference between Hessians and sackings is primarily one of fineness, the former being fabricated of medium-size yarns, the latter of the coarser and lower qualities.

Dundee, the original home of the industry, with its supremacy challenged by the low labor costs of the Orient and the tariff-protected fabricators of countries in an intermediate stage of development, has been driven more to the production of certain specialties in which technical skill and relatively highly paid labor can find adequate remuneration. Hessians are there manufactured, particularly those in which unusual quality is required, among which may be mentioned linoleum Hessians, which are much above the average width and particularly free from imperfection.

Calcutta is, for obvious reasons, the antithesis of Dundee. Its particular field is the large-scale production of the standard sizes of Hessions and sackings, and it supplies the major part of the world's requirements of these products, although, as the division of mills into groups for sales purposes shows, the quality of the output varies. In general, the mills of Bengal direct their energies to securing an economical output of common-grade cloth from their large but not too highly skilled labor forces.

The jute factories of the European Continent naturally tend to follow Dundee practice, though in many cases they have the advantage of lower costs than those of the Scotch city because of longer working hours and a lower standard of living among the operatives. To a large extent they produce for their home consumption only.

Finally we come to the United States of America. Handicapped by high wages and consequent high costs, the American jute industry is restricted almost entirely to the home market; and, on account of inadequate tariff protection on woven jute products, jute manufacture in the United States has largely centered in high-grade yarns for carpet manufacturing and in twines.

The United States is probably the largest consumer of jute products among the nations, but there are in the country no manufacturing centers comparable in size with those of India or Europe. Nevertheless, the industry is well established, and in the four years 1923–1926 jute and jute butts were imported at the rate of 71,300 long tons annually. Of this amount, 37.6 per cent on the average entered the port of Boston for the account of the Ludlow Manufacturing Associates and was shipped to Ludlow, a town in central Massachusetts, which is the home of this considerable portion of the American jute-manufacturing industry.

The varied nationality of the labor force at Ludlow is only partly indicated by the three languages—English, Polish, and Portuguese—found on all the signs put up for the instruction of the workers. These three indicate, however, the predominant races. We have already recorded the arrival of the French Canadians in 1868 and 1870, and of a band from the traditional centers of fiber manufacture, Dundee and Belfast, in the latter year also. In 1892 the first group of Poles arrived at Ludlow, and this nationality now has the largest representation. The last large group, the Portuguese, date their arrival from 1912. An analysis of the pay roll indicates the representation of a number of other countries, however, while, on the other hand, a proportion of those who originally came from Europe are now numbered as American citizens.

In 1919, however, the management decided upon the project that had been under consideration for some time—the extension of the business through the operation of a jute mill in India—and steps were taken to acquire a suitable manufacturing site. At the end of 1919, after exhaustive investigations by the company's representatives, a selection was made and a tract of land containing about 160 acres near the village of Chengail, 14 miles downstream from Calcutta and on the right bank of the Hooghly, became the property of the Ludlow Manufacturing Associates.

During this period the Ludlow Jute Co. (Ltd.) was formed to take over the Indian activities of the Ludlow Manufacturing Associates.

The cotton bagging made in No. 1 mill at Chengail is similar to that turned out at Ludlow, and the process of manufacture is identical. This heavy product was first made on any considerable scale in Calcutta by the Ludlow Jute Co. (Ltd.)

CONCLUSION

Cotton textiles is one of our major industries. In point of employment it stands third. If we count those engaged in raising the raw material, it stands first. Nearly half a million people work in our cotton mills and 2,000,000 more find a livelihood in raising the fiber. There is no measure before our Congress more important than the proper protection of this great industry. There is nothing which will so quickly bring order out of textile chaos.

We are living in a protected country. Protests against protection have died until only a faint echo is heard. American farming and textile interests are entitled to a fair share in such protection. If they must buy everything they use in a protected market, it is but simple justice that they should enjoy the same measure of protection when it comes their turn to sell.

Do this and on our cotton farms, in our cotton mills, better hours, better wages, and better working conditions will come of their own accord.

LEAVELLE MCCAMPBELL.

[Excerpts from the testimony of Congressmen from cotton-producing States]

FROM STATEMENT OF HON. E. E. COX, A REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE STATE OF GEORGIA

There is no class of textile people in the world that is so prosperous and that have for years and years been so prosperous as the workers of jute. The jute mills of India have been declaring high dividends, at the same time with carry-overs of undivided profits greater than any other class of manufacturers in the world, their dividends running all the way from 50 to 400 per cent per year. The jute manufacturers of this country are making a greater return upon their investment than any other class of our textile workers, and that is true, although the average yearly wages are greater than that paid in the cotton-textile industry.

If you will examine the census report you will find it discloses the fact that the jute industry of this country is prosperous, and immensely so. You will find in this hearing that it is the manufacturers of jute bagging and the manufacturers of jute bags that are most concerned as to what this committee will recommend, and as to what the Congress will do with reference to a modification of the law that now exists. Upon the question of wages going into their cost of production, and upon the question of the reasonableness of the tariff upon burlap, these interests are as silent as a tomb.

* * * * * * *

I want to bring to the attention of this committee that it is not only the farmer growers of the cotton States of the Union that are interested in this problem. It is the cotton spinner of the country; not only those of the cotton States, but those, with equal degree, of the New England States, and wherever else there may be operations on the part of cotton-textile people.

And that is not all that is involved. Labor is involved; American labor is involved in this case. The gentleman who preceded me stated to the committee and expressed solicitation as to the welfare of American capital invested abroad, and in the statement he made said it should have the same consideration in matters of legislation that domestic capital invested at home should have. I want to say in that connection, and by way of supplementing the argument that was developed as the result of the question, that when domestic capital invests abroad, it takes the status, and identically so, of foreign capital. It is devoted to the building up of foreign enterprise; it is subjected to all of the burdens that government imposes upon property. It employs foreign labor in competition with domestic labor and performs every other function and plays every other rôle that foreign capital does.

Now, I submit that if the welfare of foreigners were to control in the matter of what this Congress should do or this committee should recommend, it would be a very easy matter for capital to paralyze the arm of the Government in the control of its economic problems, so far as the application of tariff is concerned, by simply investing abroad.

Now, that is not all. This law, when you study it in the light of present operation, you would think had been written by two classes of people, the makers of jute bags and the makers of cotton bagging. Now, the question has been asked as to the added cost as a result of the use of cotton for jute. Of course, there would be an added cost. It would be unfair to even stand before this committee and, inferentially or otherwise, contend to the contrary, but the cost would not be anything like in extent or amount what these advocates of do-nothing would have you believe.

These jute people, who built up immense fortunes and in their operations declared large dividends, who come here expressing great solicitude for the women and the children and the men who pour the images of their bodies and the anxiety of their souls into the soil, would have you believe it is in the interest of the welfare of this class, and they are here protesting to you to do nothing by way of rewriting the schedule as it is fixed by law as it now stands.

That is not true. What these people are interested in is profit. They are interested in continuing operations under such conditions as enable them to import here a product that represents an immense amount of labor, which is reflected in the energy expended in putting it into the finished product, cloth. They are here begging this committee to make no interference with that schedule because it will destroy their business.

I want to tell you, from my study of this problem, that there is no disposition in the world on my part to be other than perfectly frank and candid with you; from my study of this case, the farmer, the grower of the cotton, will receive the greatest benefit from the enactment of legislation as is recommended by the proponents of relief; next, labor will profit most, and then the cotton-textile industry of the country will come third; and I want to say to you that the cotton-textile people of the country have for many years been skating on thin ice.

Last year was the best year that they have had since the war. In many instances no dividends were declared, and never in any year in like proportion to the dividends that the jute workers declared.

You will have textile people who are working jute and working cotton here before you, pleading to you to let stand the illogical sort of product that is represented by Schedule 10. Why? They are able to skim along on their cotton operations, but as to their operations in the working of jute, there is an immense profit.

Now, gentlemen, we must come back to the proposition as to what, if anything, should be the rate on the raw product, and that involves the question of cost of production, and upon that question the advocates of "do nothing" have given you no light, so far as I have heard in the hearings on this matter.

We have no recent reliable information as to the cost of Indian labor in the production of the raw commodity, but we have reliable information as to the cost of the jute worker in the textile mills of Calcutta. We have here, taken from the International Yearbook, reliable data as to the wages of the Indian workers in the tea gardens. You will find in India that the workers in the mills receive a wage in excess of the workers on the farm, just as they do here in America.

In America the farm wage, taking the country as a whole, is forty-odd dollars. The wage of the mill worker, taken as a whole, is about $68.80, as I recall offhand. The wage of the mill worker in India, in the jute mills, varies as follows: Carders get 94 cents a week; rovers, $1.89. This is the last report upon the question. Winders get $2.04.

Gentlemen, here is a matter that should be taken into consideration, and it is one about which you have not, so far as I am concerned—certainly not in the hearing to-day—been advised. A month's work in the United States, on the basis of which the calculations are made, consists of 208 hours. A month's work in India, fixed by law, consists of 312 hours. When you reduce these wages to the per hour basis, you will find that the women in the tea gardens get something like seven-twelths of 1 cent per hour. The children get a wage of one-third of a cent per hour, and the men a little higher wage than the women, but in no instance does it run as high as 1 cent per hour. That is the labor that the Ludlow people are employing now. That is the labor that the whole jute industry is employing, with the exception of that which is engaged in the carrying on of operations in Dundee and other parts of the United Kingdom.

They have gone to India and set up operations there, falling into the scheme of things that has been fixed by the Jute Trust for years and years—almost half a century. They are employing Indian labor, running all the way from 90 cents a month to $1.80, and some higher than that, and throwing it in absolute and direct competition with the wage earners of this country.

FROM STATEMENT OF HON. MARVIN JONES, A REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE STATE OF TEXAS

Less than 10 per cent of the jute brought into this country is used for cotton bagging.

The other 90 per cent goes into various channels, into which cotton should go, and into which cotton is gradually forcing itself, but it always meets the price question, and that is shown by the fact that immediately following the 1926 abundant crop of cotton the importations of jute were reduced 20 per cent. In other words, the cotton does come into and replace jute when given a fair chance, and it is being used that way at the present time.

I want to say that the mills that are producing cotton in New England and other places, since 90 per cent of this jute comes into other channels into which cotton may go, are interested in this proposition as well as we are. Even on the question of cotton bagging, here is the report of the Department of Agriculture which studied that proposition, and Table 4 sets out the difference in the cost of cotton bagging and jute bagging, and on the 12-ounce bagging which was shown to be sufficient on shipments of bales to Bremen, Germany, and return, the difference in cost is exactly 36 cents per bale, and it ranges from that to 68 cents per bale. There is the cost of the jute bagging and the cost of the cotton bagging set out in the table.

If the difference in the cost is taken at 68 cents a bale, here is a statement from the Department of Agriculture that shows that if 200,000 bales of cotton, which they estimate would be used if cotton bagging were made of cotton, it would increase the price $2.50 a bale. That is estimated by virtue of their experience in forecasting the prices, and the estimate of the production of cotton.

In other words, when 200,000 bales of cotton are taken off of the market, or if the estimate is reduced 200,000 bales, the price increases $2.50 per bale. So, if the cost of cotton bagging were increased 36 cents, the farmer, even on the cotton bagging, would make $2.14 per bale. If it were 68 cents, he would make nearly $2 per bale. * * * It is a strange thing that the cotton farmer is made to pay a tariff on the steel with which he binds his cotton, and yet he is forced into competition with the cheap labor of India on the cotton that displaces his cotton, and as 60 per cent of his cotton is shipped abroad, millions of bales of that cotton in going across in foreign markets, meets jute coming back here to take its place in the home markets.

According to the Department of Agriculture, there are 325,000,000 pounds of jute being used in the grocery trade, that they estimate could be displaced by cotton, and cotton is better than jute for the bags and for wrapping material. The only reason jute is being used is that it is a little cheaper in price.

Two years ago the Department of Agriculture shipped 24 bales of cotton to foreign markets. Twenty of those bales were covered with cotton bagging of varying weights, and four bales were covered with jute bagging. I arranged for them to be on display up in the majority room, and they remained there for a month. Even the lightweight cotton bagging was in better shape than the jute bagging. The jute became so torn they looked like a bundle of old rags, whereas the cotton bagging gave a neat appearance.

They are using the same cotton bagging now. Some 200,000 bales are being covered by cotton bagging. These exporters will take a great lot of patching material and patch it up and make the weight go nearly 30 pounds per bale, so that in the foreign markets they dock us 30 pounds per bale because of the wrapping that goes over there, and yet in many instances it is the best cotton. The habit has grown up of patching this stuff in going abroad, so that with a 30-pound dockage they do not use much of the cotton bagging.

If the price were put up to where jute would be approximately the same as cotton bagging, I think they would use cotton bagging altogether. But that is merely an incident in this problem, because of the tremendous quantity of jute that is being used for other purposes.

It is a peculiar thing that in the principal heavy cotton years of 1901, 1908, 1921, and 1926, when we had a lot of cotton, and cotton went down in price, the importations of jute were very much decreased. That proves conclusively to my mind that cotton can go into these channels if it is given a half a chance.

AMENDMENT INTENDED TO BE INTRODUCED BY SENATOR RANSDELL TO THE PROPOSED BILL PROVIDING FOR TARIFF READJUSTMENT

S. 5574, Seventieth Congress, second session

A bill to amend and reenact the provisions of the tariff act of 1922 relating to jute and its products

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," be amended and reenacted as follows:

In Title II the free list, Schedule 15, strike out all of paragraph 1516, reading "waste bagging and waste sugar-sack cloth."

In the same title and schedule, paragraph 1582, after the words "Istle or Tampico fiber," strike out the words "jute, jute butts."

In Title I, Schedule 10, Flax, hemp, and jute, and manufactures of, at the end of paragraph 1001, after the words "hackled hemp, 2 cents per pound," insert a semicolon in lieu of the period and add the following: "waste bagging and waste sugar-sack cloth, 3 cents per pound; jute and jute butts not dressed or manufactured in any manner, and not specially provided for, 3 cents per pound."

In the same title and schedule, paragraph 1003, strike out all after the words "Coarser in size than 20-pound" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "5½ cents per pound; 20-pound up to but not including 10-pound, 7 cents per pound; 10-pound up to but not including 5-pound, 8½ cents per pound; 5-pound and finer, 10 cents per pound, but not more than 65 per cent ad valorem; jute sliver, 4½ cents per pound; twist, twine, and cordage, composed of two or more jute yarns or rovings twisted together, the size of the single yarn or roving of which is coarser than 20-pound, 6½ cents per pound; 20-pound up to but not including 10-pound, 8 cents per pound; 10-pound up to but not including 5-pound, 9½ cents per pound; 5-pound and finer, 11 cents per pound."

In the same title and schedule, paragraph 1008, wherever the words "1 cent" appear, strike out same and insert in lieu thereof "10 cents," so that the paragraph will read:

"PAR. 1008. Fabrics, composed wholly of jute, plain woven, twilled, and all other, not specially provided for, not bleached, printed, stenciled, painted, dyed, colored, nor rendered noninflammable, 10 cents per pound; bleached, printed, stenciled, painted, dyed, colored, or rendered noninflammable, 10 cents per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem."

In the same title and schedule, paragraph 1018 wherever the words "1 cent" appear, strike out same and insert in lieu thereof "10 cents," so that the paragraph will read:

"PAR. 1018. Bags or sacks made from plain woven fabrics of single jute yarns or from twilled or other fabrics composed wholly of jute, not bleached, printed, stenciled, painted, dyed, colored, nor rendered noninflammable, 10 cents per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem; bleached, printed, stenciled, painted, dyed, colored, or rendered noninflammable, 10 cents per pound and 15 per cent ad valorem."

In the same title and schedule, paragraph 1019, after the words "weighing not less than 15 ounces nor more than 32 ounces per square yard," strike out the words "six-tenths of 1 cent" and insert in lieu thereof the words "5 cents"; and in the same paragraph, after the words "weighing more than 32 ounces per square yard," strike out the words "three-tenths of 1 cent" and insert in lieu thereof "5 cents."

LAW AND MANNERS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I read in the Atlantic Monthly of July, 1924, a most interesting article entitled "Law and Manners," written by the Right Hon. Lord Moulton. This was called to my attention by a friend in Massachusetts. It is such a valuable article I wish every Senator might read it. I am taking the liberty of cutting out parts of it which perhaps are not pertinent to us, but I think the article should be read by all. I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAW AND MANNERS

By the Right Hon. Lord Moulton

(A word of explanation seems desirable in regard to the form and the authorship of this paper. It is the verbatim record, by an accurate reporter, of an impromptu speech made by Lord Moulton at the Authors' Club in London some years before his death. Because of its pertinent interest for present-day Americans, we count ourselves fortunate to be able to print it in the Atlantic at this time. John Fletcher Moulton, first Baron, Minister of Munitions for Great Britain at the outbreak of the war, a noted judge, a great parliamentarian, and administrator, may be fittingly introduced to Atlantic readers in the words of the Lord Chancellor before the House of Lords at the time of Lord Moulton's death in 1921: "I choose my words carefully when I say that I greatly doubt whether it would have been possible for the war to have been brought to a successful conclusion when it was but for the part Lord Moulton took in it. I hope the country will not soon forget the extraordinary work of this most remarkable man, whose memory his colleagues will long cherish.")

In order to explain this extraordinary title I must ask you to follow me in examining the three great domains of human action. First comes the domain of positive law, where our actions are prescribed by laws binding upon us which must be obeyed. Next comes the domain of free choice, which includes all those actions as to which we claim and enjoy complete freedom. But between these two there is a third large and important domain in which there rules neither positive law nor absolute freedom. In that domain there is no law which inexorably determines our course of action, and yet we feel that we are not free to choose as we would. The degree of this sense of a lack of complete freedom in this domain varies in every case. It grades from a consciousness of a duty nearly as strong as positive law, to a feeling that the matter is all but a question of personal choice. Some might wish to parcel out this domain into separate countries, calling one, for instance, the domain of duty, another the domain of public spirit, another the domain of good form; but I prefer to look at it as all one domain, for it has one and the same characteristic throughout—it is the domain of obedience to the unenforceable. The obedience is the obedience of a man to that which he can not be forced to obey. He is the enforcer of the law upon himself.

One of the reasons why I have chosen this as the subject on which to speak is that I have spent my life as a commissioner for delimiting the frontier line which divides this domain from the realm of positive law. I have had to decide so frequently whether law could say, "You must," or regretfully to say, "I must leave it to you." This is the land in which all those whom the law can not reach take refuge. It might be thought from such a description that I wished to annex that country and bring it under the rule of positive law. That is not the case. The infinite variety of circumstances surrounding the individual and rightly influencing his action make it impossible to subject him in all things to rules rigidly prescribed and duly enforced. Thus there was wisely left the intermediate domain which, so far as positive law is concerned, is a land of freedom of action, but in which the individual should feel that he was not wholly free. This country which lies between law and free choice I always think of as the domain of manners. To me, manners in this broad sense signifies the doing that which you should do, although you are not obliged to do it. I do not wish to call it duty, for that is too narrow to describe it, nor would I call it morals for the same reason. It might include both, but it extends beyond them. It covers all cases of right doing where there is no one to make you do it but yourself.

All these three domains are essential to the properly organized life of the individual, and one must be on one's guard against thinking that any of them can safely be encroached upon. That law must exist needs no argument. But, on the other hand, the domain of free choice should be dear to all. This is where spontaneity, originality, and energy are born. The great movements which make the history of a country start there. It covers a precious land where the actions of men are not only such as they choose but have a right to claim freedom even from criticism. Men must keep safely guarded this right to follow the bent of their nature in proper cases and act as they would without anyone having the right to utter a word of dictation or command. This country forms the other frontier of the domain of manners and delimits it on the side farthest away from that of positive law.

The dangers that threaten the maintenance of this domain of manners arise from its situation between the region of absolute choice and the region of positive law. There are countless supporters of the movements to enlarge the sphere of positive law. In many countries—especially in the younger nations—there is a tendency to make laws to regulate everything. On the other hand, there is a growing tendency to treat matters that are not regulated by positive law as being matters of absolute choice. Both these movements are encroachments on the middle land, and to my mind the real greatness of a nation, its true civilization, is measured by the extent of this land of obedience to the unenforceable. It measures the extent to which the nation trusts its citizens, and its existence and area testify to the way they behave in response to that trust. Mere obedience to law does not measure the greatness of a nation. It can easily be obtained by a strong executive, and most easily of all from a timorous people. Nor is the license of behavior which so often accompanies the absence of law, and which is miscalled liberty, a proof of greatness. The true test is the extent to which the individuals composing the nation can be trusted to obey self-imposed law.

In the changes that are taking place in the world around us, one of those which is fraught with grave peril is the discredit into which this idea of the middle land is falling. I will give two examples. First, I will take freedom of debate in the houses of legislature such as our own House of Commons. For centuries the members had unrestricted freedom of debate, and no inconvenience was felt. But in recent times some members of this house have said to themselves: "We have unrestricted freedom of debate. We will use it so as to destroy debate. The absence of imposed restriction enables us to do it." This obstruction was developed, and it has destroyed freedom of debate, and, indeed, all useful debate in practically every legislature. The freedom due to absence of positive restriction has been treated by the individual members as leaving their use of debate a matter of absolute choice, fettered with no duty that they were bound to regard. They shut their eyes to the fact that the freedom was given to them in trust to help forward debate, and that it was incumbent on them so to use it. Clumsy and even mischievous regulations have necessarily been introduced which fetter debate but prevent its being absolutely stifled. The old freedom can not now be entrusted to the members, because when they possessed it they did not respond to it by the exercise of that moral sense which would have led them to treat it as a trust, and not as an absolute possession, unburdened by obligations which they should compel themselves to regard.

It is not only the conduct of individual members of the legislature that furnishes an illustration. The conduct of the legislatures themselves furnishes an equally striking one. It is the fundamental principle of democracies to bow to the decision of the majority. But in accepting this we do not surrender ourselves to the rule of the majority in all things, but only in those things which are of a kind fit to be regulated by government. We do not admit, for instance, the right of the majority to decide whom we should marry or what should be our religion. These are but types of a vast number of matters of great interest in life which we hold to be outside the decision of a majority, and which are for the individual alone to decide. But in form the power of a government has no restrictions. It has the power to do everything, and too often it forgets that this limitless power does not leave the scope of its legislation a matter of absolute choice on its part, but a choice fettered by a duty to act according to the trust reposed in it, and to abstain from legislating in matters where legislation is not truly within its province. And what is true as to the scope of legislation is also true to a great extent as to the nature of that legislation. But there is a widespread tendency to regard the fact that they can do a thing as meaning that they may do it. There can be no more fatal error than this. Between "can do" and "may do" ought to exist the whole realm which recognizes the sway of duty, fairness, sympathy, taste, and all the other things that make life beautiful and society possible. It is this confusion between "can do" and "may do" which makes me fear at times lest in the future the worst tyranny will be found in democracies. Interests which are not strongly represented in Parliament may be treated as though they had no rights by governments who think that the power and the will to legislate amount to a justification of that legislation. Such a principle would be death to liberty. No part of our life would be secure from interference from without. If I were asked to define tyranny, I would say it was yielding to the lust of governing. It is only when governments feel it an honorable duty not to step beyond that which was in reality, and not only in form, put into their hands that the world will know what true freedom is.

The tendency of modern legislation is to extend the area ruled by positive law, and to diminish the area of action which is determined by the decision of the individual himself. But there is one great example in the opposite direction. In one instance the people have deliberately chosen to carve a domain out of that previously covered by positive law and to throw it into the domain where the individual can determine for himself his course of action. Take the legislation relating to trade-unions and trade disputes. Limitations on the power of combination have been swept away, and to a great extent that which was previously marked out by law is now in the hands of the individuals themselves.

I am far from suggesting that this was a retrograde step, but to my mind the question whether it is dangerous, and whether it may and will become disastrous, depends on whether the masters of workmen who gained this freedom of action, not allowed them by the common law, look upon the change as justifying their treating the matters to which it relates as belonging to the realm of absolute choice, or whether as belonging to the realm where, though not restrained by positive law, they yet recognize the duty of obedience to the unenforceable. Do they recognize that the increase of their freedom of action brings with it not unfettered choice but the corresponding responsibility of using that freedom? That many have failed to realize that this is the true effect of the change has already been made too clear. * * *

I am not afraid to trust people—my fear is that people will not see that trust is being reposed in them. Hence I have no wish that positive law should annex this intermediate country. On the contrary, I dread it. Instead of the iron rule of law being thrown over it, I would rather see it well policed by the inhabitants. I am too well acquainted with the inadequacy of the formal language of statutes to prefer them to the living action of public and private sense of duty.

The great principle of obedience to the unenforceable is no mere ideal, but in some form or other it is strong in the hearts of all except the most depraved. If you wish to know how strong, remember the account of the Titanic disaster. The men were gentlemen to the edge of death. "Ladies first." Why was that? Law did not require it. Force could not have compelled it in the face of almost certain death. It was merely a piece of good manners in the sense in which I have used the phrase. The feeling of obedience to the unenforceable was so strong that at that terrible moment all behaved as, if they could look back, they would wish to have behaved. I have no fear of its strength, whatever be the class appealed to. Even if one takes the least educated—the so-called lower classes, of whom so many are afraid—one would find the same loyal obedience to unenforceable obligation in the relationships with which these classes are familiar. The danger lies in that by the growth of the democratic spirit they have newly come into much larger powers, and they have not yet learned that power has its duties as well as its rights. When they have become familiar with these powers, and when intercourse with those who have a wider outlook has taught them that the domain of obligation includes them in their use of them, I am satisfied that those who have been loyal to duty in the smaller lives that they have led will be loyal in the wider fields in which they are now able to exercise their power. It is this faith that makes me dread lest we should hurriedly let positive law come in and check the growth of self-reliance, check the growth of the sense of personal duty, and lead people to feel that, if they obey the law, they have done all their duty. It is wiser to exercise patience and let them alone till increase of experience in life teaches them to appreciate better their true position, and to feel that it is still needful for them to see for themselves that they behave as worthy men should do.

Now I can tell you why I chose the title "Law and Manners." It must be evident to you that manners must include all things which a man should impose upon himself, from duty to good taste. I have borne in mind the great motto of William of Wykeham—"Manners makyth man." It is in this sense—loyalty to the rule of obedience to the unenforceable, throughout the whole realm of personal action—that we should use the word "manners" if we would truly say that "Manners makyth man."

ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS ON LIFE AND ACHIEVEMENTS OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on February 22, 1929, at Poli's Theater here in the city of Washington, Hon. James Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, an ex-Member of this body, delivered a very eloquent speech on the life and achievements of George Washington. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

THE UNION OF NATION AS THE PRINCIPAL POLICY OF WASHINGTON

[Address of ex-United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, as the honorary guest selected by the District Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the societies of the city of Washington as orator of the day—delivering the George Washington address upon the occasion, February 22, 1929]

We say, with Pericles as he spoke to the Greek patriot, "A country without heroes is a land without history." Horace, the Roman philosopher-poet, declares that "it is sweet and noble to die for one's country." But America replies, "How sweeter and nobler it is to live for one's country."

In this hour when we glorify the deeds of the first American, of the patriots who lived for their countrymen, we ask, "What acts in the exalted career served to secure the most profitable inheritance to his Nation?"

While we salute with sublime praise the valor of the soldier, exalt the strategy of the commander, and bow to the shade of the Christian gentleman, we turn to this occasion to testify to America that on the strength and sovereignty of union, Washington built our house. We hear him declare, as did the great apostle, "On this rock I build my house and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

AS GUIDE OF THE CONSTITUTION

We see the soldier-statesman enter the tabernacle where is to be molded the tablet of the Constitution. He is silent and watchful; his soul is vowing to all the gods of fate that, though the monarchs of the world kingdoms had sentenced the first true republican form of democracy to failure and death, they shall see that the sun pictured on the chair, against which the president of the convention leaned, should be the emblem of a rising sun, not a setting one.

Let us know that Washington seeing the past moving in panorama of history, reflected how Greece was shattered by the dissension and disunion of its sections; how in this distraction and division it was overcome by Rome and trampled under iron shod to slavery; noting how Rome with unrestrained power turned upon herself the audacious spears of caste and class, split her cordon of strength until its shivered ranks ran to the hills where it was swallowed by the barbarian hordes swarming from the hidden north; and then how the divided angles were overcome by the Norman conquerers—turning Saxon England into a German-French conquest.

Aye, recalling the desolation put upon the American colonies by their conflicts of pride in the day when France led conquest against them, Washington still feeling the pain thrusting against his heart, where his country divided in purpose, conflicting in systems, with local contention of preference and power; starved the soldiers of the Revolution and froze them with neglect. He remembering how from Trenton to Yorktown, the young Nation from weakness risked surrender to its destroyers, and periled death through the contest of divisions, and that in all this there was not one unit of power anywhere to command—to compel and to save.

Let us feel that something in him spoke the words of the poet:

"I shrink to see a modern coast whose riper times have yet to be;
Where the new rivers claimed them free—from that long drip of human tears—
Which peoples old in tragedy have left upon the centuried years."

The question arose asking, after all that had been done, were national interests to be wrecked upon the rock of local jealousy? Were petty differences and provincial councils to prevail as against a union of desire, a union of hope, a union of purpose—the fulfillment of nation?

Truly through all that Washington endured, wrote Thoreau, as given us by Hampton Carson in his great address before the University of Pennsylvania, "Washington in his erectness and his persistency holds with dignified silence to simple deeds. He does not fluctuate or linger, nor stoop nor swerve. Amidst all he is nobly silent and assured."

WASHINGTON AS PRESIDENT

Stepping to the plane of his greater responsibilities, Washington confronted a public debt of $50,000,000. Eight million dollars of it was due France and Holland who had been our friends in a trying hour. Thousands of our patriotic sufferers at home were holding the dishonored bills of the Continental Congress.

Though Paul Jones had with our splintered Navy swept the seas and forced the corsairs of Algiers to hang their heads in contrition for their assaults upon our commerce, yet everything at home of needed value languished. A Congress had fled from Philadelphia to Princeton. Washington only seemed to arise to the needs. Neither Adams nor Franklin nor Hamilton had yet the birth of his vision.

"He dipt into the future far as human eye could see Saw the vision of the world—and all the wonder that would be."

On March 4, 1783, he wrote to Hamilton, "My wish is to see the Union established upon permanent principles." In his circular letter to the governors of the States he urged the forgetfulness of local prejudices and policies. He besought concessions and sacrifices of individual advantages to the interests of the community.

To Benjamin Harrison, Governor of Virginia, he wrote, January 18, 1784, "If there is not a change in the system of unreasonable jealousy of localities, there will be our downfall as a Nation."

And to Henry Lee, in October, he cried forth, "Influence is not government. Let us have a government by which our lives, liberties, and properties will be secured or let us know the worst at once." By this creed, by this defiant declaration of liberty or death—"my country or my grave"—that Knox wrote to Washington, saying, "The judgment of the ages entitles you to the encomium of the Father of your Country."

In this struggle for the principle to preserve our Nation as one integral unit, his great object was to avoid divisions which would make us a prey to the assault of vengeful foreign foes. On this issue and purpose Washington suffered the attacks accusing him of ambition to be king—of assuming the schemes of a monarch, taking to himself tyrant force to perpetuate himself in power.

None of these accusations, false and painful as they were, moved him. He must have recalled with King Richard, as Shakespeare expressed his sentiment:

"No might nor greatness in mortality can censure 'scape;
Back wounding calumny the whitest virtue strikes—
There's no king so great can tie up the gall in the slanderous tongue."

In all of this we see the purpose and faith of this father. When arising in the great event he declared the duty of the day, saying: "Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair. The event is in the hands of God."

By this policy of union of nations and sovereignty of people, Washington as President commanded admiration. He made the minister of France treat us with deference, and forced England to salute us with respect.

Washington had anticipated his Farewell Address by writing to Sir Edward Newham, "I hope the United States will be able to keep disengaged from the labyrinth of European politics and wars; and that before long they will by the adoption of good national government have become so respectable in the eyes of the world that none may assume to treat us with insult or contempt."

It was in this spirit Washington in his farewell message proclaimed to the earth that the policy of America as a people must be friendship with all—but politically as a nation to keep to our homes. It was then he declared to Europe our warning—Stand back! Hands off America! This continent belongs to the American people!

To guarantee this possession he commanded "that in time of peace we prepare for war"—not that we prepare to war on any people—but to be prepared against war made on us. It is the Washington policy that against assault our duty is not flight but fight.

It was the success in the preservation of the Republic with courage to the world and honor to ourselves, that brought Fox and Pitt of England to certify Washington as "The heir of all the ages; in the foremost files of time."

AMERICA AND THE WORLD OF TO-DAY

May we not now in the growth and fullness of our national greatness view the vindication of the Washington policy of national union. Here we abide as against every opposition from without—an harmonious people. Compared to the nations of the earth, we stand superior in strength and power; for service to man, of any nation in the world. Rich in possession of that which gives content and happiness, we bestow blessings on mankind in every sphere of civilization, and rescue the oppressed with the hand of humanity and the angel of peace. We seek no power from our strong union with which to subjugate any people, nor oppress misfortune in any sphere of human endurance.

We summon the world to note that when in the late crisis that threatened the existence of the royal lands once our assailants, each turned to us crying, "Help me, Cassius, or I sink." We answered their call—gave them refuge, rescued them by our union of strength—as our Nation gave our children to die that the children of other nations might live.

Then we turned, as turn we this day to our late foe, to greet new Germany with hope; to aid with favor and bless her with a God's benediction. To-day this union of Washington is the inspiration of every people struggling for liberty and the hope of every nation praying for justice.

HOOVER AND COOLIDGE TO FOLLOW WASHINGTON

On this natal day as we salute the advent of a new President, paying our due homage to the one retiring in honor, we find our security in the knowledge that as it was from Washington to Wilson—there will be continued from Coolidge and Hoover—to those yet to come to the glory of the power; the preserving policies that has so long guided us, proclaiming, "In matters of home divide as we may, but against attacks from abroad, united, whatever the day."

So in this hour of your tribute, let us know that as the sentry of passing days pacing the rounds on the watchtower of civilization—conning the ominous signs of the times—shall hear rung out to America the challenge, "Watchman, what of the night?" there will come from our united people the answer, saying, "America, firm in the faith and preserved in the teachings of George Washington, thank God—all is well."

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the conference committee a question, and I shall not delay the Senate beyond that.

The Senate inserted a twofold amendment in the bill. One was in the usual language, with reference to the second and each alternate ship, to the effect that the navy yards should be given preference in construction. The other was preserving the mandatory provisions of the authorization cruiser bill, so that the first and each alternate ship thereafter must be constructed in the navy yards. I understand now that the conference report preserves that amendment and it remains in the bill.

Mr. HALE. Exactly as the Senate passed it.

SURVEY OF INDIAN CONDITIONS

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr FRAZIER. At the close of the morning hour yesterday the Senate had before it Senate Resolutions 303 and 308, Orders of Business 1823 and 1824, authorizing the continuation of hearings by the Indian Affairs Committee under Senate Resolution 79, and providing funds to carry on the work.

At that time our able leader here, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], had told me that he expected the Senate to adjourn and have a morning hour this morning. Afterwards, it was agreed not to adjourn. I am interested in getting those measures up, but I have no thought of trying to delay the conference report on the naval bill. I am willing to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement right now, and if it is granted, all well and good. If not, I am prepared to talk for some time, at least.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. My colleague [Mr. HAYDEN] was called out of the Chamber on an important matter. I assure the Senator that he will have no objection to the consideration and adoption of the Senator's two resolutions just as soon as the Navy bill is out of the way; and I see no reason why, as soon as this conference report is agreed to, the Senate should not take up the resolutions to which the Senator adverts, and agree to them within a minute.

Mr. FRAZIER. A minute is no longer now than it will be afterwards. We have 20 minutes before 1 o'clock right now.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator from Arizona speak for the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS]?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not mean to speak for my own colleague; but from the conversation I had with him I wish to assure the Senate that he has no intention of objecting, but he reserved the right and had the right to include in the RECORD——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must remind the Senator from Arizona of the unanimous-consent agreement whereby, at the conclusion of the consideration of the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, the Senate has agreed to take up the calendar for the consideration of unobjected bills until 1 o'clock.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Chair. I would not have known that if the Chair had not told me; but I do say that the way to pass the Navy bill is to agree to the conference report now, and then, by unanimous consent, to take up and agree to the resolutions to which the Senator from North Dakota refers. I think that can be done, and we will be through in two minutes; so I will stop talking and let the Senate do that.

Mr. HALE. Vote!

Mr. FRAZIER. I am perfectly willing to do that if that will be agreed to, but I want a unanimous-consent agreement to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the Senator from North Dakota submitted a unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the consideration of the conference report on the Navy bill Senate Resolutions 303 and 308 be taken up for consideration.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, the Senate has already entered into a unanimous-consent agreement as to what will be done at that time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas will state the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The business of the Senate has already been fixed by unanimous-consent order providing that the Senate shall proceed, immediately following the conclusion of this conference report, to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, commencing where we left off yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, under Senate Resolution 79 the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs were authorized to conduct an investigation into the Indian situation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now, without further debate, vote upon the two resolutions in which the Senator is interested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement of two or three minutes.

Mr. ASHURST. I suggest that the Senator do that after the resolutions are taken up.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am not going to consent to anything until the Navy bill is disposed of. I am not going to be run over here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, on January 17 and January 23 of this year resolutions were offered authorizing the continuation of the work of the investigating committee and providing further funds to carry on the investigation.

These resolutions were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I personally asked the chairman of the committee to take up those measures as speedily as possible, in order that we might get action, so that we could make our preparations to go on with the investigations if we were to continue. I was promised from day to day that the resolutions would be taken up. It was not until February 16 that the resolutions were reported to the Senate.

Since that time I have conferred daily with our able leader, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], as to getting the resolutions up, and the Senator was very much interested, because he is interested in Indian questions, and I have taken his advice, but have been unable to get any action on the resolutions.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. As a member of the committee, and in harmony with what the chairman is saying, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the naval appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside and that the two resolutions to which the Senator is addressing himself be adopted without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I object. The Senate is proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, we have been unable to get any favorable action on these resolutions, and I have been subjected to a great deal of criticism because action has not been taken. As I said, I have been following the advice of the leader on this side of the Chamber, whose advice, I think, is usually very good.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask for order in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. FRAZIER. While I am perfectly willing to admit that this conference report is of importance, and perhaps should be acted upon at once, nevertheless, there are other matters which are important, too.

We have in this country a lot of American Indians, people belonging to a race who were here before our ancestors came here, before the white men came to the American continent. The Indians from time to time have been driven back and corraled on certain reservations and they have been made the wards of the Government of the United States.

Complaints have come in vast numbers to the Committee on Indian Affairs since I have been chairman of it asking for investigations. Complaints have been made as to mistreatment and about a number of things. I think without doubt there is great need of investigation. A year ago, after Senate Resolution 79 was adopted, a subcommittee was appointed and the investigation was started. We employed a legal adviser or special investigator, with the consent of the committee, and certain other investigators were employed and sent out to various places to make preliminary investigations and to talk with the people who had made complaints.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FRAZIER. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am informed, and I believe, that when the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the calendar under the order agreed upon the Senator can have his resolution passed without objection. It is on the calendar and will be reached under the procedure the Senate has agreed upon.

Mr. WHEELER. It was passed over when reached yesterday.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand it was passed over yesterday; but my information is that it will be passed now, if the Senator chooses to let the Senate proceed with the call of the calendar.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to inquire when we are to proceed with the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We were to have proceeded with the calendar immediately following the disposition of the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Until 1 o'clock?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes. Practically the entire time has been taken up with discussion of other subjects than the conference report, but now we are approaching the hour of 1 o'clock, when another order of business will supersede the conference report on the naval appropriation bill. I have not the slightest objection to the resolution which the Senator seeks to have passed, and my information is that it will be passed if it is reached in the orderly procedure.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I objected to the resolution yesterday. I told the Senator from North Dakota that I would not object to-day. I have no objection to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest that we dispose of the conference report, and then if the Senator wants to call his resolution up out of order, as far as I am concerned, I will not object.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Let us vote on the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and then on the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota right away.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am perfectly willing to relinquish the floor at this time, with the understanding that the vote will be taken.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the question be put on the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BLAINE, Mr. BROOKHART, and Mr. GEORGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I think there is no necessity for undue haste. I for one am going to exercise the right, which is not a personal right but a representative right of the people. That right involves the duty of a legislative body to give full and fair consideration to every question that is before it.

We are in this situation: There is a possibility of the adoption of a conference report in the Senate which may be rejected in the House under rules quite different from the rules which prevail in this body. It would therefore seem to me, and does seem to me, that the orderly course to pursue is to await action by the other body.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the papers are in this body. This is an ordinary conference report and, as is always done with appropriation bills, whenever a matter comes over on which there must be a separate vote in the House, that vote is taken. Then it comes back to the Senate, and we simply agree to the action of the House, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand, but that is the very situation——

Mr. HALE. It is merely pro forma. It happens in the case of every appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand, but that is the very situation which ordinarily drives the Senate conferees to consent to the dictates and demands of one or two men in the House of Representatives. The result has repeatedly been that amendments have been offered and accepted by the Senate with the understanding, the silent consciousness, of those who have had management of the bill, that those amendments would be stricken out when the bill went to conference. I have seen debates proceed in this body for many days when some of us at least assumed that when the Senate adopted an amendment, the conferees of the Senate would not readily recede, but too often the situation has been that there has been no purpose on the part of the conferees to insist upon the amendments adopted by the Senate.

I know that my colleagues around and about me are very seductive in their soft speech, and I say it as a compliment to my colleagues. I am almost persuaded; but, Mr. President, I think there is something more in this proposition than just the adoption or rejection of this conference report. The legislative power of the Senate is practically annulled under the procedure that has been followed in the past.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the constitutional duty and the constitutional prerogative of this body should be asserted. We are presumed to have in America a representative government, but when one or two men in either branch of Congress possess the power to defeat legislation, then we have in America not a representative democracy but a self-constituted dictatorship.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, all unconsciously the Senator is exercising the same power which he is now denouncing.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I want to suggest to my very gracious friend from California that I am pursuing my duty on this occasion as he has pursued his duties in the past, and I do not believe that he intends to impute to me any such power.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I never insinuate; I state my views clearly if I can.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I not only yield to the Senator from Virginia, but I desire to inform the Senator that I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. For what purpose?

Mr. FRAZIER. In order that I may ask unanimous consent for a vote on Senate Resolutions 303 and 306.

Mr. GLASS. I will yield for that purpose alone if the Senator can assure me there will not be any extended discussion of the matter.

Mr. FRAZIER. I would appreciate it very much if the Senator will let me try it at least. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Nos. 1823 and 1824, being Senate Resolution 303, increasing the limit of expenditure for a survey of Indian conditions in the United States, and Senate Resolution 308, continuing until the end of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress Senate Resolution No. 79, authorizing a general survey of Indian conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, yesterday it was stated that after the disposition of the naval conference report this morning we would proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar and continue thereon until 1 o'clock. It was also stated that if we did not dispose of the conference report before 1 o'clock, then further provision would be made for consideration of the calendar. Unless that is to be done, I do not think we ought now to go back to measures on the calendar which have already been passed over when reached on the last call of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia object?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who objected, has withdrawn his objection. These are important resolutions. I hope the Senator will let them go through. We will try later on, after the conference report is disposed of, to fix a time for the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. GEORGE. I wanted some assurance of that fact because it is nothing but fair. These resolutions were reached in their regular order on the calendar and were debated at considerable length, and thereby other matters further down on the calendar were postponed.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Ohio withdrew his objection, and I think the resolutions will be adopted without any discussion or objection.

Mr. GEORGE. At any rate, I wanted some assurance that we would have another chance at the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, Mr. President; I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 61. An act granting an increase of pension to Louise A. Wood;

S. 1547. An act for the relief of Johns-Manville Corporation;

S. 1766. An act for the relief of R. H. King;

S. 2291. An act for the relief of certain seamen and any and all persons entitled to receive a part or all of money now held by the Government of the United States on a purchase contract of steamship Orion who are judgment creditors of the Black Star Line (Inc.) for wages earned;

S. 2695. An act for the relief of Gilliam Grissom;

S. 3002. An act for the relief of Mina Bintliff;

S. 3233. An act for the relief of Harry E. Good, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Ephraim N. Good, deceased;

S. 4234. An act authorizing the purchase of certain lands by John P. Whiddon;

S. 4604. An act for the relief of James L. McCulloch;

S. 4811. An act for the relief of C. J. Colville;

S. 4817. An act for the relief of the Federal Construction Co. (Inc.);

S. 4819. An act for the relief of Roy M. Lisso, liquidating trustee of the Pelican Laundry (Ltd.);

S. 4890. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the Gallup Undertaking Co. for burial of four Navajo Indians;

S. 5058. An act for the relief of George A. Hormel & Co.;

S. 5090. An act for the relief of Lewis H. Easterly;

S. 5221. An act for the relief of Cary Dawson;

S. 5270. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to donate a bronze cannon to the city of Phoenix, Ariz.;

S. 5326. An act for the relief of Jessie L. Kinsey;

S. 5514. An act for the relief of E. Gellerman, doing business under the name of the Lutz-Berg Motor Co., at Denver, Colo.;

S. 5749. An act authorizing the presentation of the distinguished flying cross to Capt. Benjamin Mendez;

S. 5766. An act for the relief of Andrew T. Bailey;

S. 5776. An act for the relief of Wynona A. Dixon; and

S. J. Res. 58. Joint Resolution to relieve Elizabeth Robins Pennell from necessity of providing a surety on her bond for the benefit of the United States as residuary legatee and remainderman under the will of Joseph Pennell.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13981) to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 1338. An act for the relief of James E. Jenkins; and

S. 4848. An act for the relief of T. L. Young and C. T. Cole.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 2441. An act for the relief of William P. Brady;

H. R. 4611. An act for the relief of Marion M. Clark;

H. R. 4624. An act for the relief of Thomas Finley;

H. R. 5933. An act for the relief of Mabel L. Brown;

H. R. 5950. An act for the relief of Alice Sarrazin;

H. R. 6884. An act for the relief of Thomas F. Sutton;

H. R. 7560. An act for the relief of James P. Hamill;

H. R. 8519. An act for the relief of A. N. Worstell;

H. R. 9530. An act for the relief of W. L. Inabnit;

H. R. 10817. An act for the relief of the Merrill Engineering Co.;

H. R. 10912. An act to reimburse or compensate Capt. John W. Elkins, jr., for part of salary retained by War Department and money turned over to same by him;

H. R. 11149. An act for the relief of Albert D. Castleberry;

H. R. 12255. An act for the relief of Martha C. Booker, administratrix of the estate of Hunter R. Booker, deceased; H. H. Holt; and Annie V. Groome, administratrix of the estate of Nelson S. Groome, deceased;

H. R. 12782. An act for the relief of C. L. Beardsley;

H. R. 13127. An act for the relief of Lowell G. Fuller;

H. R. 13288. An act to authorize a cash award to William P. Flood for beneficial suggestions resulting in improvement in naval material;

H. R. 13869. An act for the relief of John Wesley Clark;

H. R. 14089. An act for the relief of Dale S. Rice;

H. R. 14583. An act for the relief of A. Brizard (Inc.);

H. R. 14767. An act for the relief of Howard C. Frink;

H. R. 14975. An act for the relief of Capt. William Cassidy;

H. R. 15029. An act for the relief of Edward A. Burkett;

H. R. 15190. An act granting six months' pay to Annie Bruce;

H. R. 15197. An act for the relief of Alma Rawson;

H. R. 15293. An act for the relief of Lieut. John J. Powers, Quartermaster Corps;

H. R. 15424. An act for the relief of Dr. W. H. Parsons;

H. R. 15489. An act for the relief of Leonard T. Newton, pharmacist mate, first class, United States Navy;

H. R. 15914. An act for the relief of John T. Painter;

H. R. 15976. An act for the relief of Lieut. (Junior Grade) Victor B. Tate, United States Navy, and Paul Franz, torpedo man (third class), United States Navy;

H. R. 16090. An act for the relief of Hugh Dortch;

H. R. 16560. An act for the relief of Francis J. Moore;

H. R. 16893. An act for the relief of Lieut. Thomas C. Edrington, Supply Corps, United States Navy;

H. R. 16894. An act for the relief of Lieut. Edward F. Ney, Supply Corps, United States Navy;

H. R. 16895. An act for the relief of Lieut. Henry Guilmette, Supply Corps, United States Navy;

H. R. 16889. An act for the relief of Lieut. Francis D. Humphrey, Supply Corps, United States Navy;

H. R. 16896. An act for the relief of Capt. Walter B. Izard, Supply Corps, United States Navy, retired;

H. R. 16897. An act for the relief of Lieut. Edward Mixon, Supply Corps, United States Navy;

H. R. 16899. An act for the relief of Lieut. Archy W Barnes, Supply Corps, United States Navy;

H. R. 16900. An act for the relief of Capt. William L. F. Simonpietri, Supply Corps, United States Navy;

H. R. 16902. An act for the relief of Lieut. John M. Holmes, Supply Corps, United States Navy; and

H. R. 17001. An act for the relief of Capt. Walter R. Gherardi, United States Navy.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES IN CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1727) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes,' approved May 22, 1920, and acts in amendment thereof, approved July 3, 1926, as amended," which were, on page 2, to strike out line 21; and in line 22, to strike out the words "of retirement" and insert "any five consecutive years of allowable service at the option of the employee"; on page 3, after line 8, to insert:

SEC. 3. In the case of those who, before the effective date of this act, shall have been retired on annuity under the provisions of the act of May 22, 1920, or said act as amended, or as extended by Executive orders, the annuity shall be computed, adjusted, and paid under the provisions of this act, but this act shall not be so construed as to reduce the annuity of any person retired before its effective date, nor shall any increase in annuity commence before such effective date."

On page 3, line 9, to strike out "3" and insert "4"; and on page 3, line 10, to strike out "1928" and insert "1929."

Mr. DALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. GLASS. For what purpose?

Mr. DALE. I merely wish to move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator for that purpose with the distinct understanding that it involves no discussion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Vermont what changes have been made?

Mr. DALE. There are no material changes. The date on which the bill takes effect is changed to July 1, 1929.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The amendments were concurred in.

BITUMINOUS COAL INDUSTRY—STATEMENT OF JOHN L. LEWIS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a statement of John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, which was made before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce on Senate bill 4490, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in bituminous coal; provide for consolidation, mergers, and cooperative marketing; regulate fuel supply of interstate carriers; require the licensing of corporations producing and shipping coal in interstate commerce; and to create a bituminous coal commission, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. LEWIS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the subcommittee, the hearings before the full Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce during the last session of Congress developed conclusive proof that the bituminous-coal industry had drifted into such uneconomic and disorderly operation that nothing short of Government regulation could possibly be relied upon to adjust this basic industry to business and labor standards consistent with American enterprise.

Operators testifying before your committee admitted that the industry is selling the bulk of all coal produced below production costs. These same operators admitted that they were making no concerted effort to stop this wasteful dissipation of capital assets. Six months have passed since Congress recessed and during all this period not one single coal association, not one single leader in the industry has come forward with any proposal to correct the disorderly conduct of "King Coal."

If the operators know the present-day condition of the industry, then it must be admitted by coal management that the industry is by far worse off to-day than was the case when the hearings before this committee were recessed last May.

Since the adjournment of Congress, the United Mine Workers of America have accepted wage reductions ranging from 17 to 33 per cent in the unionized coal fields, not because the economic conditions and possibilities warranted such decreases, but due solely to the fact that the lack of leadership within the industry resulted in no effort being made to stop ruinous competition, external or internal.

The uneconomic wage now forced on the mine workers is but another result of the incompetence of the leadership which has prevailed in bituminous coal since the industry was first classified as an important industry, or more than 70 years.

Operators testifying before your committee endeavored to show that the earnings of the mine workers were comparable with those paid in other industries and that the charge by the union that low wages, distressful living conditions, and, in general, an un-American labor relationship prevailed, was ill-founded propaganda. I want to quote from a speech of Fred W. Shibley, vice president of the Bankers Trust Co., New York, who delivered the principal address before the National Coal Association Convention, November 15, 1928, at Cleveland, Ohio.

"Nobody is happy in the whole bituminous-coal industry," said Shibley. "The correlative facts are that a fair return is not being earned upon the capital actively employed in the coal industry, and that labor is not being permitted to earn wages commensurate with the cost of living in this country or comparable with the wages paid by successful industries.

"There is no industry in this country in a more deplorable condition at the present time than the coal industry. * * * The coal industry is one of the greatest national industries. The agricultural industry is the greatest of all industries. There can be no extended national prosperity until the farmer and the producer of coal each receives his fair share of the national dollar of income.

"Operators know in most cases when they are selling coal at less than cost of production, but their stockholders are not alive to the wasteful destructiveness of such action. Their only excuse is that everyone is doing it, a poor excuse in the extreme."

Here you have straight-shooting criticism of one of the country's leading bankers attributing the plight of coal direct to the men who manage bituminous-coal production. His statements are unqualified. Certainly the remarks of Mr. Shibley can not be characterized as "the wail of a union-labor leader speaking in behalf of barrack dwellers whom he seeks to hold in line that he might control a labor trust and perpetuate himself in political office." Yet there is little difference in the language used by mine union officials and that used by Mr. Shibley, financier of Wall Street. The conclusions of these two divergent forces are identical. And then Mr. Shibley goes on to ask some very pertinent questions of the bituminous-coal operators.

"Do coal operators know their true costs?

"Do coal operators realize that they are drifting toward a great cataract known as bankruptcy?

"Do consumers of coal realize what might happen to them if a large number of coal operators were obliged to discontinue operations for want of working capital?

"Do railroads appreciate their obligation to the coal industry?

"Do public-service corporations properly evaluate the service of coal producers and their indirect contribution to their success?

"Do manufacturers realize the importance of restoring from three hundred to five hundred million dollars represented by increased earnings and increased wages in the coal industry to consumer purchasing capacity?

"Do the great majority of the people know that by paying 50 cents a ton more for the coal they use they would receive indirect dividends greatly in excess of this modest increase in sales price?

"Finally, does labor know the truth about the coal situation? Do the miners realize that the people who are keeping them in a hand-to-mouth condition of existence are the operators who sell below cost and the consumer who purchases at less than cost? Do they know that they can never prosper as long as these two people trade on so uneconomic a basis?

To the last question of Mr. Shibley's address to labor the United Mine Workers give an emphatic "Yes." The leadership of the union has been fighting an uphill fight for 40 years to correct the very abuses which he has detailed in his questions, yet, despite all that has been done by the union, buttressed by investigations by States and the Federal Government, and despite all the warnings of economic agencies, the bituminous-coal operators have refused to adopt any intelligent plan to put the house of coal in order.

As an industrial code to correct the existing abuses in the production and distribution of bituminous coal, Mr. Shibley proposes corrective trade practices which are identical with those suggested by the United Mine Workers of America, the United States Coal Commission, and various economic agencies. Mr. Shibley states the program thus:

"No overproduction of coal.

"No sales of coal to the public carriers or to anyone else at prices less than the cost of production.

"No shipments of unsold consigned coal.

"No duplication of sales effort.

"No unfair and unethical sales practices.

"No expansive invasion of unnatural sales territory, and consequently no uneconomical haulage charge.

"Under such ideal conditions as have been outlined, capital would receive a fair return, labor would be satisfied. There would be no strikes for the same reasons that there are no strikes in the automobile industry. Methods of production and distribution would be standardized and economies effected that would result ultimately in very cheap prices to consumers of coal.

"Instead of purchasing necessitous coal at prices yielding a profit to no one, the public-service corporations and manufacturers generally would find that in paying an equitable price for coal they were stimulating consumer capacity for their own service and products, that the business of the Nation was being strengthened and the national prosperity increased. Miners, like other well-paid workmen, would contribute to the national purchasing power and the deposits in savings banks.

"And right here it should be stated that the predictions recently made of a broadening national prosperity by Charles M. Schwab and Henry Ford can never materialize as long as certain classes of capital and labor are pauperized through a persistence of uneconomic conditions.

"The time has come to show up the coal operator who, in ignorance of his costs, sells his product constantly below the cost of production.

"The time has come to educate the consumers of coal to pay a fair price for the product in their own interests. A great deal of education will be necessary along this line.

"But many large industries refuse to recognize the economics of the situation. They continue to play the necessities of one coal operator against the pitiable condition of another, beating down the price to a ruinous level while they rejoice at the efficiency of their purchasing departments.

"These people in many instances are manufacturers of the machinery and equipment used by the operators, or of the merchandise consumed by the miners. They are killing the goose that lays the golden egg, but they do not know it, or cynically they disregard the fact.

"Certain large consumers know they are paying an unfair and uneconomic price for coal, but public opinion has not become so aroused that they are ashamed of browbeating coal salesmen."

The evils outlined by Mr. Shibley constitute the prevalent fundamental abuses in the coal industry. The remedial trade practices outlined by him would no doubt solve the major mine problem. But when and how are these trade practices to become effective is the vital question with which 500,000 miners and their families and the business men of the coal regions are concerned. Bituminous coal operators have demonstrated to the satisfaction of every agency that has investigated coal that the 5,000 separate units of the industry can not be brought together under a voluntary cooperative plan of organized production and distribution, embracing the reforms outlined by Mr. Shibley and thereby improving the status of the industry.

Millions have been spent by operators in freight-rate wars to obtain competitive advantages through revised freight-rate structures. Millions of capital assets are being wasted annually in futile competition, but nowhere does the record reveal that the operators have contributed money or applied constructive business thought and ability toward a solution of coal's vital, fundamental, economic problems.

To one informed of the underlying causes for the "disorderly conduct" of bituminous coal, it is utterly absurd even to entertain the thought that the time will ever come when the bituminous coal industry can establish sane business relations through corrective measures brought about of its own free application.

And here again I want to quote Mr. Shibley, to bear testimony to the extraordinary abilities of the operators to pull in opposite directions. All in all, Mr. Shibley's remarks constitute the most thorough raking over that the operators have received from an invited guest in many, many years. It certainly can be no boast of the industry that its leaders were compelled to sit and listen to a banker of the rank of Mr. Shibley tell them the fatally cumulative consequences of their own multitudinous stupidities.

"Much can be accomplished," said Mr. Shibley, "toward a betterment of conditions in the coal industry through the merger of properties lending themselves to economic groupings. The consolidation into one great corporation of the various Pocahontas coal properties which failed recently, would have demonstrated this fact in a convincing way.

"But it failed as many other attempts at consolidation have failed because the attempt was made before the Pocahontas operators, in part at least, were ready for it. The necessity for such a consolidation was felt by them, but they had not learned how to cooperate. The old fear of each other pervaded their thoughts. They dare not risk their properties under a management other than their own, because they had not been convinced that they would prosper more as a group than as individuals.

"The desire for cooperation and the thorough understanding of the fundamental principles of cooperation must be acquired before an economic consolidation of coal properties can be undertaken. It is only through cooperation and subsequent consolidation that the menace of overproduction can be minimized.

"Great corporations effectively managed can produce and market coal so much cheaper than scattered individual operators that there is reason to believe that they can maintain the industry on an economic basis even if the individual operators decide to continue the dying financially by that lingering, but apparently fascinating, disease called 'selling at less than cost.'

"I believe we are entering upon a period in which great producing and distributing corporations will exercise a dominating influence in business.

"The consuming public is intelligent and discriminating. It favors stabilization in prices and is not inclined to view with favor an industry in which prices fluctuate violently, and one which punishes them when the opportunity offers. The coal industry lends itself to consolidation. Mine operations can be readily controlled by a central organization and there can be no argument, of course, as to the possible economies in distribution.

"But how consolidate under present conditions? When the blind lead the blind both are liable to fall in the ditch."

Mr. S. A. Taylor, one of America's foremost mining engineers, was another speaker who analyzed the backwardness and inefficient management of the bituminous coal industry before the assembled delegates to the recent Cleveland convention of the National Coal Association.

"If we assume," said Taylor, "at the present time an excess capacity of 300,000,000 tons, the actual outlay of money to maintain it would be equal to $45,000,000 per year, and when to this is added the cost of capital at 6 per cent, it would make $60,000,000 per year, or for both items the sum of $105,000,000 yearly to carry this excess tonnage capacity."

According to the Standard Statistics Service, coal companies that made public reports to the degree that an intelligent summary could be made for the year of 1927 showed that the per cent of gross margin saved for net income resulted in a deficit of 3.7 per cent. This means that in the year 1927 the reporting coal companies showed a combined loss of around 7½ cents the ton on all coal sold based upon an average selling price of $2 per ton.

If this ratio of loss obtained for the entire industry, it means that an additional loss of $37,500,000 based upon 500,000,000 tons production must be added to the $105,000,000 loss detailed by Mr. Taylor. But the facts will disclose a much greater loss than this huge total of $142,000,000 which only partially tells the story. It is common knowledge that a large majority of operators have been reluctant to deal with depreciation and depletion, fearful that the staggering results would be too much for their credit rating and mental well being.

The most important losses are those resulting from spreading bankruptcies taking heavy toll in all the principal coal fields. As a matter of fact the financial structure of bituminous coal is so insecure and wabbly that no accurate annual loss can be estimated. Not only are the coal companies bankrupting themselves by selling coal below production costs, but in so doing the whole surplus capital of entire mining communities is becoming impaired, as witnessed by the closing recently of three banks within one week in Eastern Kentucky, resulting from frozen assets caused by excessive loans to coal companies.

It is perhaps unnecessary to point out that local depressions of this character do not remain local. In the recent report of the Secretary of Commerce on the state of business in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, the slump in industrial output and employment which characterized the later months of 1927 was attributed to the Mississippi floods, the temporary curtailment of activity by a leading motor manufacturer during a change of model, and similar factors.

If passing events such as these can make such a considerable difference in the volume of business and employment, what can be expected from the permanent economic wreckage of great areas of the country, areas which supply the fuel from which comes over two-thirds of the power employed in American industry, areas which supply the lucrative freight to the great rail carriers who serve all other industries more efficiently and cheaply because of the backlog of coal revenues?

In order that the committee might fully comprehend the extent to which selling piracy is being executed by coal companies the following comparisons will reveal the picture in part:

In 1923 Kentucky produced 44,777,000 tons of coal, for which Kentucky operators received $113,735,000. In 1926 Kentucky produced 66,330,000 tons of coal, for which Kentucky operators received $110,194,000. Production increased 21,553,000 tons, or 48 per cent, while sales realization decreased $3,541,000, or 3 per cent.

Virginia in 1923 produced 11,761,000 tons of coal, for which Virginia operators received $32,460,000. In 1926 Virginia produced 14,493,000 tons of coal, for which Virginia operators received $24,827,000. Production increased 2,731,000 tons, or 23 per cent, while sales realization decreased $7,633,000, or 24 per cent.

In 1923 West Virginia produced 107,899,000 tons of coal, for which West Virginia operators received $285,934,000. In 1926 West Virginia produced 147,209,000 tons of coal, for which West Virginia operators received $270,864,000. Production increased 39,310,000 tons, or 36 per cent, while sales realization decreased $15,070,000, or 5 per cent.

The trouble with coal operators is that they have been trying to expand markets by increasing the demand for coal over which they have no control while not concerning themselves about the price at which they sell coal over which the should maintain control.

If there is one man in the country who should intimately know the value of the abilities of individual coal operators, as well as the collective response as regards intelligent cooperation among operators, that man is Harry L. Gandy, secretary of the National Coal Association. It might be well to inquire as to Mr. Gandy's appraisal.

The prevalent practice of selling bituminous coal at the mines below cost of production was the chief topic of discussion at the May, 1925, convention of the American Mining Congress. Mr. Gandy made this contribution:

"Whenever operators acquire sufficient courage and self-control to resolve that no coal shall go out of their mines at an unremunerative price, some of the difficulties of the industry will be over."

The spine of the coal industry, recognized by its executive head as excessively weak in 1925, has evidently completely buckled, for it is a known fact that competition has reached far greater destructive levels in this year 1928.

Mr. Gandy's conclusion is but additional proof that the United Mine Workers have accurately gauged the ability of the industry when we say that no hope of progress can be expected based upon the voluntary cooperation of operators within the industry.

Following the recess of coal hearings last May, Mr. G. J. Anderson, president of the Consolidation Coal Co., evidently concluded that he would assume the lead in launching a movement to restrict production and improve price realization. Mr. Anderson closed down five mines and then began an advertising campaign to enlist other operators to join in the movement to curtail output. The following is the advertisement which appeared in Fairmont, W. Va., newspapers:

"TO OUR FELLOW COAL PRODUCERS WHO BELIEVE WITH US THAT * * * EFFICIENT MEN SHOULD BE RETAINED IN THE INDUSTRY AND INEFFICIENT MINES SHOULD BE ELIMINATED FROM PRODUCTION

"The Consolidation Coal Co. believes that the present plight of the bituminous-coal industry will not be remedied by forcing unwanted coal upon an unwilling market. It sees no relief, either to the industry or to any producing company, by cutting prices below a level that permits a mine to remain in production with its natural overhead unabsorbed in its average realization.

"The Consolidation Coal Co. believes that no present useful purpose nor any contribution to future stability is to be gained by further cutting wages below a sound economic level. Whatever may be the temporary relation of labor costs to selling prices, it holds that the primary object of both mine labor and mine management must be the most regular work-time possible under a proper wage base.

"Holding, as it does, these beliefs, the company is attempting to bring both its marketing and operating policies into line with what it conceives to be a constructive economic basis. To that end it is closing for an indefinite period some of the least efficient mines, and consequently must dispense with the services of a considerable number of valued and loyal employees.

"The company is confident that the elimination of these mines will not only be to the advantage of the industry at this time, but that the greater concentration thus enforced will yield benefits to the labor remaining and to the company as a whole.

"On the other hand, it is recognized equally that there would be a loss to the industry if many of the experienced employees, thus displaced through no fault of their own or by any dissatisfaction with their services, were unable to continue in bituminous coal.

"The company has, therefore, taken this opportunity to give to its fellow producers a frank statement of the policy thus adopted. Further, in behalf of any former employees seeking affiliation elsewhere in the industry, it wishes earnestly to bespeak all proper consideration and courtesy for their applications arising out of this action.

"If the industry is to progress rapidly toward its rightful economic recovery, the Consolidation Coal Co. believes each and every producing unit must make some sacrifice to that end. We speak only for ourselves and only in the spirit of friendly cooperation. The retention of the most economic mines, and the present elimination of the least efficient, adopted voluntarily as a general program, seems to offer the speediest and most effective relief for all.

"THE CONSOLIDATION COAL CO. (INC.),
"G. J. ANDERSON, President.

"15 BROAD STREET, New York, N. Y."

It is a sad commentary upon the business sagacity of the industry that there exists no closer relationship between operators in a producing field that produces around 35,000,000 tons annually than that afforded by the insertion of a paid advertisement in a local newspaper. The whole aspect is far more distressing when you take into account the fact that Mr. Anderson is president of the largest American bituminous-coal company, in which John D. Rockefeller, jr., owns controlling interest.

Like all other feeble efforts to get at the control of uneconomic production and distribution at the source, the lamentation of Mr. Anderson failed to win any favorable response from the operators, notwithstanding the trade journals and business newspapers commended the proposal as a fundamental step in the right direction.

As further proof that operators will not heed sound business procedure, such as Mr. Anderson suggested in his advertisement, and have drifted to further depths of helpfulness in the ruinous buyers' market, the following admonition from a bulletin issued by the National Coal Association November 24, 1928, lays bare the cancerous nature of the practice of producing coal without markets:

"Sixteen thousand four hundred and sixty-one cars of bituminous coal were shown to have been unbilled at the mines or in railroad classification yards on October 1, according to the United States Bureau of Mines' stock report, recently issued as of that date. At 50 tons per car the aggregate unsold tonnage on tracks October 1 was considerably over 800,000 tons.

"That coal had a demoralizing effect on the market will be admitted by all. The questions of unbilled coal and coal on open consignment have been and are of vital concern to the entire bituminous industry. Local associations should renew discussion of these questions. They should ascertain what proportion of that unsold coal on October 1 was in their respective districts and collect figures currently. Perhaps there is no one step that would immediately have such a beneficial effect on the coal market as following the admonition: 'Produce no coal until orders are in hand therefor!'

"If every bituminous operator would firmly resolve to mine no coal until sold, that action would at once cure a situation of disastrous effect on the entire industry. The operator who produces coal before it is sold does not deceive anybody, for purchasing agents know currently how much coal is unbilled at the mines and have information as to coal consignment. Now, all together, every bituminous operator, for the elimination of the production of unsold coal."

Exhorters have been many in the coal industry over a long period of years, and if the response to admonitions be the criterion by which the industry is to be judged, then it can be truly said that the industry displays no sign of conscience. Officials of the National Coal Association know better than to expect cooperation from operators in the matter of restricting output to meet current market requirements. It is just another one of the bulletins that are sent out, received, and wastebasketed.

FUTURE OUTLOOK

The immediate future holds no promise of increased bituminous-coal consumption. Improved combustion methods and the competition of oil, gas, and electricity will take care of new uses for coal such as would have existed in the buried past, for a long period to come. Coal consumption does not depend on the price of coal to any great extent. Sales campaigns and price reductions do not and can not boost coal consumption as in other industries. Considered as a whole coal is a very minor item in the total cost of manufactured products.

Coal operators have not learned the value of the product they produce. Consequently their marketing endeavors are harum-scarum. To fill the needs of a consumer with a particular coal suited to his requirements is not the sales thought of the operator, but, on the other hand, the big idea is to slip his coal in at a reduced price with the hope that he can thereby establish a connection which will afford him a sales opportunity if and whenever there might exist a sellers' market.

In the absence of any organization among the operators a continuation of uneconomic selling methods, costly to the operators and annoying and unsatisfactory to the consumers, is certain. That competition within the coal industry will constantly grow worse and more antisocial, decreasing present price realizations, is the verdict of all who have investigated.

The future offers absolutely no hope for coal prosperity, according to advice sent out by the Standard Statistics Service to brokers and investors.

What is Standard Statistics Service? It can not be classified as political or philanthropic, but quite the contrary is recognized as the high court of financial judgment. Located within a stone's throw of the New York Stock Exchange this organization is rated the best available service on industrial analysis. Here is this organization's appraisal of coal:

"Concentrated efforts toward effecting a basic improvement in the soft-coal industry this year have so far been successful only to a limited degree. Fundamental difficulties remain uncorrected, and there is little hope for early marked improvement in earnings. In fact, larger producers will in almost every case probably report even less satisfactory operating results this year than in 1927 * * *. Reflecting complete failure of the labor union to enforce its wage demands, mining operations are now upon an open-shop basis over a wide area, while in those districts still operating under union conditions wage agreements have recently been negotiated involving rates sharply under those stipulated in the union schedules previously operative. In the aggregate, labor costs throughout the central competitive territory are roughly 20 per cent under those of a year ago * * *. Aside from the peaceful labor situation and the reduction in mining costs, there is little basis for an early optimism.

"Coal prices reflecting increased competition have averaged 10 per cent below last year's levels and currently stand at approximately the lowest point in the past 12 years.

"Furthermore, in view of the industry's fundamental overcapacity it is extremely improbable that any early sustained advance in prices can be effected. Profit margins are generally inadequate under present conditions.

And then as advice to investors this service says:

"Reflecting the unfavorable earnings' prospect interest in coal company securities has been lacking this year. In the absence of any indicated favorable developments in the near term we do not advise purchases of common stocks in this group, even at present deflated levels."

Such is the market verdict of the high court of money in America on coal under date of October 11, 1928. This judgment was rendered at a time when business forecasters everywhere were predicting record breaking earnings for industry as a whole, which in turn resulted in the greatest "bull market" of all time.

In this judgment of the court of money, rendered upon standards which are based upon and expressed in dollars and cents, we find the same conclusion as to the incompetence of the management of the coal industry which has already been placed in the records of the tribunals which have tried coal by ethical and humanitarian standards and found it socially delinquent.

The courts of engineering have found it guilty of technical incompetence. Tried by the standards of conservation of natural resources, the promotion of national self-sufficiency and of potential national defense, the industry has been convicted of imbecile waste.

That American railroads have been profiting for several years past at the expense of the demoralized coal industry by the purchase of a coal supply amounting to more than 25 per cent of the total production, at and below production costs, has already been established by the testimony given this committee.

The gas and electric utilities are buying their coal below production costs and using such coal to manufacture gas and electricity to compete with coal in supplying the increased demand for heat and power. Utilities are prosperous. Earnings are constantly increasing. The financial tipsters are advising investors to buy gas and electric utility stocks. Utilities experience no difficulty in securing ample funds to finance consolidations and improvements.

Utility rates are fixed by public-service commissions upon a basis that yields a fair return upon invested capital and the service rendered. These allowances are most generous. For the most part the structure of utility rates in the United States are predicated on coal costs from 30 to 50 per cent higher than the prevailing coal sales prices. Thus behind the unprecedented prosperity of the American public utilities lies a direct loot of the coal industry and of the natural resources upon which the future living standards of our children depend. It does not matter whether it is brought about by a conspiracy on the part of purchasing agents or by the incompetence of coal management, the result is the same. And the result is that the American coal miner is to-day the innocent victim of an un-American and uneconomic wage for his daily drudgery, and along with him the dollar of the owner of coal securities is being diminished at a perilous rate.

The fact that organized utilities are profiting at the expense of the coal industry needs no better proof than to state that utility-owned mines are closed down because utilities find it more profitable to buy coal on the open market than to produce their own requirements.

The continued expansion of gas and electric utility holding companies means a greater concentrated purchasing power and a diminished number of sales outlets for coal. The result will be that the 5,000 separate unorganized units in the coal industry will further reduce prices in an attempt to secure business.

The whole sales policy of the bituminous-coal industry revolves on an uneconomic axis. The organic sales policy embraces the sale of from 30 to 40 per cent of the total production known as screenings at from 30 to 50 cents the ton less than cost of production.

This sales condition prevails when the industry reckons itself on an earning basis. The selling of screenings below the cost of production is an ancient practice born in the industry's infancy when combustion methods demanded the coarse sizes. Hence the lower prices originally prevailed as an inducement to buyers to use screenings. Present-day combustion equipment of utilities and most manufacturing establishments demands screenings. In fact, screenings give almost equal, while powdered coal gives greater, efficiency when used under modern combustion methods than the coarse sizes. The unorganized industry, clinging to the custom of its cradle days of daddyism, has made no organized attempt to meet this changed efficiency in combustion methods which makes screenings and powdered coal a preferred product.

John Morrow, president of the Pittsburg Coal Co., addressing the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, in August, 1928, directed the attention of that group to the disproportionate cheapness of screenings, with a warning that such a condition must be corrected. Imagine, if you will, what a big laugh for an organized group of manufacturers who spend a good part of their daily lives chasing price-cutting coal salesmen from the reception rooms. Not as a feasible plan to correct the evil, but merely as the testimony of the president of one of the largest producing units showing the uneconomic results of selling screenings below cost, Mr. Morrow's address in part follows:

"In my humble opinion, you [manufacturers, industrials] have been buying your coal too cheaply, and you can not expect to keep on doing it. The reason I say that is this: American manufacturing business very largely is built upon the consumption of screenings, the undersizes of coal, and screenings comprise from one hundred to a hundred and fifty million tons of the total production of coal, bituminous, in the United States. Screenings are traditionally sold for 50 cents to a dollar a ton below the cost of producing.

"Now, I say traditionally. That has been the case for many, many years, and you gentlemen have been accustomed to buying your coal on that basis of prices. Now, I say to you that it is only reasonable for you, as business men, to expect us, as business men, to endeavor to get a better price for that one-third of our product which we have been selling to you below our production cost.

"We expect to get it not merely by asking for it, but possibly by taking the screenings away from you, doing something else with them, finding other ways of disposing of that coal, so that there won't be such a quantity of screenings to sell. And, then, if we could just persuade a few coal men that they ought not to crush their mine-run coal so that they can sell it to you at a loss, and thus insure themselves a loss on all of their product, maybe we will get somewhere after a while.

"At any rate, I repeat, that for you, as business men looking 10 years ahead, it would be well for you to take into your account the possible readjustment values on your fine sizes of coal."

What are the effects of this futile antisocial competition?

Wholesome competition is the kind of competition that is referred to as being the "life of trade." Competition that reduces prices where such reduction results in increased consumption of useful goods and services is desirable competition.

Without increased consumption lower prices do not benefit the social order. The measure of the social utility is whether it increases consumption or not. If consumption is not increased by the buyer, any financial benefit he might get and services that might result are counterbalanced by the decreased buying power and living standards of the seller.

Constructive competition has been demonstrated by countless business leaders in automobile and varied manufacturing lines. Increased output from improved manufacturing facilities operated on increased wage rates have enabled far-visioned industrialists to develop efficient methods by which the finished product has been reduced in price to such a degree that consumption increased by leaps and bounds. This plainly is socially useful competition in keeping with American thought and progress.

Destructive competition, such as the coal industry has been pursuing for many years, is distinctly antisocial. Destructive competition reduces wages, sells labor and capital assets, without increasing the consumption of the product. This benefits no one, because it destroys and impoverishes the purchasing power of such great numbers of the social order dependent upon coal for earnings, and also leads to wasteful exploitation of national assets.

The futile competition in coal has not reduced transportation or utility rates. Coal is such an infinitesimal part of manufacturing costs that no possible benefit to the consumer could accrue if the price were cut in half. No increased burden would result if the prices were doubled.

Many coal operators who have testified before this committee have attempted to excuse destructive competition by charging their conduct to the alleged inevitable operation of the law of supply and demand.

Coal operators refer to the law of supply and demand as though some supernatural force controlled a lever by which all production and sales were finally adjusted.

As a matter of fact, the law of supply and demand operates only as a regulator of production under conditions of scarcity. It performs no function, can not possibly serve to remedy or regulate the ills resulting from overproduction and free-for-all selling attempts of its own economic force, unaided and undirected.

Every agency which has investigated coal has been able to penetrate the mindless chaos and to disclose the existing evils in poignant detail.

But few have ventured to suggest a remedy. A bugaboo is met at the close of every analysis. Taboo, slogan, and shibboleth smother reason under ancient metaphysical dogmas which pass current as economic laws among the half informed.

There is an element in American business among whom the fear of governmental invastion of the sacred precincts of industrial management amounts to an obsession. Paradoxically enough the more backward an industry may be, the more it relies upon governmental intervention, such as tariff or carrier regulation in its internal relations, the more it is inclined to disregard all the canons of individualism and political liberty in labor relations, the more fanatically it clings to outworn conceptions as to the public relations and responsibilities of business management. No matter how unprogressive an industry may be, no matter how much the public welfare may depend upon its product, no matter how much poverty and oppression may prevail among its working forces, the mere hint of socially intelligent action to give more progressive management and investment capital a chance to improve things stirs up a frenzy of protest. There is something ludicrous in these fierce assertions of individual rights by the leaders of industries which have the least right to demand a doctrinaire independence of action, unless we are prepared to admit that independence is a corollary of incompetence.

We hear no such language from the leaders of industries which have proved their ability to give service. Some of the successful industries have never been regulated because they discharge their public duties so well that no demand for it ever arose. Others, like the utilities, have been regulated, and now parade their "chains" as inducements to the investor.

In such controversies as this, one hears a good deal about the rights of private property. I think that the old common-law judges in their rulings against perpetuities and spendthrift trusts have crystallized into our law as it is crystallized into common sense the fact that the right of private property is safeguarded by society, because the right to own is the right to manage, and experience has usually been that those competent to acquire property are on the average the best qualified to manage business. But when management is incompetent and appeals to historic rights, it becomes the enemy of those historic rights because it has betrayed the reason for their existence.

Irrational appeals of this sort are a potential menace to the property rights of all other classes of owners. By discrediting one species of ownership, public respect for all ownership may be weakened.

All investigators seem to be satisfied that as the industry stands the thousands of separate coal company units can not hope to reach a voluntary agreement restricting production, consequently most conclusions of investigators end in an epilogue of "why it can not be done."

I sometimes ponder the reasoning ability of coal operators, expressing themselves as opposed to Government regulation, when the facts are that fully 35 per cent of bituminous coal is consumed by regulated railroads and utilities. What would happen to transportation if we had a return to rebates and cut-rate wars? Where would our transportation system secure the capital to keep development abreast of the times if it were being operated on a basis of selling its capital assets? It is indeed a curious circumstance, a bewildering stupidity to the casual observer that the average coal leader persistently refuses to do anything of his own accord, through the promotion of consolidation, pool-selling agencies, or acceptance of any of the basic fundamentals of sound business; yet at the mere mention of Government action being invoked to promote betterments and stabilize the industry, he responds to the Babbit clarion call and proclaims his independence, his right of self determination in opposition to Government direction and possible rescue. Just now this type of business underling is busy issuing verbal and written denunciations against further Government investigations of the coal industry.

It is claimed by operators that investigations contribute nothing toward a solution of coal's problems. Furthermore, they point out that coal has been investigated 16 times since 1913, and that nothing has resulted to correct the chaotic conditions.

That nothing has been accomplished from investigations, I will agree, but the responsibility for the lack of progress rests squarely upon the operators who have refused to accept individual and collective responsibility for the improvements which the investigations have shown to be imperative.

The operators are apparently blind to developed facts. They do not seem to comprehend that the future holds nothing more than present profitless operation, unless Government regulation can be invoked under which a code of producing and selling practices can be established and through the instrumentality of Federal license operators can be educated to the advantages of being good, by observing the sane fundamentals of sound business intelligence.

There is no magic by which the industry can be made pliable to American standards. Since failure on its own resources is firmly established, then there is but one recourse left, and that is Government regulation. That such economic reasoning is shared by others, I will quote from A Way of Order for Bituminous Coal, by Hamilton and Wright, published by the Institute of Economics:

"An industry does not automatically organize itself; there is no natural, immutable, indefeasible scheme of order. No industrial structure comes into existence as a result of the 'automatic working' of 'economic forces.' The prevailing system of free enterprise seems natural only to those who look at all industrial organization through the glass of a very simplified picture of its institutions. It is composed of usages and habits, conventions, and practices, taboos upon action and ways of doing things. Its whole make-up consists of understandings and arrangements of a kind with the legal freedom of an individual to enter a trade, the exchange of goods by 'free contract,' the system of profits as a way of getting things done, and the prohibition of 'restraint of trade' by the Government. Each of these bears the confused reality for a long and checkered history.

"No self-maintaining, self-regulating scheme of order has ever existed. A Simon-pure competitive system, in which the interests of all are served by each acting for himself, does not operate unaided. Its maintenance requires a code of rules to determine who is to have and to hold the instruments of production, an elaborate procedure for giving effect to contracts, a nice adjustment between the incentives to action of the parties, and a mechanism of checks and balances to hold personal activities within social bounds. The effort to prevent restraint of trade and to preserve free competition by a resort to coercion is the best evidence of its mundane quality; for the order of nature does not have to appeal to the parliament of man of survival. The confusion in the courts over where competition ends and restraint begins bears testimony to the impossibility of separating the operation of economic laws from the behavior of the human actors in industry.

"A compromised competitive system belongs to a Simian domain far removed from the uniformities of an order of nature. Its tangled scheme under which some matters are left to the market and the rivalry of business concerns, others are regarded as within the province of government, and custom and collusion are not absent from the whole, bears evidence of its prolonged traffic with men. It is not characteristic of the free enterprise that operates in coal to settle the larger affairs of industry for the persons concerned through the beneficent action of economic laws. Instead, the mark of its prevalence is the absence of an authority in large matters, which become mere incidents to the endless making of little decisions, and must get settled as best they may. The whole matter of fitting a scheme of control to the unique requirements of an industry belongs, not to the realm of the inevitables, but well within the domain of conscious choice * * *.

"The task of one who would set coal to rights, beset as it is with countless hazards and numerous choices, at least involves no sacrilege; for there is no way of passing the problem along to nature. There can be no choice between a natural and an artificial organization—between a control by the rules of men and the operation of economic laws. The only large choices are the retention of a very human competitive system which was never planned and works only as well as it works, its deliberate modification, or its conscious replacement by some other scheme of more conscious design but no less human origin.

"An application of the art of organization to bituminous mining involves a critical and constructive inquiry into the arrangements which make up its scheme of control. It means doing for the industry as a whole what the resourceful and farseeing executive is forever doing for his establishment; it means doing with the organization of the industry what the technicians are constantly doing with its technology."

The oil industry has been in similar throes of demoralization due to overproduction and futile price cutting. The industry organized a petroleum institute to advertise new uses and stimulate demand, as well as establish trade practices. States wherein great producing fields are located imposed restrictive production measures. Voluntary agreements covering production were reached. Great improvement has resulted, as attested by increased earnings during 1928, to which oil securities have responded by reaching higher levels. What has been accomplished by the oil industry is merely a beginning toward the attainment of a permanent, sound, economic basis. Oil men have at least expressed a willingness to cooperate, but the large number of units makes it imperative that some superstructure of control be established. This is recognized by oil leaders. Mr. W. S. Farish, president of the Humble Oil Co., writing in the Chicago Journal of Commerce, has this to say on the need for greater control:

"The American Petroleum Institute during its life has accomplished much for the good of the industry, and these accomplishments have also been for the good of the public, as they have resulted mainly in better coordination and lessening of costs. * * * The institute has failed to furnish the leadership necessary for a solution of our problems."

To the open-minded observer it is plainly evident that the future of the oil industry is headed straight for the folds of Government control.

The greater intelligence in oil as compared to coal is working to this end. Writing on the trend of the oil industry toward utility standing, Royal F. Munger, financial editor of the Chicago Daily News, points out:

"Stabilization must mean combination of one sort or another, for otherwise there is no cure for the unrestricted competition that caused low prices. Combination without regulation seldom has been found desirable in the long run. The obvious outcome is that the great oil companies will enter, probably voluntarily, some form of public-utility regulation. After all, they are public utilities, at least at the distributing end of the business. They come too closely into the life of the community to have either their control or their well-being left to chance."

That coal is a public utility is an accepted fact in many channels of public thought. By resort to Federal injunctions coal operators have established the coal business as a public utility engaged in interstate commerce. The United Mine Workers are, therefore, asking your committee to view the bituminous-coal industry as a utility engaged in producing a basic necessity and operating as an interstate commerce unit. In supporting this contention I want to show that the president of the largest bituminous-coal company takes the same view of the utility status of coal.

In 1922 John D. Rockefeller became convinced that the management of the bituminous coal industry was lacking in cooperation and efficiency, and holding large investments in the industry, particularly in the Consolidation Coal Co., he directed his personal counsel to make an investigation.

Mr. G. J. Anderson, now president of the Consolidation Coal Co., who was then associated with Curtis, Fosdick & Belknap as industrial relations counsel, made a survey of the industry. The following, in part, from Mr. Anderson's report plainly shows that back as far as 1922 Mr. Anderson regarded coal as a public utility:

"THE PUBLIC INTEREST

"Most official utterances, the majority of editorial comment, and all proposed legislation for control of the industry stress the truth that coal is not only a basic commodity but endowed with a public interest. The United States Supreme Court, adopting the language of a State supreme court, has also so defined it 'an indispensible necessity of life.' Efforts to refute or minimize this fact, within the industry, would seem ill-advised. Above all other industries, save transportation, coal needs understanding and support from public opinion. Especially does it need them in the field of labor policy.

"In considering the likelihood of this public interest taking active form through the medium of Federal legislation, one fact stands out. For nearly five years now the coal industry has actually been under some form of Government supervision, first through the Fuel Administration, second, under its present scale contract which issued from the Bituminous Coal Commission. This recent chapter, new as it is, nevertheless forms an important piece of background in the present situation. Precedent has already been established.

"Coal, moreover, in addition to being itself a public utility, is closely allied to other public utilities. Two of its three most important customers are the railroads and the public utility companies. These enterprises are already subject to a high degree of public regulation. This, too, forms a precedent. It further provides an uncommon form of industrial pressure on the industry itself. For it is only natural that bodies which are subject to strict scrutiny of expenditures and rates will have a very vital concern in the cost of fuel.

"In connection with labor policy, this implies two important considerations for the coal industry: (1) It maintains even in times of rising prices and justifiable wage advance a form of consumer pressure which may obstruct right industrial relations; (2) resulting from this combination of public interest and consumer pressure a situation is created where mutual agreement between the parties in the coal industry is subject to criticism and suspicion, unless accompanied by some form, voluntary, at least, of public participation."

Mr. Anderson spoke very plainly—no one need mistake what he intended to convey.

1. That bituminous coal is a public utility.

2. That railroads and utilities operating under the protection of fixed revenues, and consuming the bulk of all coal produced, could easily use their purchasing power to batter down prices and thereby increase their own earnings.

3. That the labor relations in the coal industry could not be stabilized beyond the point permitted by consumer pressure of railroads and utilities.

Going into the matter of labor relations more fully, Mr. Anderson verified the oft-repeated statement made by representatives of the United Mine Workers that the maintenance of competitive wages by the union had constituted the only stabilizing force the industry had ever known.

The further analysis on labor relations by Mr. Anderson follows:

"A COMPETITIVE INDUSTRY

"Over and above all other elements, important as some of them are, from the viewpoint of the operator the dominating factor in determining labor policy must be the nature of the industry itself. When the facts are faced—viz, the existence of over 10,000 mines under more than half as many individual managements and industry at all times with a surplus of at least 40 per cent in equipment, labor, and investment—the range of possible labor policy is at once restricted.

"What is economically possible in an industry of a comparatively few enterprises dominated by an overshadowing entity, such as steel, or in an industry where the cooperation of a small group can exert a high degree of stability, such as meat packing; or in industries where the labor item is relatively low in ratio to total cost of production, such as automobiles, it is not at all feasible in a highly irregular, seasonal, and overequipped industry composed of small units. Certainly it is not possible without a far higher degree of voluntary organization and discipline than the coal industry displays at the present time.

"The fluctuation of this industry, in response not merely to seasonal demand but to economic cycles of depression and prosperity, makes a policy of cooperation indispensable. The high degree of competition makes it well-nigh impossible to leave labor, policy, and particularly wage rates, to be determined by the most reckless element. Nor can employers of union labor who intend to operate under any condition of equity, expect to compete with the fluctuation of nonunion policy, either in the rise or in the fall of wages. On the contrary, with the opportunity to fix settlements of the largest single factor in operating costs, both over a wide area in the industry and for a definite period, the purely business value of scale contracts becomes a consideration of prime importance.

"For a highly competitive and otherwise seriously unstable industry, collective labor agreements can form the most important source of industry-wide standards."

That public-utility consumers of coal protected by Government and State regulation actually utilize the consumer pressure described by Mr. Anderson against the unprotected public utility of coal in depressing coal prices, looting the holders of coal securities and victimizing mine workers by destroying American wages through demoralization of labor relations, is admitted in the testimony of Samuel Brady, who has already testified before this committee.

Mr. Brady's testimony in part follows:

"The contract between the company and the miners' union expired by limitation on the 1st day of April, 1924, and the company had been advised by W. H. Warner & Co., its sales agent, through Whitney Warner, that it could secure a contract from the Jersey Central Railroad of 700 tons of coal per day at $1.60 per net ton f. o. b. mine, if it could begin shipping coal on the contract by the middle of May. W. H. Warner & Co. became a stockholder of the Brady-Warner Coal Corporation at the time of the execution of the mortgage in the amount of one-fourth of its capital stock, and the company's executive committee met for the purpose of reaching a decision upon two propositions, (1) whether it would refuse to renew its agreement with the miners' union after the 1st of April, and (2) whether it could afford to take the Jersey Central contract and such other contracts as it might be able to obtain at the very low price of $1.60 per ton and attempt to operate its mines—open shop—on a lower scale of wages.

"At this meeting, after a thorough discussion of the company's affairs, the committee decided that it would not renew its agreement with the miners' union, and since it was the only business in sight and the condition of the market did not justify the presumption of a higher price, the company decided to accept the Jersey Central contract and attempt to operate its mines and to put into effect the 1917 scale of wages.

"At this meeting we were advised by Mr. Charles A. Goodwin, of counsel for the company, that if we did not agree to renew our agreement with the union the courts would protect us in the operation of our mines on the open-shop basis and that under our contracts of lease with our employees under which they occupied our houses, we would give them the notice required by the lease and, if they refused to vacate within a reasonable time, we had the right to evict them, and that this had been decided by the Supreme Court of West Virginia, and that if they attempted to interfere with our rights to operate our mines, with employees who would be willing to work for us, by such acts as intimidation or force, that we could restrain them by an injunction.

"With this advice and driven by the necessities of our situation, we decided, as I have said, to adopt this policy, and the meeting adjourned with that understanding."

That such a business procedure as outlined by Mr. Brady was unusual and unsound in the opinion of some members of your committee is borne out by Senator WHEELER'S questioning of Mr. Brady, which follows:

"Senator WHEELER. Could you make money selling at that price?

"Mr. BRADY. No, sir. But we figured we would break even and maintain our plant and pay our sinking fund and interest.

"Senator WHEELER. The reason I asked you is that I have a telegram here from one of the coal operators, and perhaps you know him, sent from Charleston, W. Va., as follows:

"CHARLESTON, W. VA., April 19, 1928.

"Senator BURTON K. WHEELER,

"Senate Building, Washington, D. C.:

"New York, Ontario & Western and Delaware & Hudson purchasing agents are offering to close their contracts through jobbers, Morgantown district, mine run coal, one thirty at mines, while both these roads enjoy high freight rates, being more or less associated with anthracite production, getting $8 or $10 per ton at the mine for domestic and household coal. Would like to see purchasing agents of these two railroads as well as Lehigh Valley subpœnaed and made be good by following some reasonable price not to exceed one fifty at mines, which is barely cost and much less than the Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio, and New York Central are now paying. No reply necessary, but please stick to the job until we all get some benefit from your untiring efforts.

"J. A. PAISLEY."

In the testimony of Mr. Brady and the telegram of Mr. Paisley you have a clear case of what Mr. Anderson meant when he reported the menacing evil of consumer pressure to Mr. Rockefeller.

COAL POSSIBILITIES

From time to time the public reads of the wonderful things that can be accomplished from the proper and thorough utilization of coal. By-products by the hundreds are listed as obtainable from the coal supply. An endless fertile field is pictured ahead for the coal chemist and technician, but you never read about any American coal operator seizing the myriad opportunities offered. To illustrate the backwardness of the American coal operator, I quote a statement in part by President Baker, of the Carnegie Institute of Technology, during the recent Second International Fuel Conference held in Pittsburgh.

"The coal-mine owner in Europe is coking his coal at the mouth of the mine and piping the gas to more or less distant cities. He is shipping his tar to a great central refinery, where it is distilled and made into a hundred different articles, ranging from explosives to perfumes and medicaments. He is creating a great new artificial fertilizer industry, which is changing the agricultural system in Europe and which may some day help to solve our perplexing farm problems. He is building plants for the manufacture of methanol or methyl alcohol from what we regard as waste products of the mine. He is just beginning to make use of scientific brains and scientific data in his business. The American coal man will do well to emulate him."

Apparently President Baker is talking over the heads of the American coal operators, for despite the gloom that pervades the industry and the future dark outlook, the National Coal Association at its recent convention, although the Baker statement was available, voted to oppose Government regulation, and adopted a resolution contending for freedom, a kind of freedom in the enjoyment of which it has already "sinned away its day of grace." The resolution follows:

"The National Coal Association reaffirms its attitude toward proposed Federal legislation affecting the bituminous-coal industry by saying that it opposes legislation which would seek to single out this industry for regulatory action. This particularly applies to such bills as S. 4490. At the same time it is recognized that there are other lines of legislation in which the industry may be interested: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That it is recommended that the officers and directors of the National Coal Association keep in close touch with the national legislative situation and cooperate with representatives of other industries for such modification of existing laws and such new legislation as may be in the interest of industry generally and the welfare of the public."

While I accept the resolution as being the official action of the National Coal Association, I am frank to state that the resolution does not express the hopes and aspirations of a very large number of operators who are tired of aimless drifting down the bottomless pit of a disorganized industry. Operators of standing have frankly stated that they can see no correction of the prevailing destructive forces, except through the medium of Government regulations.

Some operators will come before this committee and advocate amendments to the Sherman law, to permit the organization of selling pools, free to operate as the operators may decide, without any form of Government regulation. But I am quite sure that the American public is not ready to permit the incompetence and piracy, such as the coal industry has manifested in the past to exercise a free rein over such vast and basically necessary resources as our coal reserves without maintaining Government regulation.

At the present time we are consuming millions of tons of special-purpose coal annually for steam and domestic uses that should be held in reserve. For let it be known that our high-grade coals can not be linked with the aggregate coal deposits about which America is so proud to boast. These deposits are exhaustible, and at the present rapid rate of misuse, added to the criminal waste in recovery under our present mining methods, we will reach that state of depletion before many years that will cause our Government conservationists to wonder how the unconcern of an enlightened people could have suffered the execution of such an extravagant onslaught of a natural resource so valuable as our special-purpose coals.

The United Mine Workers hold that the public welfare demands Government regulation of the bituminous-coal industry.

It is our opinion that the necessity for Government control was clearly proved by the testimony before this committee during the last session of this Congress.

The mere existence of some court decision that might becloud the right of the Government to assume regulatory powers is no indicator of the practicability and desirability of Government control. Laws can be enacted that will enable the Government to assume regulation whereby uneconomic mines will be eliminated, healthy competition promoted, an American type of labor regulations established, conservation of special-purpose coals assured and the public guaranteed a continuity of a fair-priced coal supply. Industrial America can not afford the price that the cancerous condition of coal will eventually levy as a result of its maladjustment of American enterprise. The interdependence of our separate industrial units, and the necessity for evenly distributed progress is recognized by President-elect Hoover, when he said:

"Behind every job is a vast, intricate, and delicately adjusted system of interlocked industries dependent upon skilled leadership. The forces of credit, communications, transportation, power, foreign relations, and what not, must all be kept in tune. Break this chain of relationship at any point and the whole machine is thrown out of order."

Certainly no one will claim for coal the smooth functioning that President-elect Hoover deems essential on the part of each industrial unit to the accumulative success of all American industry.

The testimony before your full committee failed to develop any plan, save Government regulation, as a means of eliminating the primitive management and the substitution of intelligent direction. Some few operators assented to Government control, but many, fearful of what the other fellow would think of their surrender to Government, dissented. It remained for a large consumer who had to deal with a subsidiary-produced coal, as well as to make purchases from hundreds of operators in various States, to admit frankly that Government regulation was the solution.

William C. Bower, purchasing agent of the New York Central Railroad, by reason of the benefits he knew resulted from Government regulation of railroads, testified as follows:

"Senator WAGNER. Have you thought about a possible remedy, something to bring about a situation where the operators would get a fair return on their investment and the miners get a wage which we call a living wage, so they would be free from exploitation? Have you thought of a remedy to solve that problem?

"Mr. BOWER. Senator, I have been here since the beginning of the hearing, and I think the best solution would be to form a coal commission, something like the Interstate Commerce Commission; and give that commission the right to permit consolidation of coal companies, and their operation under their supervision."

Gentlemen, are we not really indulging in conversation about ancient history when we discuss the need for governmental regulation of coal as if it were any longer a matter of choice? The decision has already been made. Coal is already regulated in one sense, regulated toward waste, anarchy, and chaos by the creation of an unbalanced relationship between a producing industry under economic laissez-faire and consuming industries regulated by government and buttressed by governmental safeguards and implied public support and authority.

To continue such a relationship is to put the lion and the frightened, witless lambs in the same cage.

The Federal Government has brought into existence a quasi public railroad industry and the State governments have created public-utility industries which are virtually arms and branches of government, with the arms and branches sometimes running the show.

These two quasi public industries are buyers of 35 per cent of all soft coal mined. In most price situations the marginal 5 per cent or less determines the price level. It is proposed to control the level of agricultural prices by control of the exportable surpluses of certain crops, the exports being but a small percentage of total production as to some of them. That is evidence enough of the complete control of coal which has already been set up—a control with no safeguards for that industry or the public. It is a dictatorship by the organized and regulated buyer which determines the prices of coal for all consumers, a dictatorship which has demonstrated the power of life and death over many of the units of the industry, a large majority in fact.

Recognizing the failure of the coal industry to adjust its own affairs, the two major political parties incorporated platform planks pledging correction and helpful legislation. To refresh our memories on these party declarations, let us reproduce here the platform planks:

The Republican Party platform declared:

"The party is anxious, hopeful, and willing to assist in any feasible plan for the stabilization of the coal-mining industry which will work with justice to the miners, consumers, and producers."

The Democratic Party platform declared:

"Bituminous coal is not only the common base of manufacture, but it is a vital agency in our interstate transportation. The demoralization of this industry, its labor conflicts and distress, its waste of a natural resource, and disordered public service demand constructive legislation that will allow capital and labor a fair share of prosperity with adequate protection to the consuming public."

Direct examination of the ills of the coal industry has enabled the United Mine Workers to present the plight of coal to this committee intrusted with the decision of protecting the public welfare in matters affecting interstate commerce.

Despite the baseless demand for "less government in business," the United Mine Workers insist that it is a governmental duty to accept in law as well as in theory the universally accepted fact that coal is a public utility and enact the necessary legislation providing sound government regulation. I believe the Watson bill now being considered meets the first requirements.

I do not believe that this bill seeks to bestow any new powers upon the Government, as it merely provides for a wider and more intelligent use of the present powers of government over public utilities by promoting and protecting the public interest in coal to the same degree that has been reflected in transportation through the regulatory powers vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I can find nothing new or revolutionary in the bill now up for consideration. The bill simply embodies the expressed belief of many witnesses who have already testified before your committee that Government participation should be in the form of a coal commission, a somewhat similar structure to that of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The basic powers of the commission would be—

1. License and regulate coal corporations, partnerships, and firms engaged in interstate commerce.

2. Mergers and consolidations are permitted—in fact, encouraged—but are in no wise compulsory; likewise, selling pools and marketing agencies, all to be under regulation of the Federal coal commission.

3. The bill in no manner seeks to destroy property rights or impair contract obligations.

ETTA PEARCE FULPER

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5453) authorizing the payment of Government life insurance to Etta Pearce Fulper, which was, on page 1, line 9, after the word "issued," to insert:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of $10 thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum which in the aggregate exceeds $10 of the amount appropriated in this act on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. EDGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE UNITED STATES A PARTY DEFENDANT

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me to have a conference report laid before the Senate?

Mr. GLASS. I yield for that purpose if it requires no discussion.

Mr. NORRIS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13981) to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out section 4 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and renumber sections; and the House agree to the same.

G. W. NORRIS,
T. J. WALSH,
C. W. WATERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
G. W. GRAHAM,
L. C. DYER,
HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I would like to hear an explanation of the report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska if this is the bill we considered which provides an agreement for extinguishing any inchoate title the Government might have in the property?

Mr. NORRIS. It is the same bill.

Mr. KING. I can assure the Senator from South Carolina that the bill has been fully considered by the committee and is a very proper bill.

Mr. BLEASE. Nevertheless, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

BRIDGE ACROSS AGATE PASS, WASH.

Mr. JONES. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 15850) authorizing the Bainbridge Island Chamber of Commerce, a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Agate Pass connecting Bainbridge Island with the mainland in Kitsap County, State of Washington, and I submit a report (No. 2003) thereon. I ask for its immediate consideration. It will not lead to debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, if we are going to have all kinds of business transacted by the Senate, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edwards	McKellar	Smith
Barkley	Fess	McMaster	Smoot
Bayard	Fletcher	McNary	Steck
Bingham	Frazier	Mayfield	Steiwer
Black	George	Metcalf	Stephens
Blaine	Gerry	Moses	Swanson
Blease	Glass	Neely	Thomas, Idaho
Borah	Glenn	Norbeck	Thomas, Okla.
Bratton	Goff	Norris	Trammell
Brookhart	Gould	Nye	Tydings
Broussard	Greene	Oddie	Tyson
Bruce	Hale	Overman	Vandenberg
Burton	Harris	Pine	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Hawes	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Hayden	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Couzens	Heflin	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Curtis	Johnson	Sackett	Watson
Dale	Jones	Schall	Wheeler
Deneen	Kendrick	Sheppard
Dill	Keyes	Shortridge
Edge	King	Simmons

Mr. SCHALL. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is very ill at home, and is detained from the Senate for that reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Virginia has the floor.

REPORT FOR EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. BORAH. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I submit a report for the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the report will be received and go to the Executive Calendar.

COURTS IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. BORAH. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12351) amending section 72 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 145), by changing the boundaries of the divisions of the southern district of California and terms of court for each division, and I submit a report (No. 1985) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] to the report.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Idaho, which changes the divisions of the southern district of California and terms of court for each division. It will provoke no discussion.

Mr. HALE. If it will not lead to any discussion, I shall not object.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have just stated I am quite sure there will be no debate upon it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTION FOR WOMEN, ALDERSON, W. VA.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. GLASS. I will yield provided the matter which the Senator desires to call up does not lead to any debate.

Mr. GOFF. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 5493) relating to the construction of a chapel at the Federal Industrial Institution for Women at Alderson, W. Va., and I submit a report (No. 1897) thereon. The chapel is to cost the Government nothing whatsoever except the services of the Government architect. The bill provides in substance, as will be disclosed by a reading thereof, that the chapel is to be erected by donations to be made to the Attorney General of the United States.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill may now be considered and passed in order that it may go to the House for prompt consideration there.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me? I did not understand clearly the purpose of the bill.

Mr. GOFF. It is to provide funds to be donated to the Attorney General for the erection of a chapel at the Federal prison for women at Alderson, W. Va. It will cost the Government nothing.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, after the name "United States," to strike out "with thanks to the honors"; in line 6, after the word "subscription," to strike out "by any or all of the following-named organizations"; and in line 9, after the name "West Virginia," to strike out "American Association of University Women, American Home Economics Association, Association of Women in Public Health, Catholic Daughters of West Virginia, Council of Women for Home Missions, Department of Christian Social Service of the Protestant Episcopal Church, General Federation of Women's Clubs, Maryland Federation of Women's Clubs, Medical Women's National Association, the National Association of Colored Women (Inc.), National Board, Young Women's Christian Association, National Council of Jewish Women, National Council of Women of the United States of America (Inc.), National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods, The National Florence Crittenton Mission, National Housewives Alliance (Inc.), National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, National Women's Trade Union League of America, The Needlework Guild of America (Inc.), and Women's Homeopathic Medical Fraternity, and such other organizations as may desire to cooperate in this project," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General is hereby authorized to accept for and on behalf of the United States funds raised or to be raised by popular subscription for the construction of a suitable chapel upon the premises occupied and used by and for the Federal Industrial Institution for Women at Alderson, W. Va. The funds so donated shall be expended under the direction of the Attorney General for the construction of such chapel, and after construction the chapel shall be maintained at the expense of the United States: Provided, That the Attorney General is authorized to procure by contract preliminary sketches for the chapel, and after approval thereof by the Attorney General to procure by contract working drawings, full-size details, specifications, etc., for the construction of the chapel and supervision of the construction: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if requested of the Attorney General, to cause the plans, drawings, specifications, and estimates for the construction of the chapel to be prepared in the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and the work of constructing said chapel to be supervised by the field force of said office, if practicable: And provided further, That the proper appropriation for the support and maintenance of the Office of the Supervising Architect be reimbursed from said donated funds for the cost of preparing such plans, drawings, specifications, and estimates for the aforesaid work and the supervision of the construction of said chapel.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On February 25, 1929:

S. 1530. An act for the relief of the Gilpin Construction Co.; and

S. 3881. An act to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the Dry Valley Road, commencing where said road leaves the La Fayette Road, in the city of Rossville, Ga., and extending to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, constituting an approach road to said park.

On February 26, 1929:

S. 4861. An act authorizing the Brownville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr.;

S. 5129. An act authorizing Thomas E. Brooks, of Camp Walton, Fla., and his associates and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the mouth of Garniers Bayou at a point where State road No. 10, in the State of Florida, crosses the mouth of said Garniers Bayou between Smack Point on the west and White Point on the east, in Okaloosa County, Fla.;

S. 5465. An act authorizing V. Calvin Trice, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Choptank River at a point at or near Cambridge, Md.;

S. 5630. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Carrollton, Ky.

On February 27, 1929:

S. 3936. An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia; and

S. 4087. An act authorizing the use of certain land owned by the United States in the District of Columbia for street purposes.

NATIONAL ORIGINS (S. DOC. NO. 259)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Immigration:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a joint report by the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor relating to immigration quotas on the basis of national origin.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 27, 1929.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the message from the President of the United States, with its accompanying papers, just read may be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENTS IN PROHIBITION FIELD SERVICE

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the junior Senator from New York?

Mr. GLASS. For what purpose?

Mr. WAGNER. I want to call up a resolution, to which I am sure there is no objection. It simply asks for information from the Prohibition Enforcement Bureau of the Treasury Department. The resolution went over the other day.

Mr. GLASS. I yield, with the distinct understanding that the resolution shall not require any discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the resolution read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Utah the resolution will be read by the clerk.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 332) submitted by Mr. WAGNER on February 15 (calendar day of February 20), 1929, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Civil Service Commission be requested to inform the Senate on or before March 4, 1929, concerning the following matters:

(1) The reasons for the failure to publish lists of eligibles for appointment to the field service of the Bureau of Prohibition;

(2) The names of all persons employed in the field service of the Bureau of Prohibition who have not been appointed pursuant to the provisions of the civil service laws, as contemplated by the act of March 3, 1927, entitled "An act to create a Bureau of Customs and a Bureau of Prohibition in the Department of the Treasury."

(3) The names of all persons employed in the field service of the Bureau of Prohibition who have been appointed pursuant to the provisions of the civil service laws.

(4) The sums expended for examinations held for appointment to the field service of the Bureau of Prohibition.

(5) The total amount of salaries paid to employees of the field service of the Bureau of Prohibition, not appointed or retained pursuant to the act of March 3, 1927, entitled "An act to create a Bureau of Customs and a Bureau of Prohibition in the Department of the Treasury."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WAGNER. The resolution merely seeks information.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that from having heard the resolution read, but I should like to ask the Senator from New York if he expects an answer to the resolution before the 4th of March?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think there will be any difficulty in getting the information. It is a matter of record in the Treasury Department. I have heard no objection to the resolution at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object to the resolution, but I wanted to know whether the Senator expected all the information asked for by the resolution to be furnished before March 4.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to get the information before the 4th of March if possible.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that will be an impossibility.

Mr. WAGNER. Then the resolution can be amended.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the resolution require the report to be submitted before the 4th of March?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; the resolution so requires.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it will be possible for the Senator to receive the information by the time indicated, but I will offer no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

BOUNDARIES OF YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3001) to revise the north, northeast, and east boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park in the States of Montana and Wyoming, and for other purposes, which was, on page 4, to strike out all after "Wyoming," in line 3, down to and including the word "land," in line 8, and insert:

Provided, That whereas it is the purpose and intent of Congress to retain the areas hereby added to the park in its original wilderness character, therefore no new roads shall be constructed and no hotels or permanent camps shall be authorized or permitted to be maintained on such lands.

Mr. NORBECK. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

SUPPLY OF NEWSPRINT PAPER

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GLASS. For what purpose?

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to ask——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. GLASS. I have asked for what purpose does the Senator from Alabama desire me to yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to ask what became of the resolution of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL]? We had an agreement that the resolution should be adopted this morning.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. GLASS. I am unwilling to yield for any discussion.

Mr. SCHALL. I should like to have the Senate adopt Senate Resolution 337, which was called up yesterday, when suggestions were made that it should be amended. It has since been modified to meet the objection then made.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let the resolution be read as proposed to be modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 337) as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is requested to make an investigation and hold hearings upon the question of whether any of the practices of the manufacturers and distributors of newsprint paper tend to create a monopoly in the supplying of newsprint paper to publishers of small daily and weekly newspapers or constitute a violation of the antitrust laws, and to report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of such investigation and the evidence taken at such hearings, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, does the Senator oppose my amendment to the resolution?

Mr. SCHALL. I want to comply with the suggestions which were made on yesterday.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I made some suggestions to the Senator on yesterday, and I am wondering if he has embodied them in the resolution as modified.

Mr. SCHALL. I think they are embodied in the resolution.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator has not adopted all the suggestions that I made to him.

Mr. SCHALL. If the Senator will incorporate them in the resolution I shall have no objection.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator will indulge me for a moment, I will do that. [A pause.]

Mr. President, I have looked over Senate Resolution 337 and have written a couple of amendments in it which the Senator from Minnesota tells me he is willing to accept. With those amendments, so far as I am concerned, I have no further objection to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. How will it then read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as further modified will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is requested to make an investigation upon the question of whether any of the practices of the manufacturers and distributors of newsprint paper tend to create a monopoly in the supplying of newsprint paper to publishers of small daily and weekly newspapers or constitute a violation of the antitrust laws and to report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of such investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] is satisfied with the resolution as it has been modified?

Mr. SCHALL. I did not catch the Senator's question.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] was opposed to the resolution as originally presented by the Senator from Minnesota. I want to know whether the Senator from Vermont is still opposed to it or is in favor of it with the amendments which have been suggested?

Mr. SCHALL. I have never heard that the Senator from Vermont made any objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure the Senator from Vermont did object to the resolution. I myself have no objection to it, but I should dislike to have the resolution adopted if it is not satisfactory to the Senator from Vermont, he being at the present time absent from the Senate. If the Senator will allow the resolution to be laid aside for a while, I will endeavor to get in touch with the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HEFLIN. No, Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I shall object to its consideration.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well; the Senator may object, but I will occupy four or five hours of the time of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Minnesota is not going to be treated in any such fashion.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. The resolution ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is entitled to the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I have myself no objection whatever——

Mr. GLASS. I do not yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia declines to yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Minnesota was told last night that the resolution would be allowed to pass to-day if he would let it go over then. That is the reason I objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is out of order. The Senator from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: Mr. President, a little while ago Senate Resolution 337, which had been submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL], was considered and amended. I asked that it go over until I could confer with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE]. I have seen that Senator, and he informs me that he has no objection, so I now ask that the resolution may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is requested to make an investigation upon the question of whether any of the practices of the manufacturers and distributors of newsprint paper tend to create a monopoly in the supplying of newsprint paper to publishers of small daily and weekly newspapers or constitute a violation of the antitrust laws, and to report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of such investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

T. L. YOUNG AND C. T. COLE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4848) for the relief of T. L. Young and C. T. Cole, which was, on page 2, line 4, after the word "General," to insert "Provided further, That the defendants, T. L. Young and C. T. Cole, pay the costs in case No. 2613."

Mr. CAPPER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. CAPPER, Mr. NYE, and Mr. STEPHENS were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

TIMBER STANDS IN YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, first making my apologies to the Senator from Virginia, I ask the Senator if he will permit me to have considered a bill which has been reported to-day from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys? It is a bill which the Yosemite Park Commission, in conjunction with the Interior Department and the Federal park commissioner, desire to have passed immediately if possible.

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator for that purpose if it does not require any extended discussion.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 5880) to provide for the preservation and consolidation of certain timber stands along the western boundary of Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of preserving and consolidating certain timber stands along the western boundary of the Yosemite National Park, the President of the United States is hereby authorized, upon the joint recommendation of the Secretaries of the Interior and of Agriculture, to add to said park by Executive proclamation any or all of the following-described lands: Sections 19, 20, 29, 30, 31, and 32, township 1 south, range 20 east, Mount Diablo meridian; east half section 1; east half section 12; southeast quarter section 24, township 2 south, range 19 east, Mount Diablo meridian; sections 4, 5, and 6; north half section 7; sections 8 and 9, and 19 and 20, township 2 south, range 20 east, Mount Diablo meridian, approximately 9,000 acres.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I will inquire of the Senator from California if the report on the bill is unanimous?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is a conservation measure, as I understand?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; and it has the approval of the Interior Department and of Doctor Albright, and is for the purpose of enabling the President to make the consolidations requested in the Yosemite National Park.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LETTER FROM FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD CONCERNING SPECULATIVE LOANS

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Federal Reserve Board has responded to questions sent to it in a resolution which I introduced regarding the statement that it issued some time ago concerning speculation. The letter is not very long, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has already ordered it printed as a document.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think it would be a good idea, Mr. President, to have it printed also in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed in the RECORD unless objection is made. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
Washington, February 26, 1929.

SIR: The Federal Reserve Board is in receipt of Senate Resolution 323, reading as follows:

"Whereas in press dispatches recently the Federal Reserve Board has complained that money is being drawn from the channels of business and used for speculative purposes, and that some of said speculation is illegitimate and harmful: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board is hereby requested to give to the Senate any information and suggestions that it feels would be helpful in securing legislation necessary to correct the evil complained of and prevent illegitimate and harmful speculation."

Inasmuch as this resolution was occasioned by the statement issued by the Federal Reserve Board on February 6, wherein the attitude and viewpoint of the Federal Reserve Board with respect to the growing volume of credit in speculative security loans was indicated, the statement is repeated here in order that there may be no misapprehension of the board's position with reference either to the matter discussed in its statement or to that which is the subject of the Senate's resolution:

"The United States has during the last six years experienced a most remarkable run of economic activity and productivity. The production, distribution, and consumption of goods have been in unprecedented volume. The economic system of the country has functioned efficiently and smoothly. Among the factors which have contributed to this result an important place must be assigned to the operation of our credit system and notably to the steadying influence and moderating policies of the Federal reserve system.

"During the last year or more, however, the functioning of the Federal reserve system has encountered interference by reason of the excessive amount of the country's credit absorbed in speculative security loans. The credit situation since the opening of the new year indicates that some of the factors which occasioned untoward developments during the year 1928 are still at work. The volume of speculative credit is still growing.

"Coming at a time when the country has lost some $500,000,000 of gold, the effect of the great and growing volume of speculative credit has already produced some strain, which has reflected itself in advances of from 1 to 1½ per cent in the cost of credit for commercial uses. The matter is one that concerns every section of the country and every business interest, as an aggravation of these conditions may be expected to have detrimental effects on business and may impair its future.

"The Federal Reserve Board neither assumes the right nor has it any disposition to set itself up as an arbiter of security speculation or values. It is, however, its business to see to it that the Federal reserve banks function as effectively as conditions will permit. When it finds that conditions are arising which obstruct Federal reserve banks in the effective discharge of their function of so managing the credit facilities of the Federal reserve system as to accommodate commerce and business, it is its duty to inquire into them and to take such measures as may be deemed suitable and effective in the circumstances to correct them, which, in the immediate situation, means to restrain the use, either directly or indirectly, of Federal reserve credit facilities in aid of the growth of speculative credit. In this connection, the Federal Reserve Board, under date of February 2, addressed a letter to the Federal reserve banks, which contains a fuller statement of its position:

"'The firming tendencies of the money market which have been in evidence since the beginning of the year—contrary to the usual trend at this season—make it incumbent upon the Federal reserve banks to give constant and close attention to the situation in order that no influence adverse to the trade and industry of the country shall be exercised by the trend of money conditions, beyond what may develop as inevitable.

"'The extraordinary absorption of funds in speculative security loans which has characterized the credit movement during the past year or more, in the judgment of the Federal Reserve Board, deserves particular attention lest it become a decisive factor working toward a still further firming of money rates to the prejudice of the country's commercial interests.

"'The resources of the Federal reserve system are ample for meeting the growth of the country's commercial needs for credit, provided they are competently administered and protected against seepage into uses not contemplated by the Federal reserve act.

"'The Federal reserve act does not, in the opinion of the Federal Reserve Board, contemplate the use of the resources of the Federal reserve banks for the creation or extension of speculative credit. A member bank is not within its reasonable claims for rediscount facilities at its Federal reserve bank when it borrows either for the purpose of making speculative loans or for the purpose of maintaining speculative loans.

"'The board has no disposition to assume authority to interfere with the loan practices of member banks so long as they do not involve the Federal reserve banks. It has, however, a grave responsibility whenever there is evidence that member banks are maintaining speculative security loans with the aid of Federal reserve credit. When such is the case the Federal reserve bank becomes either a contributing or a sustaining factor in the current volume of speculative security credit. This is not in harmony with the intent of the Federal reserve act nor is it conducive to the wholesome operation of the banking and credit system of the country.'"

The board begs leave to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the purport and language of its statement do not agree with those in the preamble of the Senate resolution. The board's statement concerned itself wtih credit conditions. It disclaimed both the authority and the desire "to set itself up as an arbiter of security speculation or values." That still is the board's position.

At the time of the issue of its statement, it was the belief of the board that it could count upon the cooperation not only of the Federal reserve banks but of leading member banks everywhere in the country in making successful an effort to bring about an orderly readjustment of the credit situation; and the board has been confirmed in this belief by what has taken place since.

This also is the view of the Federal advisory council, as will be seen from the following minute of its proceedings which was presented to the board February 15 on the occasion of its recent quarterly meeting:

"The Federal advisory council approves the action of the Federal Reserve Board in instructing the Federal reserve banks to prevent, as far as possible, the diversion of Federal reserve funds for the purpose of carrying loans based on securities. The Federal advisory council suggests that all the member banks in each district be asked directly by the Federal reserve bank of the district to cooperate in order to attain the end desired. The council believes beneficial results can be attained in this manner."

This whole matter is engaging the earnest attention and efforts of the Federal Reserve Board. If it should develop that the board, through exercise of the powers granted under the provisions of the Federal reserve act or through cooperation with the Federal reserve and member banks, should be unable to bring about a solution of the problem which has awakened the concern alike of the Senate, the Federal Reserve Board, and the general body of public opinion, it will be glad to give consideration to the possibilities of remedy by way of legislation.

By direction of the Federal Reserve Board.

Respectfully,

WALTER L. EDDY, Secretary.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

FARMERS' PRODUCE MARKET

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing the acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to vote on the proposed amendment to the pending farmers' market bill and on the bill itself without further discussion. I imagine, however, that that may not be done, because I note the absence from the Chamber of the two Senators from Maryland, who are chiefly interested in the bill.

I wish to say as a preliminary to my discussion of the bill itself that it is very much to be deplored if there has been any exhibition of temper during the discussion heretofore, and I want to disavow for myself any purpose whatsoever to be discourteous to any of the Senators who have addressed themselves to this problem. I particularly have no desire to engage in any disagreeable controversy with the distinguished senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], and if I have said anything to ruffle his accustomed composure I regret having done so.

I shall now proceed, Mr. President, in an orderly way, and primarily for the RECORD and not with the expectation of enlightening anybody or of changing any votes, to discuss the history and meaning of this now quite famous market bill.

Mr. President, at the outset it would be well for us to understand the nomenclature of the very title of this market bill. It is a farmers' produce market. The emphasis should be on the "produce" and not on the "farmers'," because all produce marketed in this establishment and kindred establishments is the produce of farmers; and, above all, it must not be considered by the Senate that the term "farmers" should be confined to the comparatively few truckers located in the States of Maryland and Virginia who furnish an inconsequential percentage of the produce consumed in the District of Columbia. The word should, as it was intended, comprehend all farmers who send their produce to this market for consumption and not a few truckers operating in immediate proximity to the District; and when we consider the meaning of the bill with the definition I have given I would have the Senate understand that 98 per cent of the produce consumed in the District of Columbia comes from other States than the two which have figured conspicuously in this discussion.

Now as to the term "wholesale market": The pending measure does not change in any respect whatsoever the nature or the activities of the existing market. While in its original charter it was defined as a wholesale market, it has been accessible for use by any trucker who might want to sell his produce at retail; and, as a matter of fact, it appears from the hearings that at least 8 per cent of the business done at this market is retail business, and 92 per cent wholesale business. So that the nature of the market is not affected by the pending amendment, except that it may be asserted that if the southwest location is accepted, as has been so persistently recommended, the facilities for retail sheds will be nearly doubled.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GLASS. I do.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then would it be fair to say that the new market is as much of a retail market as the old market was at any time?

Mr. GLASS. Absolutely, it would be accurate to say that, and to add that the facilities afforded by the proposed new site are infinitely better for retail purposes than those afforded by the existing site.

Now, briefly, the history of the bill:

This problem has been under discussion now for nearly three years. There is not an available site in the District of Columbia that has not been considered in detail. There is not a fact in connection with the problem that has not already been ascertained and that does not appear in the record as made up. So the proposition longer to defer it upon the supposition that some other commission or authority may obtain information not now in the possession of or available to the Congress is, I submit, merely a strategic movement for further delay.

This bill was elaborately considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House. It had extended hearings on the subject, and its favorable report to the House was almost a unanimous report. The bill was almost unanimously agreed to by the House, and every proposed alteration of it in the House was defeated by a vote of 3 to 1. The bill, as I have stated, was overwhelmingly passed by the other House and sent over here. Committed to the District of Columbia Committee of this body it was given thorough consideration after extensive hearings. It was proposed in the committee to authorize the Commissioners of the District to proceed to acquire a market site for not exceeding $600,000, and to close the matter without coming back to Congress.

On my motion in the committee the Commissioners of the District were authorized to make the investigation and to recommend a site, subject to the approval of the District committee of this body and of the House. In pursuance of this resolution the Commissioners of the District extensively advertised a public hearing on this question. The hearing was had. It was of a searching nature. Everybody interested was given full opportunity to present his case, and thereupon the District Commissioners made their recommendation.

The Senate committee had a second series of hearings, based upon the recommendation of the commissioners, which are available to Senators, extending over a period, as I recall, of a week or more. The subcommittee holding these hearings reported to the full committee in favor of the passage of the so-called Stalker bill; and the full committee by a vote as I recall of 8 to 3 or 8 to 2, favorably reported this bill after ample discussion of its provisions.

That, in brief, is the legislative history of the bill.

It has been said in the course of the discussion that the bill comes here without recommendation from any official sources. I call the attention of the Senate to an extract from the report of the Board of Commissioners. The commissioners said:

> In the opinion of the commissioners the first choice for a permanent farmers' market, if the decision must be made at this time under the present conditions and as dictated by the evidence before them, would be southwest site No. 1. The advantages of this site outweigh the advantages of the Eckington sites Nos. 1, 2, and 4. Southwest site No. 1—

And the Senate will understand that that is the site we are providing in this bill—> has the preponderance of advantage in that greater railroad facilities exist and that water transportation is present. Cold-storage facilities are already available, as well as a railroad produce terminal on an adjacent square. The municipal fish market is already established one block away from the proposed site.

Right here I pause to tell the Senate that the taxpayers of the District of Columbia provided this fish market at a cost of $350,000.

So that when Senators talk about not providing wholesale markets for the sale of farmers' produce, I direct attention to the fact that the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, at a cost to them of $350,000, provided a fish market in the vicinity of this proposed southwest site, and I draw attention to the further significant fact that the evidence presented shows that this fish market alone does a gross amount of business comparable to that done in the produce market.

> This would be a convenient location for the Virginia farmers as well as all Maryland farmers except those coming directly from the north.

And they are very few. Note further:

> The commissioners do not consider the objection of increased traffic through the Mall as sufficient to prevent the selection of this location, since whatever may be the ultimate development of the Mall, a certain number of north and south bound traffic arteries must be provided for commercial and business use connecting with the southwest section of the city.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] knows that that is a fact.

> The cost of acquiring land in this [southwest] location is substantially less than the various Eckington sites. The development of this location as a general market area would be entirely south of the railroad tracks and would therefore not interfere with the proper Mall development, nor would it encroach upon the harbor front, since a commercial street would separate it from the latter.

I submit to the Senate that that is the official verdict of the Commissioners of the District, charged by the Senate committee with the duty of making a thorough investigation into this problem, a report made after such an investigation had been had, not one sentence of which has been withdrawn, although persistent and importunate attempts have been made to get the Board of District Commissioners to reverse itself. It stands as the only official verdict of the commissioners which we have in the record.

It has been said that the National Park and Planning Commission is against this site. That would not be conclusive were it a fact, but it is not a fact, notwithstanding it has repeatedly been asserted here. One has only to examine the report of the commission to note that it is not a fact. So far from being the truth of the case, the National Park and Planning Commission makes this site a site of priority second only to one other site, the acquisition of which is totally out of the question. On account of its cost, on account of the congested territory, on account of its lack of parking facilities, it was eliminated completely from consideration by the commissioners. That is the verdict of the National Park and Planning Commission as indicated by its report, which I hold in my hand.

The confusion on this point arose out of the fact that Senators have mistaken a report made to the commission by an engineer on a committee who undertook to combat the availability of the southwest site, an engineer who, his superior officer said at our hearings, was without adequate economic information. The report was submitted to the National Park and Planning Commission, and, notwithstanding his argument, that commission is here on record as giving this southwest site priority over any other site considered except one, which I have indicated was eliminated entirely by the District Commissioners because its acquisition would require a very large expenditure of money, and for the other reasons I have here recited. So that clears up that confusion, as I think.

I note the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] in his seat. He was not present in the Chamber when I took occasion to express very great regret if I have said anything in the course of the discussion that was in any sense disagreeable to him, or that might be construed to be in any wise discourteous. I have very great affection for the Senator and very great respect for his abilities, and very great tolerance for his infirmities, which are akin to my own.

Mr. President, it has been repeatedly asserted here that the Bureau of Efficiency has declared against this southwest site for specified reasons, and that I took occasion to deny when the matter was up for discussion at the last session. With me it would not make one particle of difference were that true. The Bureau of Efficiency has never been charged by either branch of Congress with the duty of determining the question of a market site. It has never been asked by either branch of Congress or any committee of either branch of Congress to report on the subject.

What happened, as the record shows, was this: That after extensive hearings, and after the House committee had reported the Stalker bill, and just prior to favorable action by the House on the bill, an attaché of the Bureau of Efficiency made an investigation. It was not an investigation by the bureau. There is not one particle of evidence to indicate that he was directed by the bureau to make any investigation. It might very pertinently be asked who got him to make an investigation, and whether or not he was compensated to make an investigation, in the midst of a bitter controversy between opposing factions here in the District. At all events, he did make an investigation, and he pointed out what he regarded as certain delinquencies of the southwest section, matters of traffic, matters of street-car facilities, matters of grading, excavation, and so on.

His report, thus unofficially and irregularly made, was seized upon by the very small minority of the House committee and stressed in the discussion of the question on the floor of the House. Notwithstanding that report, thus irregularly made, of an individual who had proved himself to be a zealot for another particular site, backed by an organized syndicate of real-estate speculators, the House overwhelmingly passed what we know as the Stalker bill. So that question should be eliminated.

That gentleman to whom I have referred gave his own interpretation of his report, as late as March 21, when he appeared before the Senate subcommittee. The chairman of the committee asked him this question:

> Did you express any preference as to sites?
> Mr. HAVENNER. No, sir; we expressed no preference.

That was his interpretation of his individual report, and it never was pretended to be an official report from the Bureau of Efficiency. It is printed in the RECORD, signed by Mr. Havenner as investigator, and there is not a sentence in the report that would ascribe it to the Bureau of Efficiency as an official document. It was never claimed to be a report of the Bureau of Efficiency until it had been twice stated on the floor of the Senate that the Bureau of Efficiency was opposed to the southwest site.

I sent for Mr. Brown, and he came to my office; and I very definitely and explicitly stated to him, so that there could be no possibility of misunderstanding, that it had been twice stated on the floor of the Senate that the Bureau of Efficiency was opposed to the southwest market site; and he said, just as explicitly and unmistakably, that that was not true, that they had not reported against the site.

With that unmistakable declaration I came upon the floor of the Senate and controverted the statement repeated by one of the Maryland Senators, saying, as I had a right to say in the circumstances and as the record shows, that the Bureau of Efficiency had not declared against the site. Then somebody went after Mr. Brown and got a letter from him, from which it appears that because of the assaults made upon the Havenner individual, irregular and unofficial report as to its accuracy, and obviously for the purpose of saving the face of the statistician who had no business precipitating himself into this affair, Mr. Brown assumed responsibility for a report that he evidently had not read up to that time until somebody called upon him.

Whereupon I wrote Mr. Brown a letter. I do not want to put it in the RECORD, although the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] put Mr. Brown's letter in the RECORD. I do not want to be needlessly disagreeable in the discussion of this matter, though I must confess it has gotten considerably on my nerves. I am not going to put the letter into the RECORD, but will content myself with the brief statement that I wrote Mr. Brown that he had flatly contradicted himself and had been guilty of an evasion of such a nature as that I would not confer further with him upon this or any other proposition. If anyone wants the letter to go into the RECORD, all right.

Now, I submit that I have not departed one iota from the record and have not been guilty of a single inaccuracy of statement in this controversy.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GLASS. I yield for a question.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator presented the proposition that only 8 per cent of the old market was retail and 92 per cent wholesale. Is not that an indication that there is something wrong with the old market?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no. The Senator will understand that this is not the only market in Washington. There are a dozen retail markets in Washington, four of them owned by the District itself, the others by private parties, and there is now proposed to be erected in another section of the city still another retail market to cost $3,000,000, privately owned. I do not think it ever will be erected. I think it was suggested to complicate this matter, but I accept the suggestion, and if it is erected, it will to that extent increase the retail facilities.

Mr. BROOKHART. It seems to me that Congress is interested in the retail or direct distribution from producer to consumer rather in having a wholesale market for the middleman.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and the Congress is interested in the produce that is sent here by the farmers of the whole country and to an infinitely greater extent than it should be interested in a few curbstone farmers from my State and from the State of Maryland.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. The retailer would not be able to get the produce at all unless it came through the wholesale houses. That is the only way the retailer can get hold of the produce.

Mr. BROOKHART. The farmer wants to be his own retailer and does not want the intervening man. He wants a chance to retail it himself.

Mr. GLASS. Ninety-eight per cent of the food consumed in the District of Columbia comes here from other States than Maryland and Virginia, in carload lots.

Mr. SMOOT. Or by water.

Mr. GLASS. Water shipments equivalent to carload lots.

Mr. BROOKHART. Conceding that, I can not see that it would affect the rights of the local farmers to their local retail markets.

Mr. GLASS. The local farmers have access to a dozen retail markets and there is not a sentence in the bill that would propose to change the nature of the market which is to be torn down and transferred to the southwest site. On the contrary, as I said when the Senator was not in the Chamber, it increases the retail facilities and will make possible the construction of sheds which are very much more ample than those which have been torn down.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. BROOKHART addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GLASS. I would prefer to go on in an orderly way.

Mr. BROOKHART. I shall not interrupt the Senator further.

Mr. GLASS. But as pertinent to this very question let me indicate to the Senate some things that relate themselves to the market situation, and I think my facts——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would yield to me just for one question.

Mr. GLASS. Very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. I must confess that I have myself in somewhat of a state of confusion about the whole matter. Is it proposed to establish in the southwest a local market where consumers will go for the purpose of purchasing?

Mr. GLASS. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. Or where the farmers who bring their products into the city of Washington in their carts or wagons or trucks will carry their produce?

Mr. GLASS. They may carry their produce there just as they may carry it to the existing wholesale market for which we want to substitute the proposed market.

Mr. SIMMONS. The proposed market does not and will not in any way interfere with the consumers' market that may be located elsewhere?

Mr. GLASS. On the contrary, it increases its facilities. It nearly doubles its facilities. To be exact, it increases them 86 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. This, then, is only for the purpose of establishing a warehouse there for produce that comes to the city in carload lots?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, it is not only for that purpose. It is for the purpose of selling at retail just as has been done in the existing market. The Senator will understand that this is not a new enterprise. The existing wholesale market is to be torn down by the Government, and this is to transfer it to another site a little more than five blocks removed.

Mr. SIMMONS. But it does not interfere with the establishment of retail markets in different parts of the city?

Mr. GLASS. Not the least in the world. I have said to the Senator that it increases the facilities for retail trade.

Now I would like to proceed to show the Senator something in which he and other Senators ought to be vitally interested. I have said that when we talk about a farmers' market it is pertinent to inquire what farmers and how many farmers. The term does not simply comprehend a few truckers in the neighborhood of the District of Columbia. The Senator's own State of North Carolina sends more carloads of potatoes to this market than the produce of the Maryland and Virginia truckers in the immediate vicinity amounts to. The little State of Maine, up yonder on the Canadian border, sends twice as many carloads of potatoes to be consumed here in the District of Columbia as the produce of those local truckers in Virginia and Maryland combined amounts to.

Mr. SMITH. What about the State of Florida?

Mr. GLASS. The State of Florida sent, for the last fiscal year available statistically, 1,040 carloads of farmers' produce to this market, and the State of Maryland sent 66 carloads. It has been stated, to my confusion, in the course of the discussion that Maryland sends a greater amount of farmers' produce for consumption in the District of Columbia than does Virginia.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not the figures exactly accurate——

Mr. GLASS. May I say pleasantly to the Senator that it would be surprising to me if he had them accurately.

Mr. TYDINGS. It would be very surprising to me, if I may say so to the Senator from Virginia, if I should find that he has made any accurate statement on this situation.

But Mr. Roberts, superintendent of markets of the District of Columbia, who is in favor of my amendment and who is the man who has spent 20 years in the market service in the District, told us in his report, which is in the Senator's hands, that 20 per cent of all the produce shipped into Washington comes here in trucks, and that most of that 20 per cent is sold directly to the consumer by the producer; whereas the carloads that come from the States go to the commission merchants who in turn sell them to the consumer, thereby injecting into the equation the middleman.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, I do not find in the record—and I have read his testimony over to-day—that the superintendent of the market particularly favors any one of the sites he examined. He may favor the proposition of the Senator from Maryland further to delay matters, but that is not going to be done. If the Senator understood him to say that 20 per cent of the produce consumed in the District comes in trucks he is merely mistaken. As a matter of fact, the farmers produce shipped into the District of Columbia from other States amounts to 98 per cent of the total, and only 2 per cent of it is carried by trucks.

Now, let us examine some of the other figures. I believe I was saying that, with an attempt to confuse me, it has been asserted here that Virginia furnished an inconsequential amount of the produce consumed in the District of Columbia, and about one-tenth of the amount sent in by Maryland. I am taking the Senator's own figures; he supplied them for the RECORD, and what do they show? They show that for the last available fiscal year Virginia shipped into the District of Columbia farmers' produce amounting in the aggregate to 717 carloads and Maryland shipped in but 66 carloads.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. GLASS. I should not like to yield every time I state an uncomfortable fact, because I would be constantly yielding to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is very comfortable, I will say to the Senator, to find that he can actually quote my own figures without criticizing them when they apply to his side of the case, but I regret that he can not quote them with so much equanimity when they are against him.

Mr. GLASS. I do not find those figures against me in any particular.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. GLASS. I think the Senator from Maryland will regret having put them into the RECORD.

The far-off State of California, away off yonder on the Pacific Ocean, sent in 1,032 carloads of farm products, while Maryland sent in but 66 carloads. So I might go through the whole list of States to impress the Senate with the fact that this is not a curbstone brokers' market for a few farmers living south of the Capital on the Virginia side of the Potomac River or in the State of Maryland on the northern border, but it is a farmers' produce market for farmers all over the country, designed to take the place of a farmers' wholesale produce market, the very charter designation of which was a wholesale market, but which incidentally has a retail trade of 8 per cent, according to the testimony.

Mr. TYDINGS. Whose testimony, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; if the Senator from Maryland doubts it, I can give it to him from a competent witness. [A pause.] I will put it in the RECORD when I can find it, but I assert of my own knowledge that it was so testified before the subcommittee, and I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. TYDINGS. While the Senator from Virginia is looking up the testimony, I hope he will allow me to point out——

Mr. GLASS. No; I will not.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator for his unfailing courtesy.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I did not intend any discourtesy to the Senator, but I do not want to be interrupted in my orderly presentation.

Mr. TYDINGS. When I held the floor I tried to yield to the Senator each time he asked me to yield.

Mr. GLASS. I will yield to the Senator presently.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have something that will correct an erroneous statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia declines to yield.

Mr. GLASS. I decline to be interrupted now, Mr. President.

Mr. TYDINGS. I again thank the Senator for his unfailing courtesy.

Mr. GLASS. Well, I am obliged to the Senator for thanking me. However, I yield to the Senator while I am looking for the particular extract.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have in my hand a report from the Department of Agriculture which was given to me this morning. I will read a paragraph from that report.

On busy days over 500 trucks occupy space at the market.

How do the trucks compare with carloads, when 500 trucks in one day come into the market as against 50 carloads of produce?

Mr. GLASS. If they shall need it, we are proposing to provide space for 1,000 trucks at the southwest site, which is twice as many as use the present market.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the point I was trying to make was that when the Senator was referring to the carloads shipped in from various States he did not count the number of truck loads that came in from various States; and I was attempting to show him that the truck loads were more than the carloads.

Mr. GLASS. In the aggregate?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; there are 500 a day.

Mr. GLASS. But there were 786 carloads.

Mr. TYDINGS. On what day?

Mr. GLASS. What day? Oh, on no particular day.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is a large number of cars.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I find in the hearings a statement that verifies what I said a while ago on the percentage matter. It is as follows:

Maryland

Farmers reporting	130
Miles traveled to market (average)	14
Size farm, acres (average)	118
Acres for market (average)	26
Total value of sales of Maryland and District of Columbia for year	$357,675
Value of sales (average) for year	$300,946
Per cent retail	6
Per cent wholesale	86.5
Per cent commission	7.5

That is, of the farmers who use this so-called farmers' market, their stuff was disposed of 6 per cent at retail, 86½ per cent at wholesale, and 7½ per cent sold to commission men.

Senator COPELAND. Now, Major, when you speak about wholesale, does that mean that was produce that had been contracted for in advance?

Major BROWN. No, sir. Probably very little of it was contracted for in advance, but sold to hucksters and grocers who come down and buy from the farmers and carry their stuff on their wagons or trucks either on their routes over the city or take it to their retail establishments.

Senator COPELAND. And sold at a lower price because larger quantities were taken? That is the reason for the wholesale selling?

Major BROWN. Yes; and it simplifies the process of disposing of it.

I might interject there, Senator, this fact. There are a great many farmers who come into town who sell partly at retail. Some of those stand around the Center Market, which is in this same general locality, but do not occupy the stalls in this farmers' market, with which we are concerned to-day. A great many others go to the other outlying markets in the city, around K Street and P Street and the others that have been mentioned, and, backing up in the street there, or in some other place where facilities are provided, sell their stuff at retail, but under those sheds in the farmers' market, as we apply the term strictly, the business of these Maryland farmers was 85½ per cent wholesale.

Virginia

Farmers reporting	27
Miles traveled to market (average)	16
Size farm, acres (average)	92
Acres for market (average)	18
Total value of sales by Virginia farmers for year	$28,250
Average value of sales (only 21 reported) for year	$1,345
Per cent retail	12
Per cent wholesale	81
Per cent commission	7

That statement contains the figures which I mentioned from memory a while ago as presented before the committee.

It has been stated here that all of the Virginia farmers together with the Maryland farmers came up in solid phalanx, to use a classical expression, in favor of putting this market north of Pennsylvania Avenue. As a matter of fact, that is not true. As a matter of fact, every public meeting duly advertised among the Virginia farmers has overwhelmingly declared, as they naturally would, for the southwest site. Boards of trade in Arlington County and in Fairfax County, chambers of commerce immediately across the line, have done likewise. Effort after effort has been made to have them reverse themselves, but they have not done it as yet. Let me quote some testimony from Virginia farmers which is in the record.

I quote from the testimony of Mr. Martin T. Webb, of Fairfax. He says:

I am a farmer and I am in favor of the southwest site. I am a member of a farmers' organization and of our county chamber of commerce and another organization which is composed of five or six hundred actually producing farmers. This matter has been before our organizations for many months. It has been discussed a number of times, and every organization has gone on record unanimously favoring the southwest site.

Here is the testimony—and this is testimony. I am not making any Exhibit A of people who want to sit in the Senate gallery and enjoy themselves listening to people talk. I am giving testimony upon which we based the report and which induced the action of the Senate committee.

Here is a statement from George F. Harrison, a Virginia farmer. He says:

I am a standing committee for six granges of Fairfax County, Va. I am representing the board of supervisors of Fairfax and Arlington Counties, and the Chamber of Commerce of Fairfax County. I have been before the chamber of commerce here and I was before the commissioners and we filed briefs with the House committee setting forth all the facts in the interest of Washington as well as Virginia. We are not a selfish people over there, and I want to say this to you, that if you put the market down here where you almost decided to put it, in the southwest, you will be getting near a mighty good neighbor, and if these farmers of Maryland boycott you because you do it we will furnish you all the produce you want.

You need not worry about their boycotting you. They are going where they can sell their produce, and do not worry about your commission men. They are going where the market is placed.

* * * * * * *

We will promise you faithfully if you will locate the market in the southwest where you have about decided to do it, that the housewives of the city of Washington will save 5 per cent on every article which she has to buy for her house consumption.

Right on that point of saving money, the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] yesterday said something about the cat being let out of the bag. Now, I want to exhibit a real cat, and see how it jumped out of the bag inadvertently and unexpectedly.

We had before the House committee a Maryland farmer by the name of Perry F. Skinner, and he gave this interesting testimony:

We might just as well tell the truth. A lot of our farmers do not want to go down there—

That is, to the southwest site on the water front—

because of the competition from the South and the Norfolk boats. That I am pretty sure from people who have told me straight out that that is their reason. I can bring them to you if I need to; and lots of it I get second hand. They do not want to go down there on account of the competition, and anybody who has gone through this game, you can not blame them. We do not want any more competition, but we can not have a market without competition.

So there is the cat out of the bag.

Mr. TYDINGS. It looks like a mouse to me.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no. If your Maryland farmers can sell their produce to the consumers in Washington at 5 per cent more than they could get in competition on the water front, of course, some of them would like not to locate in the southwest.

"Solid phalanx from Maryland!" I hold in my hand a petition signed by 118 Maryland farmers:

We, the undersigned, dirt farmers and producers of the tidewater counties of Maryland and Virginia, raising produce for sale at the farmers' market in Washington, D. C., petition the United States Senate to pass as quickly as possible the pending bill for the relocation of the farmers' market in southwest Washington adjacent to the municipal fish market and wharves.

I shall put this petition in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PETITION

We, the undersigned, dirt farmers and producers of the tidewater counties of Maryland and Virginia, raising produce for sale at the farmers' market in Washington, D. C., petition the United States Senate to pass as quickly as possible the pending bill for the relocation of the farmers' market in southwest Washington adjacent to the municipal fish market and wharves, this being the most suitable site in the city of Washington for the location of our market:

Mr. GLASS. I have here a letter written on the letterhead of the Maryland Senate, signed by J. Allan Coad:

MY DEAR SENATOR GLASS—

This is dated last month, January 15, 1929—

I hope you will pardon this intrusion by one who has no claim upon your services but who has great confidence—

And so forth.

We of southern Maryland are deeply interested in having the so-called southwest market bill pass the Senate at the very earliest opportunity, and I have been requested by several of the farmers' clubs of this section to solicit your assistance—

And so forth, and so forth. I will put that letter in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

SENATE OF MARYLAND,
Leonardtown, St. Marys County, Md., January 15, 1929.

Senator CARTER GLASS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GLASS: I hope you will pardon this intrusion by one who has no claim upon your services, but who has great confidence in your ability.

We of southern Maryland are deeply interested in having the so-called southwest market bill pass the Senate at the very earliest opportunity, and I have been requested by several of the farmers' clubs of this section to solicit your assistance. I have, of course, written to Senators BRUCE and TYDINGS.

I shall be glad to convey any reply you may care to make to the representatives of the aforesaid farmers' organizations of this locality.

Trusting that you can aid us in this matter really of vital concern to this section of Maryland, and with my highest regards, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

J. ALLAN COAD.

Mr. GLASS. So that the phalanx is not so solid as we were assured.

The Senator from Maryland a while ago wanted to know what evidence I had in substantiation of the statement that the record showed that the retail business of this established market was about 8 per cent. The statement was made by Colonel Jungersfeld at the public hearing of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia which is contained in Exhibit 5 on page 69, and it states:

The retail business of the market I find is only about 8 per cent.

Mr. TYDINGS. What is his title?

Mr. GLASS. It appears in the record as "colonel."

Mr. TYDINGS. I mean, has he any connection with the market?

Mr. GLASS. There is nothing here to indicate his connection with the market.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was sure there would not be anything to indicate that he knew anything about the market.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, well, if the Senator wants to inject such irrelevant witticisms into my speech——

Mr. TYDINGS. It could not be more irrelevant than what the Senator says.

Mr. GLASS. All right.

Then here is another report presented before the District Commissioners, called the Hudson report, Exhibit No. 1, and that report furnishes these figures:

Of the total amount of produce sent in from Maryland, only 6 per cent of it is retail, 86.5 per cent of it is wholesale, and 7.5 per cent of it is handled by commission merchants. Of the truck sent in from Virginia, 12 per cent of it—

Just double the amount of Maryland—is retail, 81 per cent of it is wholesale, 7 per cent of it is handled by commission merchants.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD an extract from the report of the committee giving further figures in this connection.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Dr. T. B. Symons, of Maryland University, states:

"In our opinion, as representing the farm producers, we grant that 80 per cent of the business is wholesale and that about 20 per cent is retail, so it is both wholesale and retail." (Commissioners' public hearing, Exhibit No. 5, p. 167.)

The Hudson report (Exhibit No. 1, p. 7) gives the following:

"If he sells at wholesale, he brings his produce to the farmers' market. If he sells at retail, he takes a stand on the curb at one of the public markets. He has from 6 in the morning to 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and later on certain days, to dispose of his truck load. His principal customers are the retail stores, the hucksters, the hotels, restaurants, and commission men, and the wholesale dealers; thus it is that the commission man and wholesale dealer are both customer and competitor of the produce farmer.

"The following data obtained and compiled by Mr. T. B. Symons, director of extension service, University of Maryland, were the result of a questionnaire answered by 157 farmers in Virginia and Maryland.

* * * * * * *

	Maryland
	Per cent	Per cent
Retail	6	12
Wholesale	86.5	81
Commission men	7.5	7

Mr. GLASS. I have given these facts and figures to the Senate in order that it may be seen, comparatively speaking, how inconsequential is the retail business of this market as now established and as it has been conducted for years, and, further, to convince the Senate that the transfer of the market from its present site to a point five and a half blocks south will have no appreciable effect in the matter of diminishing its retail business, which is not now of large consequence. On the contrary, as I have asserted and now repeat, the facilities that will be afforded by the southwest site will be 86 per cent greater in available space than has been afforded by the existing market; and there is no reason on earth why the truckers of my State and of Maryland may not find ample and better accommodations at this new site than they have been finding at the site which soon is to be destroyed by the Government here in the District.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. A statement was made about the destruction of a site. There has been some misapprehension about that which I should like to have the Senator clear up. The belief has been spread around on the part of some that the Government took, without compensation, the old site which was paid for by the city of Washington.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I can say to the Senator that that is not the fact. The title has always remained in the District. It never has been parted with. I should not undertake here on the floor of the Senate to speak definitely and accurately, although I have examined the matter. No hardship has been inflicted at all.

Yesterday the impression was made—I am sure unintentionally, but the impression nevertheless was made—that this market site in the southwest was owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad and that was the cat that leaped out of the bag. As a matter of fact, it is not owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad; it is owned by private persons, and a good deal of it will have to be condemned for this market site. The Pennsylvania Railroad, at the solicitation of these very commission merchants who subsequently formed a little real-estate speculative syndicate, at their request by written letter, bought a large tract of land down there from the Southern Railway for the purpose of curing the discomfort with which these commission merchants were threatened as a site for commission houses in the vicinity of the proposed southwestern market site.

The land was taken over, on option, at least, from the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., at the exact cost to the company. Not one thrip of profit was involved in the transaction. Those who took over that tract of land are now offering it to these commission merchants who are threatened with ouster at their present places of business without one farthing of profit on the transaction.

It has been asserted—it was asserted here yesterday—that 85 per cent of the commission houses of Washington are opposed to the southwest site. Here is their letter of protest. It is signed by 22 commission merchants. Let me show the Senate how fair these gentlemen are. These are the gentlemen who, by letter, besought the Pennsylvania Railroad to buy this tract of land over there for their commission houses, and never changed front until, for the pitiful sum of $5,000, they obtained an option on the Patterson tract, worth a million dollars, for speculative purposes, and at most 22 of them; and here is how they piece out their numerical strength:

W. H. Harrison & Co. That is the concern. Then the man who owns the concern signs also, "W. H. Harrison." That is two.

W. Charles Hietmuller Co., commission merchants. Then it is signed again by W. Charles Heitmuller.

Thomas A. Cannon Co., a concern, and it is signed again by two individual members of the concern.

N. J. Ward Co., commission merchants, and signed individually by three members of the firm.

That is the way they piece out the 22 signatures to a protest against the southwest site.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me for another interruption in connection with his statement?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. I have before me the hearings in this matter, and the statement is made by Mr. Harrison that they have put up $40,000. Was that on the Patterson tract or some other tract?

Mr. GLASS. This is what they did with reference to the Patterson tract: They got the Patterson tract on option for $5,000, and this illustrates the sincerity of the purpose of these gentlemen. That is a tract of land worth a million dollars, and they got an option on it for $5,000. Then they formed their little speculative syndicate for the purpose of building streets, improving the tract, selling off corner lots, and making a profit. The members of the syndicate, in addition to the option of $5,000, have impounded $40,000 worth of checks to certify their faith in the prosecution of the speculative enterprise. That is the amount of it.

We were told yesterday that 85 per cent of the commission merchants of Washington protested this site. I have shown that just about 15 of them about faced after committing themselves in favor of this other tract and for purely selfish purposes signed that protest.

I have here, on the other hand, and shall put in the RECORD along with the paper I have just read, an answer to that paper signed by 40 of the commission merchants of Washington in favor of the southwest site.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Now the Senator is going to bring that old fraudulent stuff here.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not think the Senator wanted to hear it.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; the Senator can exhibit it to the galleries if he likes, but I shall accompany the exhibition with this statement of facts. The Senator has a newspaper advertisement there that would have led anybody to believe that all the farmers of Virginia and Maryland combined were going to rush to a retail site up here in the center of the city; and the next day, as appeared in a publication in the Star of this city, the market master made the public declaration that only six of those gentlemen came there. It was just an imposition perpetrated.

The statement has been made here that this 85 per cent of the commission merchants of Washington handle 85 per cent of the produce consumed in the District of Columbia. I have not made any individual investigation of the statistics. The fact of the matter is that I have not crossed the threshold of my office to commune with these antagonistic factions. After the overwhelming sentiment of Virginia farmers came to me I did receive a delegation of five farmers from over there who had been induced to change their minds, and I would have received any other delegation that had come to my office, but that is the only one that ever got there. The opposition sent over there and scoured the two or three adjacent counties and got quite a few people to sign petitions, upon misrepresentations, as some of them told me afterwards, and to what did the petitions amount? Even the one said to have been signed by 118 Maryland farmers, which I put in the RECORD to-day, amounted to what? I could get up a petition before sundown on this brief winter's day to hang the junior Senator from Maryland, and he could, I am sure, to hang me, if it circulated among a particular class of people. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. I would not hang the Senator. I am too fond of him.

Mr. GLASS. Here is a letter signed by Mr. William O. Shreve, who, up to November last, was president of the National League of Commission Merchants, represented by this remarkable protest here, where four or five members of a firm signed one petition. Shreve was president of the association up to last November, and while I do not much believe in putting the Government to expense by loading up the RECORD with everything, great and small, I am going to put this in the RECORD. This is what he said:

> It has been represented to you by the Patterson tract promoters that they handle "85 per cent of the perishable food products shipped to Washington." As a matter of fact, as you will find upon investigation, these promoters do not actually handle as much as 10 per cent of the perishable food shipped into this city of 500,000 inhabitants.

There is the testimony of the man who was president of this national organization up to last November, and he has not signed his name four or five times to any petition of protest.

It has been said with a great deal of plausibility that all of the hotels of Washington are situated north of Pennsylvania Avenue, and that is the truest thing that has been said by my friends who are assailing the southwest site. That is true. Yet at a hearing I asked witnesses if they could name a single hotel in Washington that had not advocated and that did not advocate this southwest site, and they could not do it, and they can not do it. The hotels are among the greatest patrons of this market.

As a matter of fact, the retail grocers of the town, 200 in number, in their organization have advocated the southwest site. Men who get their supplies from this market have advocated the southwest site. There is not a wholesale merchant in the town who does not advocate the southwest site.

Not only is the municipal fish market, at a cost of $350,000 to the taxpayers of Washington, located in this vicinity, but nearly all of the meat packers are located there.

The poultry interests in the produce problem are located there. The large establishments for the sale at wholesale of butter and eggs and dairy products are already located there. The cold-storage plants are located there. The great warehouses that handle these products with facility are located there. The location of commission houses over there is not a mere bluff, as in the case with the Patterson tract. Contracts for the construction of 30 of those houses have already been let and construction begun. There is no real-estate speculation on the southwest site by a close corporation of commission merchants. They have begun the construction of 30 commission houses, and there has not been a brick laid on the Patterson tract and there never will be a brick laid there.

A wholesale market can not be conducted without transportation facilities. The Patterson tract is devoid of all transportation facilities. I am told that under the contractual relations with the terminal company it will be impossible ever to supply it with transportation facilities. There is not a drop of water on the Patterson tract. There are no transportation facilities by water there. Pretty soon, I say to the Senate, the major part of the trucks which will be brought to Washington will largely come up from those counties in Maryland and Virginia which front on the Potomac River and Chesapeake Bay. It was in evidence before the Senate subcommittee that the tracts of land now being used for trucking purposes in Maryland and adjacent to the District are being so rapidly acquired for construction purposes and for sites for homes that there will not be any truck farmers over there, and they will have to move farther back or come over to Virginia.

Then the question of competition comes into consideration, as that keen old Maryland farmer Skinner pointed out, much to the confusion of his colleagues, and showed that by going down on the water front the people of Washington could get the produce in competition and much cheaper.

We were treated to a delightful argument yesterday to the effect that the parking space at the southwest site is not sufficient. Why, it is fourfold greater than at any one of the other proposed market sites. Everybody knows, who is familiar with Washington at all, that automobile traffic of the town is nearly all north of Pennsylvania Avenue. That is where the cars run in unbroken streams along all the streets. Anyone who wants to go to an uptown theater had better go about an hour before the theater opens, because he will have to drive round and round and round the streets before he can get a parking space, whereas the southwest site fronts on a long water street that is now almost as wide as Pennsylvania Avenue and which the Board of Commissioners says is to be made that wide. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] knows that in the planning of the Mall, streets will be built that will make this market accessible readily to anybody who wants to go to it.

The junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] appeared before our committee and brought tears of sympathy from the eyes of his own exhibit there. He said a poor, crippled person living away out in Mount Pleasant would have to cross the entire city of Washington, including Pennsylvania Avenue, to buy a chicken. "Would you be so cruel," he asked, "as to impede a poor cripple in that way?" A cripple like that ought to be sent to a lunatic asylum and not to the market house. All he would have to do would be to hobble around to the corner grocery, perhaps next door to his establishment, or not far removed, and buy all the chickens he wanted to buy. If he insisted on going even to the market now established, which is only 5½ blocks away from the proposed tract, the street-car fare involved would cost him more than the difference in the price of a chicken which he could purchase at the Piggly Wiggly and the price of a chicken which he would get at the market.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GLASS. I do.

Mr. HEFLIN. Is there anything in the Senator's bill that prevents the having of a branch market or submarket at some point out in the neighborhood where the other market is proposed?

Mr. GLASS. I may say to the Senator that there are now 12 retail markets in the city of Washington.

Mr. HEFLIN. There is nothing in the Senator's bill that would prevent that?

Mr. GLASS. Not a sentence. It is not my bill. It is a bill which came over from the House. There is not a sentence in it that would prevent that being done. As a matter of fact, as I have said over and over again, there are 12 retail markets in the District, 4 of them owned by the District government and the others owned by private persons. I will say to the Senator from Alabama, as indicative of the fact that there are already ample retail facilities, that it has appeared in evidence that 40 per cent of the retail stalls in Convention Hall, near by the so-called proposed mid-city site, were at that time vacant. There is a proposition now before the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia to construct new sheds at several of the markets now owned by the District government, which would increase the retail facilities of those markets.

The fact of the business is that there are really but two sites involved in the market question after years of hearings and taking of testimony, and one of those is actually precluded by the excessive cost involved. The proposed southwest site will cost less than $300,000. The other available site would cost $659,000.

It is stated here that many of the civic organizations of the city have protested against the southwest site, but I say that is utterly inaccurate and misleading. Conceding that they bespoke the membership, which they did not do, of all the organizations, what was the action? It was not against the southwest site any more than if as much as against the Patterson site which the opposition has in mind. It was not against the southwest site, but it was in favor of an impossible mid-city site.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, as I understand the proposition of the measure which the Senator is supporting, it would save the Government about $300,000.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; on the site alone. Then the Senators from Maryland talk about the grade of the site. Somebody went down there and saw a great bank of earth at one end of the lot. The junior Senator from Maryland actually thought that the market was to be built up to that grade of earth and 40 steps cut down instead of the bank of earth being removed altogether, as, of course, it will be. The difference in the price of the proposed No. 1 site of the southwest market and any one of the other sites is sufficient two or three times over to clear the southwest site of every obstruction on it, to tear down and move away every building on the site.

Mr. President, I have no personal interest in the matter. I never go to market. I let some hotel in Washington do my marketing for me, and have done so for 28 years—long enough to have spent sufficient money there to have built a hotel of my own. I have no interest in the matter personally, and I am no more concerned in fairness for Virginia truckers than I am for Maryland truckers.

There may be many points I have overlooked, but there is one in particular to which I wish to call attention. Senators talk about traffic congestion and the peril of crossing Pennsylvania Avenue and all that sort of thing, but they omit to tell the Senate that every director of traffic in the District of Columbia for three years has approved the southwest site and has gone officially on record as saying that traffic conditions ought not to interfere with its selection.

One of the most eminent engineers in the United States at the time, the engineer commissioner of the District, reported that traffic conditions in no sense or degree precluded the selection of the southwest site.

Mr. President, I have occupied just about twice as much time as I intended to occupy, and just about ten times as much as was required to be occupied, except that I wanted some orderly and consecutive statement of the case for the RECORD after the bill shall have been passed. Now I am ready for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and is open to amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am not going to prolong the polemics of this matter except for probably two minutes to make a statement and then to ask that a document be read.

The Senator from Virginia has quoted some individual who wrote a letter, but has not quoted the authority of the United States Government, which is charged with looking after the interests of the people. I put letters into the RECORD yesterday to substantiate everything I had said.

Mr. GLASS. The misfortune of the Senator, however, was that they did not substantiate anything.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not quote from a man named Jungersfeld, or whatever his name was, who had no official title, and as to whom no one knew where he lived or whence he came or whom he represented or what his connection was with the proposition. Nor did I read a letter from some man living 100 miles from here who sold in the market, as the Senator from Virginia was glad to do.

Now, again to substantiate the position which I have taken in this matter, I ask that there may be read by the clerk a survey conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture which is absolutely in conflict with 90 per cent of the statements the Senator from Virginia has made. As this report is based upon the findings of actual inspectors who went to the market and obtained statistics in the course of preparing this report, I think it may be taken as substantially authentic. I send the communication to the desk and ask the clerk to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MARKET SITUATION

According to a survey just being completed, there were approximately 750 farmers selling on the farmers' produce market in the year 1927, just before the site was taken over for the building program. In the spring and summer there were more than 500 in attendance each Saturday. Their total sales for the year on the market were more than $2,800,000.

At the curb of Center Market there are more than 150 farmers selling at retail. On Saturdays in the spring and summer more than 125 of these attend regularly. Their sales are more than $700,000 per year. Center Market site is to be taken over for the building program within two or three years.

The total number of farmers attending at these two markets is more than 900, and on the busiest days there are more than 625 in actual attendance. Their total annual sales are more than $3,500,000, an average of approximately $4,000 per farmer attending. At this time no provision has been made for them.

Of the sales on the Farmers' Produce Market, recently abandoned, 31 per cent of the total sales in the last year of its operation were directly to family consumers, according to the best estimates the sellers can make. An additional 10 per cent were to hotels, restaurants, schools, hospitals, and similar institutions.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask the clerk, with the permission of the Senate, to reread the paragraph which he has just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk reread the paragraph and concluded the reading of the communication, as follows:

Of the sales on the farmers' produce market, recently abandoned, 31 per cent of the total sales in the last year of its operation were directly to family consumers, according to the best estimates the sellers can make. An additional 10 per cent were to hotels, restaurants, schools, hospitals, and similar institutions.

Including the farmers' line at the curb of Center Market, the sales directly to family consumers of the two markets were more than $1,500,000 per year, approximately 42 per cent of the total sales on the two markets. An additional 9 per cent were to hotels, restaurants, schools, and similar institutions. The total of these sales were more than $300,000 per year.

These farmers' markets have been crowded with family purchasers every Saturday in the summer, and almost equally well attended in the winter. There is no way of determining accurately the number of families patronizing them. However, the Saturday sales in the summer are approximately $50,000 each Saturday. Of this amount, $20,000 is directly to family consumers. It seems perfectly certain that upward of 12,000 families are represented in these Saturday purchases. It is no less certain that upward of 20,000 families make their purchases from these markets regularly or from time to time during the year. This means that of the total population of the District of Columbia, 100,000 are represented in these direct purchases from these two farmers' markets.

There are other farmers' markets in the city of Washington, at which approximately 500 farmers attend. Of these, 300 attend each Saturday in the spring and summer.

The 2,000 grocers (including 600 chain stores) of the District of Columbia buy all their near-by farm produce through the Farmers' Produce Market. This constitutes about one half of their purchases of fruits and vegetables. The other half comes in by rail. Substantially none comes in by boat.

With the development of the automobile truck the distances traveled by farmers to this market have greatly increased. Many of the farmers travel 20 or 30 miles; some come from as far as Frederick and Westminster, Md.; Charlestown, W. Va.; and Fredericksburg and Culpeper, Va., distances of 40 to 50 miles; some even as far as Hagerstown, Winchester, and Richmond, distances of 70 to 100 miles.

	Miles
Frederick, Md	44
Westminster, Md	52
Leonardtown, Md	56
Warrenton, Va	49
Fredericksburg, Va	56
Charlestown, W. Va	60
Hagerstown, Md	70
Winchester, Va	76
Richmond, Va	116

Even in the direction of Baltimore farmers come from a distance of more than 25 miles, within 12 or 15 miles of the city of Baltimore. These farmers are attracted to the Washington market by the opportunity of selling directly to consumers as well as to dealers. Such an opportunity does not exist in the larger farmers' market of Baltimore.

For the many thousands of farmers living within a radius of 15 or 20 miles of Washington this market constitutes the one outlet for their fruits and green vegetables. Thousands of these who do not actually attend at the market themselves send their produce by those who do attend. Many of those in attendance represent 3 or 4 of their neighbors, and a few hucksters bring in produce from 30 or 40 producers each.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, inasmuch as that report, which was given to me by Mr. Marshall, of the United States Department of Agriculture, at the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, who caused the inspectors to visit the market place and to obtain the information that the report contains, I respectfully submit to the fairness of the Senate that it must be, in effect, substantially correct, and is by every rule of logic entitled to more weight than is any statement of any testimony offered by one who has perhaps little or no official rank or connection with the proposition and who only bases his figures on speculation and not upon facts which have been actually ascertained.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Virginia, with his characteristic ability to minimize the points that are made against him and to accentuate those which are in his favor, referred to a report dealing with the number of carloads of produce which annually came into the District; and he quoted figures to show that only 66 carloads came in from Maryland, while 1,000 carloads came in from some other State, the State shipping the largest number. Of course, the Senator would like the farmer who only lives 5 miles from the city of Washington to haul his produce down to the box car, put it in there, then ship it by rail into Washington, and take it out of the box car to the market. It is perfectly plain, perfectly logical, and perfectly apparent that the obvious thing for the farmer living in the vicinity of Washington is to take his produce to town by truck.

The statement which has just been read shows the large number of trucks that come into the city each day. I think the statement is that on an average 500 truck loads come in daily and 31 per cent of the total amount of produce brought into Washington was sold directly to the consumer—the housewife—and that in the course of a month 100,000 families bought directly from the farmers who raised the products which were offered for sale.

No one can deny the fact that this market, if located on the southwest site, will be on the extreme southern rim of the city of Washington. The whole town is growing north, west, and east. This site is located away from the center of population and is bound to be farther and farther removed from the center of population, from the people who will want to deal at the market as time goes on. It will require every one who wishes to visit the market to traverse Pennsylvania Avenue; and on Saturday afternoon, when the market will be most in use, when the office buildings have turned loose all their thousands of employees, when people are about the streets shopping, when the theaters and moving pictures are open, and the crowds are very dense, the women who are going to do the shopping for the Sunday meals will be forced to penetrate that enormous bulk of traffic to go to one extreme side of the town to purchase their provisions for Sunday's meals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 3.30 having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement no Senator may speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am speaking now on the bill, Mr. President. I have an amendment pending.

We can not escape the fact that we shall contribute to the traffic congestion of this city to an enormous extent by forcing the number of people who now deal at this market to go through all that traffic on Saturday, and back through it again, in order to purchase the food for Sunday's meals.

If 10,000 housewives per week now deal at this market, it means that on Fridays and Saturdays 10,000 housewives will have to penetrate all that traffic and bring their purchases back again, to say nothing of the enormous distance they will be forced to go to make their purchases here.

What could be fairer than the amendment I have offered? I do not ask that any particular site be selected. I say that no site shall be finally selected until a commission appointed by the President of the United States shall have passed on this matter, taking into consideration the whole picture, and that whatever site they may select shall be the site upon which the market shall be constructed.

Is there any bias in that amendment? That is the amendment upon which the Senate will shortly vote. I have tried to present it without a bit of attachment for any site. I have tried to show my good faith, my interest in this matter not alone for Maryland or for Virginia but for the people who live in Washington, who have been taxed and who will furnish the money to construct this market.

If the commissioners appointed by the President select the southwest site, even though I do not agree with their choice, I shall not raise my voice in protest; but I do submit that this is not the place for us to select the site, and that competent people who will appraise and weigh all the factors that enter into this problem are the ones who should say what site the market should occupy.

The amendment simply provides that the southwest site shall be adopted provided a commission consisting of three persons selected by the President of the United States shall say it is the proper and right place for the erection of this market.

I hope that the interests of the voteless people of this town who have come here and protested over and over again, and 55 citizens' associations that are on record in opposition to it, will receive some kindly consideration at the hands of this body. No harm can be done to the proposition sponsored by the Senator from Virginia. If he has the correct site, the best site, as he says he believes he has—and he may be right; no one has a premium on righteousness—what harm can there be in letting three impartial persons, selected by the President of the United States, say whether or not he is right? But suppose he is wrong: We can not undo the wrong. We will have taken $300,000 of the money belonging to the people of Washington and the people of the United States and placed it in a building which will not serve to the best advantage the end sought to be served.

I can not conceive how any fairer proposition could possibly be offered to the Senate than to have this entire matter weighed, examined, and investigated by three competent persons, and that the site which they believe to be for the best interest of all the people interested in the proposition should be the site which the Senate should finally support. To do other than that is to gamble with the right and the wrong of the whole matter. It is perhaps to waste money; it is perhaps to make a mistake; and what justification can there be, in the last analysis, assuming that the Senator from Virginia is correct, for taking the public money of the people of the United States and using it for the sole benefit of a group of the citizens of this town, and not for all the people who comprise its population?

The only justification at all which we can make for this expenditure would be because of its retail feature, where all the population would have a chance to receive some benefit from dealing with the producer without the intermediary. If we eliminate that feature of it, and the Senator says it is a wholesale market—that is the purpose of it, he says—what justification is there for taking the money of the people of the United States and the taxpayers of Washington and using it to further the ends of a small group of people whose interests are apt to be more selfish than patriotic?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. Heretofore I have expressed the opinion in a tentative way that as I viewed the situation we ought not to appropriate a dollar either for one site or for the other. Is there any reason why the Government of the United States or the District should make an appropriation for one part of town or for another part of town for a wholesale or a retail market?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator that from a legal standpoint the whole thing is somewhat questionable. I do know that retail markets exist in every city, supported in whole or in part by cities; but I do not know of any purely wholesale market anywhere which has been constructed with the funds of the people, unless it was constructed with the proceeds of a bond issue submitted to the people of the Commonwealth or municipality, and in that way ratified and made the law.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. TYDINGS. I have only three minutes. I should love to yield to the Senator; but I hope he will not ask me to yield, because by the time he finishes my three minutes will be gone.

Mr. GLASS. That would be cruel, I admit. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is so cruel in his mental processes that he naturally sees himself reflected in everyone at whom he looks.

Mr. President, we can not undo this thing next year, after this money is wasted. This is the last stand for the people of this town. There is not a man who supported the Senator from Virginia who can rightfully say that any harm will be done to the proposition now pending if three men selected by the President of the United States are authorized to pass upon it before it goes into being. If they do not pass on it—if the people come here at the next session and ask for additional money to construct a farmers' market—we will have wasted $300,000 in the building of the southwest market if it proves to be unsatisfactory. The composition of the proposed commission I do not know. I shall not ask the President to appoint anyone. I shall take no part in the selection of the umpires, and I shall be content to abide by their decision; but I do submit that before we make this tremendous expenditure, about which there is so much controversy, the matter should be passed upon by people competent to delve into all the facts and ascertain the proper and best solution.

I therefore hope my amendment will prevail.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of no quorum having been raised, the Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 14850) for the relief of Leo Byrne was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD FUND (S. DOC. NO. 260)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Federal Reserve Board in response to Senate Resolution 323 (submitted by Mr. HEFLIN and agreed to February 9, 1929), requesting the Federal Reserve Board to give its reason for increasing the rediscount rate and to furnish information relative to harmful speculation, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC-BUILDING PROJECTS (H. DOC. NO. 613)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the interdepartmental committee appointed in connection with public-building projects and the $248,000,000 authorization therefor, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

JAMES E. JENKINS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1338) for the relief of James E. Jenkins, which was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "appropriated," to insert "and in full settlement."

Mr. ODDIE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND RULES

Mr. BROOKHART. I desire to give notice of a suspension of the rule to offer an amendment to House bill 17223, the second deficiency bill.

The notice was read, as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 1 of rule 16, for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and so forth, the following amendment; viz, at the proper place insert the following:

"Provided, That section 13 of the classification act of 1923 as amended by the act of May 28, 1928, is hereby amended by providing effective on the first day of the month succeeding the enactment of this act one additional salary rate as a maximum rate, which will add 1 increment or step up in each of the professional and scientific grades from 1 to 5, inclusive; all grades of subprofessional service; clerical, administrative, and fiscal services from 1 to 12, inclusive; and the custodial service, grades 2 and 4 to 10, inclusive: Provided further, That in the clerical-mechanical service, the rate of compensation for classes of positions in grade 1 shall be 55 to 60 cents an hour; grade 2, 65 to 70 cents an hour; and grade 3, 75 to 80 cents an hour: Provided further, That the heads of the executive departments and independent establishments pursuant to authority to adjust the pay of certain employees in the departmental and field service shall, effective the first day of the month succeeding the passage of this act, readjust the compensation of the grades of the departmental services herein named and the corresponding field service positions, so that employees whose positions were affected by the act of May 28, 1928, and who did not receive an increase in salary the equivalent of two steps, or salary rates in their respective grades shall be given such additional step or steps or salary rate or rates within the grade as may be necessary to equal such increase: And provided further, That there is hereby appropriated out of the Treasury from any moneys not otherwise appropriated sufficient sums to readjust the salaries as herein directed during the remainder of the fiscal year 1929 and during the fiscal year 1930."

DEGREE-CONFERRING INSTITUTIONS

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin, provided his matter will lead to no extended debate.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to submit a conference report and ask for its immediate consideration. I will state to the Senator from Virginia that if it involves debate I shall withdraw the request.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin to submit his conference report with the understanding that it will not require extended debate.

Mr. BLAINE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2366) to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered (1) and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the language inserted by the House, insert the following:

"2. That any such degree shall be awarded only after such quantity and quality of work shall have been completed as are usually required by reputable institutions awarding the same degree: Provided, That if more than one-half the requirements for any degree are earned by correspondence, or extramural study, such fact shall be conspicuously noted upon the diploma conferred: Provided further, That no diploma shall be issued conferring a degree in medicine or any healing art, or in dentistry, for study pursued or work done by correspondence."

And the House agree to the same.

JOHN J. BLAINE,
D. O. HASTINGS,
ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
FREDK. N. ZIHLMAN,
CHARLES L. UNDERHILL,
THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what conference report it is?

Mr. BLAINE. It refers to the so-called diploma bill.

Mr. SWANSON. I object. There is another matter pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

LETTER FROM DAUGHTER OF THE LATE SENATOR JOHN T. MORGAN

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from Miss Cornelia I. Morgan, daughter of the late John T. Morgan, formerly a Senator from Alabama. This letter was sent to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] in connection with his activities in bringing about a survey for a canal across Nicaragua. I request that the letter be read by the clerk at the desk. It is very short. I feel sure that there are a number of Senators, who knew Senator Morgan, who would be interested in hearing this letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE MENDOTA,
Washington, D. C.

Senator WALTER E. EDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: There is probably no one in the United States who will rejoice with you more than I over the passage of your resolution providing for a survey of the Nicaraguan canal. I am taking the liberty of sending you my congratulations and thanks, not only as a citizen of our country but because my father, John T. Morgan, of Alabama, gave years of his life to bringing about the building of an interoceanic canal, preferably the Nicaraguan route. For 25 years he toiled and worked, studying every detail, sparing no pains to prove what he believed to be the best and most advantageous location for a great waterway.

Of the manifold tasks and duties which engaged his attention in the 31 years of his service in the Senate, I think none were more absorbing or interesting to him than this project. When the Panama Canal bill passed he gave his earnest attention to furthering its completion, always feeling, indeed saying, there would be some day a canal at Nicaragua as well. So I am naturally intensely interested in your resolution.

May there be no delay in the House to keep us from having our Nicaraguan canal survey at an early day!

With sincere good wishes and high esteem, I am yours,

(Miss) CORNELIA I. MORGAN.

FEBRUARY 26, 1929.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. GOFF presented the credentials of HENRY D. HATFIELD chosen a Senator from the State of West Virginia for the term commencing March 4, 1929, which were read and ordered to be placed on file.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the State Senate of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

Senate memorial, introduced by Committee on Mines and Mining

NINTH LEGISLATURE, REGULAR SESSION
STATE SENATE.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Senate of the Ninth Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session assembled, respectfully represents that—

Whereas mining is a major industry of the State of Arizona, and the development of mineral resources is essential to its prosperity and advancement; and

Whereas such development is in a large measure dependent upon the legitimate regulated sale of mining stocks and securities through the medium of stock exchanges and curb exchanges throughout the country; and

Whereas it has come to the notice of your memorialist that certain curb exchanges, acting through their authorized committees, have adopted policies relative to the listing of and dealing in stocks and securities of American owned mine development companies, prejudicial thereto, and at variance with and less favorable than their policy and requirements as to the listing of and dealing in stocks and securities of similar foreign-owned companies, and companies other than mining companies, which policy, if effectuated, would greatly retard the development of the mining industry of this State.

Now, therefore, your memorialist prays that Congress do take all necessary steps and proceedings to cause investigation to be made of the methods and regulations of curb exchanges throughout the United States relative to the listing of and dealing in stocks and securities of American-owned mine development companies, as compared with methods and regulations made use of in connection with the listing of and dealing in stocks and securities of similar foreign-owned companies and companies other than mining companies.

That if favoritism or discrimination adverse to the Amercian mining industry, or any other lawful industry, be found to exist, the Congress provide, by appropriate legislation, for the proper regulation and control of the listing of and dealing in of stocks and securities, by and through curb exchanges, and for the penalizing of favoritism or discrimination in such listing or dealing; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate transmit copies of this memorial to Arizona's Representatives in Congress, and to the proper officers of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

Unanimously adopted February 21, 1929.

H. W. HILL,
President of the Senate.
W. J. GRAHAM,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, praying for the passage of legislation providing increased tariff duties on plumbago, graphite, and graphite ores, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See joint memorial printed in full on the 25th instant when presented by the Vice President, page 4201 of the RECORD.)

Mr. WHEELER also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, praying for the establishment and promulgation of grades and standards of wheat which will take into account its protein content, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint memorial printed in full when presented on the 26th instant by Mr. WALSH of Montana, page 4332 of the RECORD.)

Mr. WHEELER also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, praying for the passage of a resolution submitted by Senator CAPPER directing the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee to take immediate action relative to special export rates on grain, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

(See joint memorial printed in full when laid down by the Vice President on the 26th instant, page 4332 of the RECORD.)

Mr. BINGHAM presented a petition of sundry citizens of New London, Waterford, and Groton, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the repeal of the national origins clause of the immigration act of 1924, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9285) to provide for the settlement of claims against the United States on account of property damage, personal injury, or death, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. SACKETT, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16393) to include henceforth, under the designation "storekeeper-gaugers," all positions which have heretofore been designated as those of storekeepers, gaugers, and storekeeper-gaugers; to make storekeeper-gaugers full-time employees, and for other purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

On motion of Mr. McNARY, the Committee on Foreign Relations was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 382) to send delegates and an exhibit to the Fourth World's Poultry Congress, to be held in England in 1930, and it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills:

H. R. 6687. An act to change the title of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14659. An act to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2360) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249), entitled "An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906," entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes."

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, D. C.

FARMERS' PRODUCE MARKET

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing the acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAINE obtained the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would like to offer the amendment now lying on the clerk's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 6, strike out the period, insert a colon, and the following:

Provided, however, That the acquirement of such site or any other site in lieu thereof shall be subject to the prior approval of a commission composed of three persons appointed by the President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who opposed the proposed location of the market in the District of Columbia, I want to state that my reason for opposing the location in the southwest section does not involve the question of the desirability of any other location. I have not concerned myself with respect to any particular location. I have endeavored to concern myself with respect to that which is bound to occur if Congress locates the market in the southwest region.

While this bill was pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia, I went to the police department and there obtained the services of an expert on traffic conditions of this district, and made a very close personal inspection of the proposed site, in company with a traffic officer, with a view of ascertaining whether or not it was desirable, from the traffic standpoint, to locate the market in the southwest.

I found from that inspection that there are but four uninterrupted streets that run through the main portion of the city. Those streets are Sixth Street, Seventh Street, Twelfth Street, and Fourteenth Street. Each one of them leads across the Mall.

When we establish the community center for the city of Washington, which I am sure will soon be done, the west boundary of that community center will be Sixth Street, and the south boundary Pennsylvania Avenue. Therefore, the present plans as contemplated, if this market is located in the southwest, will require all of the patrons of this market to traverse the most congested area of the city of Washington. The result will be that 99 per cent of the traffic of the city of Washington to market, I would say, would be led into the bottle neck at the very location proposed in the southwest.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. Let me state to the Senator that I have only 10 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on the amendment.

Let me go into this location a little further. Maryland Avenue is contiguous to the proposed site for the market. That avenue would accommodate a very limited number of people on the east and south of the Capitol Grounds. As I have said, the great bulk of the people of Washington live in the section of Washington north and northwest of the proposed site, as indicated by the lines drawn by the pointer on this map.

Moreover, Fourteenth Street is the main artery leading from the city of Washington to the gateway of the South, to the land of Dixie. It leads to the highway which goes through to Richmond, and, in fact, down through North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida. It is the most congested highway in the United States during the summer-vacation time. From the time of the cherry blossoms, in the early spring, until the tourist season closes, there is a veritable caravan of automobiles traveling north and south on that highway.

The result, therefore, will be that those who do the marketing for 500,000 or more people of Washington will be required to intersect what I know to be and what the Senator from Virginia will confess to be the most congested road in this whole country, outside, perhaps, of the large urban sections.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may we have order? The Senator is making a very important speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BLAINE. There are, therefore, two leading streets—Maryland Avenue and Fourteenth Street. Sixth Street, Twelfth Street and Seventh Street are contiguous to the market, but I want to repeat that upon the completion of the plans for the Mall, and upon the completion of the plans for the community center, those who do the marketing for half a million people will be required to intersect the congested highways and streets.

I have observed for a period of at least 10 days when it was utterly impossible to cross Maryland Avenue at Fourteenth Street, contiguous to the proposed market site, as the people went to view the cherry blossoms in Potomac Park. The establishment of the market in the southwest section would result in menacing those people who find it desirable to patronize this market, and, bringing further congestion, it would menace the tourists on their way to the Southland.

Moreover, it will do more than that—it will establish a market in the southwest which means the perpetuation of one of the most unsightly sections in Washington. I am speaking now of the Potomac or Washington Channel.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin on the amendment has expired. He still has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. The Potomac River has all been improved down to and beyond the Lincoln Memorial, except this very small section from the War College to the Bureau of Printing and Engraving. That section contains coal yards, lumber yards, ramshackle buildings, and is ugly in appearance. It would appear to me that those who have some pride in the National Capital would desire to clean up that eyesore in the next few years. If we establish permanent buildings, if private parties invest large sums of money, as they will, when the Government finds it desirable to improve the balance of the Washington Channel water front, we will find that the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States will be taxed an unnecessary amount and will be taxed also by the unearned increment that comes to the real-estate speculators in that section. Therefore it is undesirable from the standpoint of the beauty of Washington to erect there permanent and substantial and expensive buildings which will delay the improvement of the last section of the Potomac River and Washington Channel, which now joins the Mall near the Capitol Square and the approach to the city of Washington.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Virginia will have an opportunity of 20 minutes in which to answer my contention.

From the two standpoints I have in view the national interest. I care not where the market may be located, so far as the market itself is concerned. I am concerned about the national interest. I think we ought to protect the beauty of the Capital. We ought to protect the approaches to the Capital, and one of the main approaches to the Capital of our Nation is the gateway to the South.

So, Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Maryland providing for a commission to be appointed by the President for the purpose of working out a proper location for the market and also for the proper protection of the beauty and as well the utility of the Capital of our Nation and also to consult and advise carefully respecting the undesirable traffic conditions which are bound to be created by bringing those who market for 500,000 people into this bottle neck, thereby menacing the lives of visitors to our Capital as well as of the men and women who may find it desirable or necessary to patronize the market.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from New York will have 20 minutes in which to respond.

While I am not concerned about the interest the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. may have in this matter, I have no doubt that the Pennsylvania Railroad is deeply interested. I have no doubt that it has been most obnoxious in its attitude toward Members of the Senate. I have no doubt that to-day and at this very moment a representative of the Pennsylvania Railroad stands just outside the Senate door inviting Senators to come from the Chamber so that he may urge upon them the passage of the bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, does the Senator mean to suggest that any agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad has ever approached me on the subject?

Mr. BLAINE. I think that the Senator from Virginia is earnest and enthusiastic for this project, not because of any interest he has in the Pennsylvania Railroad. I do not believe he has any such interest. He has the interest, it is true, of making a market convenient and contiguous to the State of Virginia. His interest is a State interest. His motive is a proper motive. I am not questioning the motive of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. But the Senator has suggested that an agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad is at one of the doors of the Senate Chamber sending for Senators. I ask the Senator if he means to apply that suggestion to me?

Mr. BLAINE. I did not say that he called the Senator from Virginia out of the Chamber, and I do not even intimate any such thing.

Mr. GLASS. The implication is against every Senator here.

Mr. BLAINE. I say now that I do not believe the Senator from Virginia has any interest in this project from the standpoint of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Mr. GLASS. And I will say to the Senator that no agent of the Pennsylvania will ever send for me on the subject, either.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no doubt about it.

So, Mr. President, the interest I have taken in the matter has been an interest from the standpoint of the welfare of our National Capital. We can not afford to create in this section of the city a bottle neck into which are going to be poured those who market for 500,000 people in Washington and the tourists who visit Washington. It is unfair to both of those great groups of people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, it does seem to me that the pending amendment ought to reconcile not a few Senators to the opposition of my colleague and myself to the pending bill. The proposal of the amendment is that the President of the United States shall appoint three persons to consider and pass upon the relative value of the different sites mentioned in the testimony bearing upon the bill, and to select the site which they believe to be most eligible for the purposes of a farmers' market from the point of view of the public welfare.

I am sure that Senators have been impressed with the fact that the testimony relating to the respective value of the different sites under consideration by us is to say the least, decidedly conflicting, and that is so because much of that testimony is more or less tinged by selfish considerations. So why not let the President select a commission to choose a site for the farmers' market? We have every reason to believe that such a commission would be an able one. We have every reason to believe that such a commission would be disinterested. Why, therefore, should not even Senators who have favored the bill heretofore give assent to the pending amendment?

So much for that. Something has been said about our being approached by representatives of the railroad companies. I have been approached by none, but I take this occasion to say that I do not think that there is anything with respect to which there is so much "can't" spoken as this thing that is called lobbying. So far as I am concerned I am glad at any time to be approached by any lobbyist provided he is not some irredeemably disreputable scamp in whose statements no one could under any circumstances repose any confidence. As I said some time ago, my cry with regard to knowledge upon any subject that I am required to deal with as a Senator is that of Goethe upon his death bed, "Light, more light!" I care not from what quarter that light comes, whether it comes from a railroad like the Pennsylvania Railroad or from some private individual. I think that I can always trust myself to make the proper allowance for the workings of self-interest in the breast of any lobbyist whatsoever.

In conclusion, in a perfectly good-natured manner, I wish to add that the subject which we are discussing is at least an illustration of the utter untrustworthiness of promises made by Senators with reference to the amount of time that they intend to take up in the discussion of a question. The Senate will recollect that I began by declaring that I did not have a word to say with respect to the pending bill. Then the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] promptly followed suit and said that he did not have a word to utter with respect to it. And yet it so happens that I have made three speeches on the bill and if my computation is not incorrect the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has made four. Just exactly how many speeches the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has made I forget at the moment.

If the Senator from Virginia will accept it as a mere pleasantry, I am bound to say that the number of speeches that he has made reminds me of something that was once said about the famous writer, Thomas Carlyle. Carlyle had a way of constantly dilating upon the shallowness of speech and the profound significance of silence, and, of course, I need not tell the Senate that he was one of the most voluminous of writers of his time. Finally, some one was unkind enough to say that Carlyle had preached the doctrine of silence in 30 volumes. So I shall, perhaps, be pardoned for calling attention to the fact that after assuring us that he was not going to speak at all, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] poured out speech after speech, and very zealous and able speeches they were, I am bound to confess.

Mr. GLASS. The only trouble about that illustration is that the Senator is mistaken in saying that I ever assured anybody I was not going to speak on the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator certainly stated two or three times that he did not have a word to say on the subject, and then afterwards that he was afraid that he might be driven to talk against time, something that he had never done in his life before, and, so far as I am concerned, I am compelled to admit that I did say that I did not propose to utter a word with respect to the pending bill, and yet a few minutes later was threatening to talk for at least an hour or an hour and a half if the return of my colleague to the Senate was not awaited by the Senate. All of which, of course, is but another proof of the lamentable facility with which a Senator can build up an imposing superstructure of words on any foundation however contracted.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I was very much interested in what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] said about the location of the market, about it being a bottle neck, about the traffc on Pennsylvania Avenue, and the difficulty of getting to and from the market, and the congestion of the street. The busiest place in the world is the corner where the Bank of England is located in London. The greatest congestion in the world is there. I have been at the Bank of England corner on Sunday morning when there was not a vehicle or an individual in sight. The next busiest place in the world is Columbus Circle, in New York City. Anyone can go there early in the morning and not see anyone there at all.

The Senator from Wisconsin utterly fails to appreciate the fact that this market is not intended to be a retail market. It is a wholesale market and has been such from its very beginning. The purpose of the market is that the farmers, as well as those who ship their produce by rail and by water, may take their produce to the market early in the morning and dispose of it to the retail dealers, the wholesale dealers, the boarding-house keepers, and those who buy in wholesale lots.

At the time when the market is used there are practically no vehicles or individuals on the streets. So, Mr. President, it is utterly unfair, I think—and I do not say this with any thought of criticizing the Senator, for I know his earnestness and studiousness—to attempt to convey the impression that the southwest site is in a location where in the middle of the day it would be difficult of access.

I was a member of the subcommittee that studied this question. On two or three different occasions our committee went into the matter, not alone in this Congress but in a previous, and it was brought out by the testimony of the police department which had made a study of the question that the traffic on the part of produce dealers coming in by motor car or by wagon would not be an objection particularly in view of the fact that the market is principally used early in the morning.

I hope the Senate will bear in mind that this is not a retail market. If I were seeking to locate a retail market I would put it in the vicinity of the baseball park, in the center of the city, where it could be easily reached from every section of the city. That would be the natural place for a retail market; but the market we are talking about and have been discussing for several days is not a retail market, where it is intended that an individual may go and buy a single article such as a pound of butter; that is not the intention. This market is a place where the farmers and produce dealers may bring their goods and sell them in quantities to commission merchants and to large users of such commodities. That is the purpose of the market that we are discussing. The natural place for it to be located is where there are available all possible means of transportation, not alone motor trucks, not alone wagons drawn by horses, but also where railroad facilities are present and where there are the steamboat facilities.

In the very nature of the case, as we develop our interior waterways, there will be more and more traffic from the South which will be brought up to the North. The place where that traffic will be handled will be in the southwest section of the city. Therefore, as I view it, the natural and proper location for this market is that provided for in the pending bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator to explain why there is any obligation on the part of the public, the people of his State, and the people of other States, and the people of the District of Columbia to make a contribution to buy a market place for the wholesale dealers of whom the Senator speaks and for the benefit of the railroads that ship produce to Washington? Why should they not pay for their own market?

Mr. COPELAND. I will say, in reply to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that he has asked a very proper question. I think there is no Senator in this body who is more attentive to his duties or more watchful of the Public Treasury than is the Senator from Utah, and I love him for his personal qualities as well as for his other qualities, but he must bear in mind that the Congress of the United States is not only the Congress in the ordinary sense of enacting legislation but it is also the board of aldermen for the city of Washington. We have resting upon us as a Congress exactly the same obligation to deal with the local problems of the city of Washington as has the board of aldermen, or in my State the board of estimate, in dealing with local problems in other cities. Every city, including Salt Lake City, I have not doubt—though I am not informed as to that, but it is a progressive city and I therefore think that it has these progressive ideas in operation—provides a place where fresh food may be bought and distributed to the citizens of the community.

It is most important for the Senator from Utah, in order that he may provide his fine family with good food, that this wholesale market shall be available, in order that the retail merchant who has his establishment in the neighborhood of the Senator's home may get fresh supplies and sell them to the Senator's family. We are under the same obligation to provide such a market here as the board of estimate or the board of aldermen is to establish it in any other city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from New York on the amendment has expired. He still has 10 minutes left on the bill.

ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTH OF HENRY W. LONGFELLOW

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to depart from the particular matter in hand, I should like to make reference to another subject.

To-day is the birthday of America's poet, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, and I think we ought not to pass the day by without recalling that fact. Longfellow is one of the world's best-loved poets. We have in existence the Longfellow Association, and I observe that their latest endeavor is to establish the Longfellow international highway, to extend from the land of Evangeline to the Queen of the Antilles, connecting the northland with Cuba.

Mr. President, in commemoration of the day, and of this great poet, whose memory we all love, I ask permission that there be printed in connection with my remarks the short poem by Longfellow, which is entitled "The Builders," the first verse of which reads:

> All are architects of fate,
> Working in these walls of time;
> Some with massive deeds and great,
> Some with ornaments of rhyme.

Without further reading, I ask that the poem be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the poem—a stanza of which the Senator from New York has just read—is so much more interesting and instructive than anything else that we have heard in the Senate to-day that I insist upon its being read in full. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire it read in his time?

Mr. NEELY. Let it be read by the Clerk in my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized, and, in his time, the Clerk will read the verses which the Senator from New York started to read.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, before the Clerk reads the poem, may I observe that time does not seem to have any value in the Senate during the last hours of a rapidly and fitfully expiring Congress. For four days we have debated the question "where shall the people of the District of Columbia buy a basket of eggs, a peck of potatoes, or a spring chicken?" The Senate is a greater spendthrift of time than the man who drove his hogs 20 miles to mast. A neighbor said to the hog driver "You evidently waste a great deal of time in making these long trips to the mountains where the acorns grow." The swine herder replied, "What's time to a hog?" [Laughter.]

So, Mr. President, what is time to the Senate when statesmen—

With their thumb-worn creeds,
Their loud professions and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife
While freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land,
And waiting justice sleeps?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NEELY. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does not the Senator have any pity at all on the Senator from Maryland, who said of one of his patriotic constituents that he would have to make a long pilgrimage across the city to purchase a pullet? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. NEELY. Not until I reply to the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia declines to yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I merely want to ask the Senator a civil question.

Mr. NEELY. I shall require more information as to the kind of "pullet" the Senator from Alabama has in mind before I commit myself on the question of pity. For example, a woman sent her husband to town to purchase a common household article. The husband, as usual, forgot the name of the thing that his wife wanted him to buy. In his embarrassment he said to a merchant, "My wife told me to buy either a camisole or a casserole, but which I am unable to remember." The merchant replied, "My friend, if it is for a live chicken, it is a camisole; if it is for a dead one, it is a casserole." Therefore let me inquire whether the Senator from Alabama means a camisole pullet or a casserole chicken. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. NEELY. I shall be glad to yield, but if the Senator from Alabama referred to the senior Senator from Maryland who now seeks recognition, I know that it is a casserole. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUCE. I merely wish to remind the Senator of the old saying that there is reason even in roasting an egg.

Mr. NEELY. Particularly a bad one.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope the clerk will now be allowed to read. Unanimous consent, as I understand, has been given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE BUILDERS

All are architects of fate,
Working in these walls of time;
Some with massive deeds and great,
Some with ornaments of rhyme.

Nothing useless is, or low;
Each thing in its place is best;
And what seems but idle show
Strengthens and supports the rest.

For the structure that we raise,
Time is with materials filled;
Our to-days and yesterdays
Are the blocks with which we build.

Truly shape and fashion these;
Leave no yawning gaps between;
Think not, because no man sees,
Such things will remain unseen.

In the elder days of art,
Builders wrought with greatest care
Each minute and unseen part;
For the gods see everywhere.

Let us do our work as well,
Both the unseen and the seen;
Make the house, where gods may dwell,
Beautiful, entire, and clean.

Else our lives are incomplete,
Standing in these walls of time,
Broken stairways, where the feet
Stumble as they seek to climb.

Build to-day, then, strong and sure,
With a firm and ample base;
And ascending and secure
Shall to-morrow find its place.

Thus alone can we attain
To those turrets, where the eye
Sees the world as one vast plain,
And one boundless reach of sky.

FARMERS' PRODUCE MARKET

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing the acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the bill under consideration is entitled:

An act authorizing acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes.

I have proceeded on the theory with reference to this bill all the time that it was in the interest of the farmers. I have proceeded on the theory that it would furnish a marketing site where the farmers might sell their produce at retail to the people of the city and the community. Now I find that it is not such a market at all. It is merely a wholesalers' market, says the Senator from New York. Being a scientific man, he ought to know. So we are asked to appropriate $300,000 in the name of the farmers for the benefit of the middlemen!

I am not for any bill of that character. If it were in good faith for the farmers of the community, I certainly should support it; but I can see but little farmers' benefit in the provisions of this bill.

Three hundred thousand dollars! Of course, that is not as much as the $300,000,000 that we are appropriating for cruisers; but this is only for one town, for one community. If the wholesalers of this city are entitled to a market, constructed at the expense of the Government, costing $300,000, I think the wholesalers of Des Moines, Iowa, are entitled to some such appropriation. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] says I ought to wait until next week to get that. It is too long to wait. If this is to be the principle, that we are to furnish a wholesale market, I can see no restrictions to the principle.

That may prove to be a good thing in the end. If we can establish these markets all over the United States with Government money and then tax the right fellows to pay the money, that might work out better. But, Mr. President, this is not a farmers' market.

That is quite evident; and I understand now why so many of the farmers, not only of Maryland but of Virginia—that is, the real dirt farmers—have written me and interviewed me in every other way against this bill. They are opposed to it, and have been consistently opposed to it all along.

We have held up a lot of important business here for this little transaction. I do not care so much about that, because I think a good deal of that business ought to have been defeated anyhow; but I protest against this being called a farmers' market, and the name "farmers" ought to be stricken out of the bill entirely before it is passed, if it is going to be passed. Let us call it by its right name.

I maintain that the producer and the consumer have a common interest in the marketing of everything in the United States, and, in fact, of everything in the world. I am a believer in the system of establishing markets on that theory of direct trading between the producer and the consumer. That theory is worked out under cooperative development. There is no other way to do it. That would mean that the producers or the farmers would be in cooperative control of their marketing.

In this instance the Government of the United States will be in control, and it will be in control for the profiteers between the producer and the consumer. Will it benefit a farmer to have a chance to ship a carload of eggs down to this market and then take whatever price they choose to give him? The farmers will not patronize it upon that theory. And so as to all the other products that come in there for sale, far removed from the farmer, it is a convenience for the middlemen who profiteer upon the farmer and who then in turn profiteer upon the consumers, a large portion of whom in this case will be the employees of the Government of the United States.

I believe it would be a good thing to build a Government city here for the Government employees, including the Congress itself, and to establish a buying and selling market in that city; but I should want the whole thing conducted on the cooperative plan and upon cooperative principles. I do not understand that the Senator from Virginia, the author of this bill, is opposed to cooperation and the cooperative idea.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. I did not exactly understand what the Senator from Iowa said about the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BROOKHART. I said I did not understand that the Senator from Virginia was opposed to the cooperative idea and the cooperative development. My understanding is that he favors that idea, although I never yet could get him to join me in a cooperative banking system that I want to start some of these times. But, Mr. President, if we establish this precedent of the Government going into business in this direct way for business men, and if this offensive system that we hear so much about of getting the Government into business is approved by the President of the United States, a Republican administration, and all these things, then I shall claim the right to use this as a precedent and a reason for the Congress, at the expense of the Government, building a Government city here, where our Government employees can buy their cooperative apartments from the Government, and where they will be sold back to the Government when they no longer need them, and where we can have a great cooperative market that will buy for these employees and sell to them, in order that they may avoid paying the profits which they will have to pay in this other profiteering market that the Government of the United States is now establishing.

It is my theory that those who do not believe in all this profiteering between producer and consumer have as good a right to the protection and help of the Government of the United States as those who do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Iowa on the amendment has expired. He still has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. I shall not use all of it. I am about ready to quit.

It will not be a square deal to go into the Treasury of the United States to help the profiteers, and then deny the aid of the Treasury of the United States to the producers and the consumers of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay the vote upon this question, but I expect to cast my vote in favor of this southwest market place. I have been convinced by the speeches that have been made that 85 per cent of the produce that comes into Washington comes over the railroads and up the Potomac River. This market ought to be located somewhere near the railroad and somewhere near the Potomac River.

It has been said that this is a wholesale market. I asked the Senator from Virginia if there was anything in the bill to prevent the establishment of local markets or branch markets about in the city, and he said there was not. So there is nothing in the bill to prevent the people in other portions of the city from having local retail markets to suit their convenience.

Mr. GLASS. Nor, may I say to the Senator, is there anything in the bill to prevent a continuance of the retail part of this market.

Mr. HEFLIN. Already in existence?

Mr. GLASS. Already in existence.

Mr. HEFLIN. So none of these things are to be disturbed unless the people of the city who operate them want to abandon them.

The Senator has spoken here about the people coming in and out of moving-picture places bumping into people who are going to and coming from market with baskets. That is a horrible thing to contemplate. [Laughter.]

Just think of the danger to which they will be subjected of butting into somebody with a basket of cabbage heads, or potatoes, or eggs, or chickens, or whatever they might have! No doubt many a one of these little fellows coming out of these moving-picture shows would like to get a good glimpse of a real fat chicken all dressed and ready to be fried or broiled and served. And, Mr. President, speaking about putting the market down close to where the boats run and where the railroad trains run reminds me of a story that I heard on former Senator Joe Bailey, of Texas.

He was traveling out in west Texas. He went into a town where he had not been before. He got there about 8 o'clock at night, and a drizzling rain was falling. He stepped out of the train, and there were several negro boys around there with old-fashioned hacks, and they were hollering, "Hackman! Hackman! Hackman!" One of them stepped up to the Senator from Texas and said, "Do you want a hackman?" He said, "Yes. Put my grips in your hack and take me to the hotel."

The hackman got him and his grips in the hack and whirled away from the station, which was brilliantly lighted, and in a little while he was out on the road in the dark, and the hack was jogging along. Bailey knocked on the door and said to the hackman, "Where are you taking me?" He said, "I am taking you up to the hotel." Bailey said, "Where is the hotel?" The hackman said, "It is uptown." "How far is it?" "It is about three-quarters of a mile." Bailey said, "Well, what in the world did they build the station away down here for?" The hackman said, "I don't know, sir; but I always had the idea that they done it because the railroad track was down here." [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have listened with no little interest to the discussion of the present bill. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has presented in a logical and convincing manner, his reasons for supporting the measure. I am, however, unable to follow him and shall cast my vote against the bill.

I have visited the place designated in the bill for the market site, and am convinced that it is not a suitable place, nor is it for the best interests of the people of the District. If the Government and the District are to furnish a site, and perhaps buildings, for those engaged as wholesalers in food products, then the site selected should be in an entirely different part of Washington if the convenience and interests of the people are to be considered. As I view the situation the place provided in the bill is largely in the interest of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the convenience of the people are subordinated to its interests. The inhabitants of the District reside north of the point selected, and only a very small fraction of the population reside near the proposed site. It is not suitable for retail purposes, and will, in my opinion, be little availed of by the inhabitants of Washington as a retail market.

It has been stated that there are a number of retail markets in various parts of the city. What is the necessity of providing another retail market? I think the answer must be that it is not designated by this bill to provide retail facilities for the people of Washington to purchase food products. What then may be the real purpose of the bill? It is for the commission houses and wholesale dealers, engaged in handling food products within the District.

What obligation is there upon the part of the Federal Government and the District to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars for the benefit of the wholesale dealers? They have their own buildings and warehouses or if not are able to procure them. Why should the Government undertake to furnish them building sites, and perhaps buildings, in which to conduct their business. If the wholesale dealers perceive that it is advantageous to them to have their warehouses and places of business near the Pennsylvania Railroad station and near the Potomac River, then they will pursue the course they regard as of the greatest material advantage to themselves.

If the taxpayers of the District and of the United States are to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars for the wholesalers and commission dealers, why should they not spend at least an equal amount for the benefit of the retailers? And if the taxes of the people are to be devoted to purposes of this character, why should the line be drawn in favor of the commission merchants and wholesale dealers in food products? Of course, food is important, but so are clothing, and gas, and electricity, and coal, and various other commodities. The Government does not furnish building sites or buildings for brokers and commission merchants, or wholesale dealers in the multitudinous commodities entering into the lives of the people. I repeat, if we are to furnish building sites and buildings for commission merchants and those engaged in the wholesaling of food products, I see no reason why the Government should not be as generous to corporations and persons dealing in a wholesale manner in other commodities imperatively required by the people.

It is well known that the wholesale dealers and the commission merchants handling food products throughout the United States are not an impoverished class. Indeed, they have greatly profited in the business in which they are engaged. In my opinion, considering as a class, commission merchants and wholesale dealers in all forms of food products, their profits upon the capital invested will be found to be as great, if not greater, than the profits resulting from most of the business enterprises in our country. The wholesale dealers in shoes and clothing and other necessities of life are not demanding special legislation for themselves; they are not asking that building sites be furnished them or that huge buildings be erected in which they may conduct their business activities.

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] stated a few moments ago, in answer to a question which I propounded, that in most cities of the United States markets were furnished for commission merchants and wholesale dealers in food products. I have no doubt that there are a considerable number of cities which do provide market facilities for not only those engaged in dealing in food products as wholesalers but those who fall within the category of retailers.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. In my city the municipality expended a very large sum of money to build a market of this sort, and the next time the Senator goes through the city of Newark he can see from the railroad a market which has been established there for the same purpose, in order that the outsiders who come in—truck raisers and others—may have a decent place to stay and display their wares until sales can be made, and in that way the community is benefited.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the hearings, as I remember the record, show that a very small percentage of the food products consumed in this city is obtained at or near the site where this market is to be erected. This site, as I have indicated, will be of great advantage to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.; and if commission merchants and wholesalers can have the Government furnish them a market site adjoining the railroad station, it will be of great benefit to them.

The great mass of the consumers within the District do not live near the proposed site. The hotels and the retail dealers will be required to cross the city, encountering all of the obstacles and difficulties incident thereto, in order to purchase from the wholesale dealers whose business houses will be upon the site which is to be purchased under the provisions of the bill before us.

As I have stated, the railroad will be greatly benefited. As I am advised, its representatives are now in the corridors of the Capitol urging the passage of this bill. Perhaps the railroad company is not to be blamed for urging this measure. Doubtless, if it was proposed to establish a market place convenient to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., representatives of that corporation would earnestly favor a similar measure.

Mr. President, I regard this bill as unjust and unwise. I think it is unfair to the people of the District, as well as to the taxpayers of the United States, who will be called upon to make no small contribution to the acquisition of the grounds referred to in the bill before us. In my opinion, the overwhelming majority of the people in the District are not in favor of the bill. As a member of the District Committee, hundreds of people have called upon me to register their opposition to this measure. I am unwilling to take the money out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of benefiting the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the commission merchants and wholesale dealers who are greatly profiting in their business activities within the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. BARKLEY answered to his name.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No business can be transacted, inasmuch as the roll call has commenced and a Senator has answered to his name.

Mr. BROOKHART. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. BROOKHART. What is the question we are voting on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

The Chief Clerk continued to call the roll.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], and will vote "nay."

Mr. SCHALL (when Mr. SHIPSTEAD'S name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is ill, and confined to his home.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I wish to inquire whether the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay," and if I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NYE. Upon this subject I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. Were he present, I understand that he would vote nay. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote yea.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—24

Ashurst	Capper	Hayden	Ransdell
Blaine	Dale	Johnson	Steck
Bratton	Dill	King	Thomas, Okla.

So Mr. TYDINGS's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there is no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. TYDINGS. On the passage of the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when Mr. BURTON'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. NYE (when his name was called). On this subject I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. Were he present I understand he would vote "yea." Were I permitted to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], and vote "yea."

Mr. SCHALL (when Mr. SHIPSTEAD'S name was called). My colleague, the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], is ill and confined to his home.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TYSON] are detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] on official business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—52

So the bill was passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, under the recommendations of the committee on order of business I fully appreciate——

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. MOSES. The motion made by the Senator from Maine is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it was quite unnecessary to make the point of order in order to protect the Senator from Maine. I rose for the purpose of saying that I fully appreciated the fact that under the regulations and purposes of the committee on order of business appropriation bills have the right of way over other general recommended legislation, and for that reason I am not opposing and have not opposed the proposal to take up the conference report. But I now have very great respect for the committee on order of business, particularly since listening to my friend, the distinguished Democratic leader [Mr. ROBINSON], insist that it should be acknowledged in all its authority.

I will state now that I shall oppose the intervention of any other general legislation except appropriation bills, and will undertake to protect the place of the reapportionment measure which is now next upon the general order of business program.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan in his remarks just now made an allusion to me that I did not hear. I would like to be informed what it was.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It was a very generous allusion because my distinguished friend from Arkansas, so far as I am concerned, has a twinkle in his eye that is the lighthouse of the Senate and I would not do anything at any time to put out the light. I said merely that I had taken so much to heart the Senator's recommendation as to the authority of the steering committee that I was now yielding to the steering committee with great enthusiasm.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not know what the Senator from Michigan has in mind. I have made no reference to the steering committee or to the right of the steering committee to control the action of the Senate. The Senate at last is the judge of what measures it shall proceed to consider. The steering committee's action is merely suggestive or advisory.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator was very enthusiastic the other day when I was trying, with freshman enthusiasm, to upset the committee, and I was moved by his words of wisdom, which I then took to heart as he uttered them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I still do not know what the Senator from Michigan is talking about. I presume it is my own obtuseness.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of calendar numbers 1823 and 1824, Senate Resolutions 303 and 308.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, may I ask what the resolutions are?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution (S. Res. 303) increasing the limit of expenditure for a survey of Indian conditions in the United States, and the resolution (S. Res. 308) continuing until the end of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress Senate Resolution 79, authorizing a general survey of Indian conditions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SWANSON. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the naval bill be immediately passed.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall have to object to that.

Mr. SWANSON. Very well.

SURVEY OF INDIAN CONDITIONS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, it is quite apparent, from statements made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and from other objections which have been made, that we are not going to be able to have the investigation into Indian affairs continued. At the last session of Congress the Senate of the United States unanimously voted to cause an inquiry into the Bureau of Indian Affairs. That investigation was started during the vacation and has been carried on since.

Just a few days ago when unanimous consent was asked to take up this resolution the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] directed some statements against the committee and made some criticisms which were entirely unfair, intimating very strongly that the committee had not entirely been doing its duty. In order that the Senate of the United States may understand and know what has been going on and the necessity for an investigation, I propose to read to the Senate some of the reports that have been furnished to the Committee on Indian Affairs with reference to the various reservations in the State of Montana. I now read from the report of Walter W. Liggett on the Tongue River Reservation in Montana:

REPORT OF WALTER W. LIGGETT ON TONGUE RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION

Tongue River Indian Reservation is situated in southeastern Montana close to the Wyoming State line and immediately adjacent to the Crow Indian Reservation. It is 32 miles long and 18 miles wide, containing approximately 464,000 acres. Tongue River runs along the eastern boundary of the reservation and the Rosebud River traverses the western half. The central portion is cut up by Muddy and Lame Deer Creeks. The only land suitable for agriculture lies along the creek bottoms and on the surrounding plateaus. There are approximately 80,000 acres which could be farmed. The remainder of the reservation consists of heavily timbered mountains and extremely rough foothills, suitable only for grazing. As yet the Tongue River Reservation is unallotted. Indians are living on tracts selected by them in years gone by and it is presumed that when allotments are made each Indian will be given the tract which he has been occupying.

Tongue River Reservation was set aside in 1884 to afford a home for several bands of Northern Cheyenne Indians who then were prisoners of war in Oklahoma. In 1892 some 333 Northern Cheyenne Indians from the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota were brought to Tongue River. In 1901 the Tongue River Reservation was enlarged to its present proportions. At the present time there are 1,449 Northern Cheyenne Indians on Tongue River. There are no white settlers on the reservation and the only town is the little hamlet of Lame Deer, where the agency is situated, and Busby, where the boarding school is located.

The Northern Cheyenne Indians probably are the most primitive among the tribes in the northern part of the United States. With the Sioux, their allies, they were the last Indians to become "pacified" after the Custer battle in 1876. The reservation is isolated and the fact that it has not been allotted has kept whites away. Consequently, these Indians are probably more backward and closer to savagery than any other Montana Indians. They are not well organized and have not importuned Congressmen or Senators for special favors. As a result they seem to have been neglected by the Indian Bureau, and the sanitary and economic conditions existing on the Tongue River Reservation are a damning indictment of bureaucratic indifference. This reservation is literally a plague spot and the entire Northern Cheyenne Tribe is rotten with disease. The actual conditions repeatedly have been called to the attention of responsible Indian Bureau officials at Washington, D. C. No attempt whatever has been made to ameliorate the perfectly appalling health situation. In fact, the Indian Bureau refused to finance a Red Cross unit which was established on the reservation, and discontinued the services of a single field matron who was doing splendid work. The inevitable result is that the health situation on the Tongue River Reservation is steadily growing worse and now has reached a stage so unbelievably bad that it constitutes a black blot on the American flag. We have established sanitary zones in the Philippines and the Caribbean, but the Cheyenne Indians are allowed to slowly perish amid almost indescribable dirt, disease, and general degradation. It is almost incredible that responsible officials of any civilized government should permit such disgraceful conditions in this day and age. That such conditions do exist on the Tongue River Reservation reveals the characteristic callousness of the Indian Bureau—or else its total lack of imagination—in dealing with the human factors of health and happiness of its helpless wards. It is very difficult to discuss the situation on Tongue River Reservation in moderate language, but the following facts seem to justify any superlatives that may be called forth by honest indignation:

DEATHS STEADILY EXCEED BIRTH RATE

Since 1916 the death rate on the Tongue River Reservation has exceeded the birth rate by a wide margin. The accompanying table speaks eloquently of official neglect:

Year	Births	Deaths
1916	38	26
1917	73	61
1918	39	[1]112
1919	15	38
1920	21	40
1921	63	64
1922	43	47
1923	48	42
1924	20	22
1925	39	36
1926	27	33
1927	44	62
1928	49	58
Total	519	641

[1] The sudden increase in deaths in 1918 was due to the influenza epidemic. But even after the deaths due to influenza are deducted, the death rate for the past 13 years—that is, the normal reservation death rate—exceeds the births.

Estimates of the tuberculosis rate among the Northern Cheyenne Indians vary from 30 to 60 per cent. Dr. C. A. Kerner, agency physician, informed me that 30 per cent of the Indians had some form of tuberculosis. Espy G. Cate, teacher at the Birney day school, said that at least 35 per cent of the Indians were tubercular. Miss Margaret Moran, formerly field matron at Tongue River Reservation, now stationed on the Crow Reservation, stated that 60 per cent of the Tongue River Indians were infected with tuberculosis. Doctor Krulish, traveling physician for the Indian Bureau, on several occasions has called attention of his superiors to the abnormally high tuberculosis rate among the Tongue River Indians.

No health survey has been made on Tongue River Reservation, but in 1927 there were 35 Indians examined for tuberculosis and positive symptoms were found in 30 cases. This, of course, proves nothing except that the resident physician was not very active in examining Indians.

There are no facilities on the reservation for treating tubercular cases, and no attempt is made to isolate those suffering from the disease in its most virulent stages. Tubercular patients are not admitted to the hospital. Consequently they stay at home and infect other members of the family.

I personally visited homes where men and women, evidently far advanced in tuberculosis—they were coughing and spitting profusely—were crowded in dirty, stinking, poorly lit, 1-room cabins with adults, small children, and babes in arms. During the severe winter weather there is no ventilation whatever in most of these cabins—except what wind blows through chinks in the walls—and in some cases 10 or more persons live in 1-room cabins not to exceed 15 by 20 feet in dimensions. Under these conditions tubercular infection is bound to be widespread. Personally, I believe that a thorough health survey by a competent expert would reveal that more than 75 per cent of these Indians are suffering from some form of tuberculosis. The tragedy is that virtually nothing whatever is being done by the Indian Bureau to combat the fearful ravages of this dreaded disease.

AT LEAST 50 PER CENT OF INDIANS HAVE TRACHOMA

Trachoma is far more prevalent on the Tongue River Reservation than on any other reservation in Montana. Doctor Kerner, agency physician, told me that more than 50 per cent of the Indians are afflicted with this eye disease. Miss Margaret Moran, former field matron, estimated the trachoma at 55 per cent. Espy G. Cate, of the Birney day school, said practically every one had trachoma. He pointed out that when the 56 pupils of his school were examined, trachoma was found in every child. Dr. Paul Mossman, of Raleigh, Mo., chief of the United States Government trachoma hospital, who visited Tongue River Reservation in June, 1928, stated that between 50 and 60 per cent of the Indians have trachoma. Doctor Krulish, traveling medical inspector for the Indian Bureau, stated in 1926 that it was an exception to find a normal eyelid among school children, and that practically all the adults were infected.

A hospital was established at Lame Deer in the fall of 1926, and since then an effort has been made to combat trachoma. The agency physician has endeavored to induce Indians to submit to operations, but so far only about 50 cases have been operated on. Doctor Kerner undoubtedly has done all in his power to check this eye disease, but he has not been given proper cooperation by other agency employees.

So late as August 29, 1928, Doctor Kerner wrote to Superintendent Lohmiller, including a list of more than 100 school children who were infected with trachoma. These children had been examined by Doctor Mossman, who declared they "should be excluded from school this fall or segregated from the other children." Doctor Kerner suggested to Superintendent Lohmiller that all these children be enrolled at some separate school, and that special efforts be made to induce them to submit to operations. This request entailed no great difficulties, and certainly should have been acted on favorably. Superintendent Lohmiller, however, according to Doctor Kerner, contemptuously threw the letter back to him and refused to take the desired action. Doctor Kerner also has made efforts to have a trachoma clinic held on the Tongue River Reservation.

INFANT MORTALITY ABNORMALLY HIGH

Infant mortality also is abnormally high among the Tongue River Indians. In the year 1927, of the 58 deaths, 25 were of infants under 3 years of age. This is more than 200 for every 1,000 live births, or more than three times the rate prevailing among the white children of Montana. Any vital statistician knows the full significance of these figures.

Even more significant is the statement made by Doctor Kerner in a letter to Superintendent Lohmiller, dated September 15, 1928—copy of which is attached—which shows that of the 58 deaths occurring during the year ending June 30, 1928, only 6 of the Indians dying received any medical care whatsoever.

Doctor Kerner wrote as follows:

"Out of the 58 deaths occurring on this reservation, I signed 15 death certificates. Six of these really were under my care, the other 9 were just death-bed calls, practically the balance of the 43 were dead and buried before we received report of the same."

No resident physician should be too severely censored for conditions existing on Tongue River Reservation. The fault rests squarely at the door of the Indian Bureau. There are nearly 600 square miles of territory in the reservation. The country is rough, and the roads are almost impassable for weeks at a time during certain seasons. Moreover, there is, on the average, one physician for every 600 persons in settled parts of the United States. Doctor Kerner has 1,450 persons to look after, scattered over 600 square miles, and everyone of these Indians is a potential patient. It is wholly impossible for any one physician to accomplish much under these conditions.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to submit for the consideration of the Senate the following proposal for a unanimous-consent agreement:

That the Senate proceed at once to vote on the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and immediately after that to vote on Senate Resolution 303 and Senate Resolution 308.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent preferred by the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16714) "making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SURVEY OF INDIAN CONDITIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 303), as follows:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures to be made under authority of Senate Resolution 79, Seventieth Congress, agreed to February 1, 1928, providing for a general survey of the condition of Indians in the United States, is hereby increased from $30,000 to $45,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Has the committee amendment been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the amendment has heretofore been agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 308).

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to that resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator's amendment has been agreed to.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 79, agreed to on February 1, 1928, authorizing the Committee on Indian Affairs to make a general survey of Indian conditions, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the end of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress: Provided, That any officer or employee of the Bureau of Indian Affairs whose official conduct may be under investigation by said committee shall have the right to appear before the committee in person or by counsel and cross-examine any witness appearing before the committee.

THE UNITED STATES AS PARTY DEFENDANT

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13981) to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will it lead to debate?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

Mr. HARRISON. I object to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The clerk will proceed to read the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

SURVEY OF INDIAN CONDITIONS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, under the circumstances, I did not object a few moments ago to the consideration of the two Senate resolutions continuing the investigation of Indian Affairs which were adopted by the Senate as amended. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement of the expenditures heretofore made by the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs and a more detailed statement of the expenditures of a certain investigator, together with three reports upon Indian schools in Arizona made by citizens of that State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The matter referred to will be found at the conclusion of Mr. HAYDEN'S speech.)

Mr. HAYDEN. I desire to direct the particular attention of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to one of the statements which I am filing, which shows that an investigator employed by the subcommittee, Mr. George B. Schwabe, drew not only his salary of $400 a month but that he also received $5 a day as a per diem in lieu of subsistence while he remained at home, which would ordinarily be a violation of law. I do not believe that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate would knowingly approve a charge of that kind, but I direct attention to the fact that this investigator did receive such additional compensation. Any employee of the United States Indian Service, when away from home on official business, may draw a per diem in lieu of subsistence, but if he is at home he is not legally entitled to draw such per diem. However, for the entire four months in which Mr. Schwabe was employed, he drew $5 per diem in lieu of subsistence, although he was not away from his home but a part of the time.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to say to the Senator that the members of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate had the figures presented to them, and were surprised at some of the items disclosed, but they felt—and I say this for the information of the Senator—that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have no right to control the detailed expenses of any committee conducting an investigation; that our duties begin and end with determining the amount of money that may be expended from the contingent fund, and that we can not examine into, find fault, criticize, or prevent the payment of any individual items that the committee may ask for any service whatever.

Mr. HAYDEN. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that a claim like that could not get by the Comptroller General for a moment in the case of an ordinary Government employee.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that if it had been called to my attention, and if the facts are as stated by the Senator from Arizona, it would never have gotten by me. Of course, I have not paid any attention to the expenditure of money by the clerk because that information has not been filed, but I can not conceive that has been done. I want to say to the Senator if he were really interested in the Indian investigation, instead of calling it to the attention of the Senate he would certainly have called it to the attention of the Indian Committee.

I appreciate that the Senator from Arizona has not been for this investigation, and is not now for it, and probably would like to see it stop; and the only result that his statement can have now is to try to do exactly what Mr. Burke, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, has done, namely, to attempt to discredit the committee in every possible way.

I am getting pretty tired of having Mr. Burke come here and try to discredit the members of the committee. He tried to discredit the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE]. That is the usual procedure that is inaugurated every time any of these investigations are started. I am surprised that the Senator from Arizona would do a thing of this kind.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I will frankly say that I am not in favor of the kind of an investigation that has been conducted by the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs up to this time. They have conducted a kangaroo court in a manner which is a disgrace to the United States Senate. I hope that from now on that subcommittee will conduct itself with due order and propriety, and with proper respect for the rights of officials and employees of the Bureau of Indian Affairs whose official conduct is to be investigated.

Since this matter has been brought up in detail, I direct the Senator's attention to the report of the payments to this hired investigator, Mr. George B. Schwabe, during the month of June, 1928. He was paid, for services rendered the Committee on Indian Affairs under Senate Resolution 79, a salary of $400; per diem in lieu of subsistence, 31 days at $5 a day, $155; automobile expenses, Tulsa to Muskogee and return, $13.50. Evidently he was home every day in that month except one day, when he went to Tulsa. He charged the Government of the United States $13.50 for automobile expense in traveling about 60 miles between two Oklahoma cities where a bus line operates every day. A Member of Congress informs me that the bus fare is about $2 each way. Mr. Schwabe charged in his expense account $13.50 for transportation service that by riding a bus he could have obtained for $4. I commend these figures to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I hope that in the future it will not be necessary for that committee to audit claims of this kind.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator, as a member of that committee, that it is becoming apparent that some serious abuses such as the Senator points out are developing in the expenditures by committees of the Senate; and if that continues, it is going to result in some limitations and restrictions being placed upon these committees.

I hope the members of committees will try to exercise the power and right to pass upon these bills without censorship by any committee, with due regard to the Public Treasury. I do not mean to intimate that anything improper has been done in this case, but again and again our attention is being called to what appears to be growing leniency or extravagance in expenditures by committees that are conducting investigations.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to correct the statement that has been made by the Senator from Arizona. He has made the statement that this committee carried on a "kangaroo court." There could not be a statement that was more wholly untrue than that statement made by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is my impression of it.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes; I know; and that is the same statement that was made when we started in the Daugherty investigation. It is the same statement that was made when they started in the Fall investigation. It is the same kind of statement and the same kind of propaganda that has always been made.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me ask the Senator from Montana a question.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say this to the Senator——

Mr. HAYDEN. May I first ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. HAYDEN. In the Daugherty investigation and in the Fall investigation the Senator from Montana conducted his own investigation. He, as a member of the committee, examined the witnesses. He did not hire an attorney or send an investigator out to gather up witnesses and bring them before the committee, and then permit an attorney or an investigator to ask nine-tenths of the questions of the witnesses, did he?

Mr. WHEELER. Now, wait a minute.

Mr. HAYDEN. Did the Senator permit that?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator has asked a dozen questions in one. I am going to answer them, and say this:

In the Daugherty investigation we did hire special counsel to help; we did hire special investigators to get evidence; and we did permit them to ask questions, in some instances, before the committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. But the record will not show that the great majority of the questions asked in the Daugherty investigation were asked by attorneys or investigators, and not by the Senators present.

Mr. WHEELER. Neither will this investigation. The trouble is that the Senator is not informed. Ever since this committee has been holding its hearings here in Washington——

Mr. HAYDEN. I am referring solely to the investigation in the field, conducted by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, well, I am not able to speak about the investigation in the field, because I did not participate in the investigation in the field, and do not know what went on there.

Mr. HAYDEN. The record made in the printed hearings shows for itself that my statement is correct.

Mr. WHEELER. But when the Senator says that it was a "kangaroo court," there is not any truth in that statement, and it is not fair for the Senator to get up and make it.

I am not the chairman of this committee. I perhaps would not have conducted the hearings as the chairman has. I do not know anything about these expenditures that have been made; but it is inconceivable to me that they should have been permitted to go on if what the Senator has stated is correct. If they have been paying out money under such circumstances that it should not have been paid out, and if an investigator of the Indian Affairs Committee has been defrauding the Government, I want to say to the Senator from Arizona that I shall be the first one to ask that anybody who has been misappropriating Government funds, whether he is working as an employee of the Indian Affairs Committee or of any other committee, shall be prosecuted criminally for his actions. But if the Senator was so much interested in the thing, why did he not come, as a member of the Indian Affairs Committee, himself——

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not a member of that committee.

Mr. WHEELER (continuing). And present it to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the chairman of the committee?

I have confidence and faith in the Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the committee, and I know that he would not permit anything to go on that was not proper; but I am informed by the Senator from North Dakota that as a matter of fact these charges that have been referred to by the Senator were not made while this man was at home, but while he was away from home.

Mr. HAYDEN. The report does not show it.

Mr. WHEELER. But of course the trouble with the Senator is that apparently he is taking just the kind of thing that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs have been circulating around ever since this committee started. They have been trying to stop the investigation from its very inception.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the Senator yield to me in my own time?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. I will say that the investigation has not been stopped. The continuing resolution has been passed by the Senate. Fifteen thousand dollars has been allowed from the contingent fund to continue this work. I have directed the attention of the Senate to these matters in the sincere hope that from now on the Committee on Indian Affairs will be fair and just to those who are under investigation, and will not waste the public funds in the employment of investigators. My object has been accomplished, because I am sure that the Senator from Montana or the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, once their attention has been directed to such matters, will not permit any irregularities in the future.

Mr. WHEELER. I assure the Senator that from now on this investigation into the Bureau of Indian Affairs will be properly carried on, and that there will not be any money spent unless it is spent in accordance with the provisions of law. As I say, I am not the chairman of the committee, and I had nothing at all to do with the expenditures. I have entire confidence in the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the chairman of the committee, and of course, as in all matters of that kind, the chairman handles them. I regret, however, that the Senator from Arizona has seen fit to do this, because, as I say, there has been a studied effort on the part of the Indian commissioner to try to discredit this committee, just exactly as there was a studied effort to discredit the Fall committee, and just exactly as there was a studied effort to discredit the Daugherty committee, of which the Senator's colleague [Mr. ASHURST] was a member. They went around and tried to dig up everything they possibly could upon every member of the committee. They went out and prosecuted pretty nearly every witness who came before the committee. They went out and tried to besmirch his character; and what did they do in this case?

Commissioner Burke came before the committee and made a charge, if you please, which, if true, would have subjected the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE] to a criminal prosecution. We immediately stopped the investigation to investigate that charge, and found that there was not one scintilla of truth in it. I do not think the Senator from Arizona wants to be a party to going to the extent of trying to discredit this commitee just because of the fact——

Mr. HAYDEN. Upon the contrary, Mr. President, I have every confidence in the world in members of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, just as I have great confidence in the author of the resolution, authorizing the investigation, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. All of these Senators, if they attend to the business themselves, will bring proper and correct results to the Senate. When Senators delegate their authority to others, and allow them to expend the public funds in making junkets to out-of-the-way corners of the United States without any direct supervision, the result is not a fair investigation. Whatever the Senators look at themselves will be properly evaluated and whatever report they may make to the Senate will undoubtedly be fair and just. But I do object to the way the investigation in the field has been conducted in the past, and I am sure, after what I have said, that from now on the investigation will be properly conducted. My entire object will, therefore, be accomplished.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Arizona says "in the past." I object to that, because, as far as I know anything about it, the investigation has been conducted fairly and honestly ever since it has been going on in the city of Washington. What took place when they were out in the West I do not know, because I was not there.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the Senator from Montana will permit me, I have made no criticism of the conduct of the investigation by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs here in the committee room in Washington. My whole objection has been directed to the field investigations as conducted in various parts of the United States. For that reason I have inserted in the RECORD, as has my colleague, the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], statements by some of the very best and most responsible people in Arizona who have made personal inspections of a number of Indian schools as a result of these charges, and who have answered the charges by a calm statement of the facts. The men and women who have signed these reports are just as jealous of their integrity and their good names as any Senator here to-day. They have looked into the Indian schools and reservations to answer the outrageous charges that have been made by the investigators of the subcommittee in the field. Let me repeat that it is to the field investigation that my complaint is directed.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask what investigator has made outrageous charges against any Indian school down there. Let me get that. I have not heard of it. No investigator has told me anything about any school down in Arizona. As I say, I was not a member of the committee. I think the Senator perhaps is confusing what somebody outside of the committee is doing with what is going on in the committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. There has been broadcast a mass of misinformation that I am certain was entirely inspired from some such source.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, well, the Senator is entirely wrong about it. The Senator reads an article, possibly, in some magazine, and immediately thinks that is inspired by the Committee on Indian Affairs. That is not so. Articles have been written by people not connected with the Indian Affairs Committee in any way, shape, or form, and for which the Indian Affairs Committee is in no wise responsible. So far as I am concerned, I have refused to issue any statement in connection with what has been going on, or to give out any statement making any comment upon the evidence in the case, because I wanted first to hear the evidence myself; and the only reason why I wanted to have this investigation go on was so that we could check up and ascertain the truth or the falsity of the statements that have been made by some of these people who are constantly coming before the Indian Affairs Committee and saying that there is corruption and graft, and children are being starved, and everything of that kind. If I were in the place of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I should most assuredly want the investigation to go on.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the speaker at least to look this way once in a while?

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator can not hear me without my looking at him, I will talk louder.

Mr. WARREN. I should like the Senator to look me in the face once in a while.

Mr. WHEELER. All right; I yield the floor.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point certain papers relating to the matters to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF INVESTIGATION OF THE UNITED STATES INDIAN SCHOOL AT PHOENIX, ARIZ.

After a personal inspection and investigation we find the following:

GENERAL CONDITIONS AND OBSERVATIONS

After careful investigation of the various departments of the school and talking with pupils, teachers, employees, and officers, we found that the general conditions relating to the sanitation and general cleanliness, food, health, and discipline of the pupils to be of the highest order. The large group of children, numbering nearly 1,000 boys and girls ranging in age from 7 to 20 years, are apparently well clothed and present an appearance which seemed to us to indicate extreme good health and happiness. We saw nearly every pupil of the school either indoors, engaged in work, interested in their organized play and athletic practice, or in military formation, or as they marched into the dining room for their meals. Throughout the school the children seemed to be happy and content.

By consulting records in the administration building of the school we found that entry of the children in the school is not compulsory. A file maintained for each child registered contained a complete record of the child's time spent in school; among other things each file contained an application blank which had been filled out and signed by the parents, guardian, or next of kin in the presence of witnesses. This blank states, "I do hereby voluntarily consent and agree to enrollment in said school for a period of (not less than three) years, and also obligate myself to abide by the rules and regulations for Indian schools."

The parents and other relations are permitted to visit the children in the Phoenix school at any time they may desire. Many Indians come each week to this school to visit their children; particularly on Saturday and Sunday many families of Indians are to be found camping on the school grounds and visiting with their children.

In talking with the old father of one of the boys who had come to the school at the time of our visit, we learned that both he and the boy's mother were very glad to have their child in school, and that they felt he was much better off in the Phoenix school than at home or elsewhere. This particular boy had run away from school and gone home, saying he was lonesome. The father had solicited the aid of an Indian policeman, brought the boy back, and reentered him in the school.

The Phoenix Indian School is located in a fairly thickly populated district, with stores, dwellings, service stations, etc., immediately adjoining it. Inquiry at a near-by drug store and a service station regarding any knowledge of complaints by the students at the school or rumor of ill-treatment of children brought only expressions of surprise that such a thing could ever have been thought of. Those talked to had never heard any such complaints.

While we were able to secure much valuable information from pupils and employees of the school, also from the citizens who have resided in the vicinity of the school for many years, we give credence to the unbiased statement made to us in an interview with Mr. C. L. Phillips, manager of the Mission Ranch Dairy, the largest modern dairy in the State of Arizona. Mr. Phillips was connected with the Phoenix Indian School as a teacher of agriculture and manager of the gardens, dairy, and other agricultural departments of the school for eight years. He left the employ of the Indian school on January 1, 1928. Mr. Phillips stated that in all of his experience he had not seen or heard of any complaint as to the mistreatment of any pupil of the school; no severe physical punishment had been administered to any pupil, and none of the pupils had ever complained to him of food conditions, either as to lack of sufficient food being served or as to the manner of preparation of the meals. All of the milk and vegetables, eggs, and other products of the farm are used exclusively in preparing meals for the children of the school, according to Mr. Phillips, and he further added that during the time of his employment by the school none of these products were either sold to or used by any employee or officer of the school.

Our own observation covering the period of years is that both the boys and girls of the school are much interested in their bands and athletic teams and that the children are enthusiastically happy in their life at the school.

We do not believe that the pupils of the school could be better fed and cared for with the present available funds which are allotted for each pupil during the fiscal year.

REGARDING HEALTH

We found every possible precaution taken for the prevention of disease and for the care of the sick. Two physicians and several graduate nurses are in constant attendance at the Phoenix school and the tuberculosis sanatorium, which is conducted in connection with the school. The physicians and nurses not only take care of the children who may be sent to the hospital, but keep in close touch with all of the children in the school through contact with the teachers in the classrooms, matrons in the dormitories, and the heads of various departments of the school. In order to keep close watch on the health of the children, they are encouraged to consult freely with the doctors and nurses. The records of the hospital show that an average of from two to three hundred calls have been made each week during the present school year, either for consultation or medical services in addition to the actual number of cases which were cared for by the hospital.

The hospital was found to be spotlessly clean, the bed linen and floors throughout being in the best of condition on our visit. The operating room, pharmacist laboratory, dental-room office, and all departments of the hospital were very satisfactory.

In interviewing Dr. Fred Loe, who has been in charge of the school hospital for the past three years, and in looking over the records of the hospital departments, we find that each child attending the school is given a thorough physical examination upon entering the school and also at the beginning of the second semester. We find that, owing to the prevalence of influenza in the school (as a part of the general epidemic throughout Arizona and the western United States) and the illness of Doctor Loe, the examinations for the second semester have not been made this year. These physical examinations were made on all the pupils in the school at the beginning of the fall term, however, and are kept as a part of the hospital records, so as to be immediately available for reference should the pupil thereafter be sent to the hospital for any ailment. The examinations include records of the conditions found in the eyes, ears, teeth, throat, skin, lungs, heart, the weight and general condition of the pupil. Any abnormalities which will interfere with the general health or be dangerous to other pupils, such as decayed teeth, trachoma, skin diseases, etc., are corrected before the pupil enters school. Thereafter the pupils are weighed at monthly intervals and given inspection by teachers. Should the pupil lose weight or fail to gain weight in normal manner, or should any illness develop, the pupil is referred promptly to the hospital department for investigation. The scope of this work may be judged from the fact that during the week prior to our inspection 385 pupils were so referred for ailments or examination, not including those ill enough to be regularly entered as hospital patients.

The hospital records are not the records of a class A standardized hospital, because the personnel allowed the hospital can not keep such records. However, the records contain all the essential information, were neat and accurate, filed where they could be readily accessible, and will compare favorably with the records of the majority of civilian hospitals of the same size.

While the personnel of the hospital department is not sufficient for the work required of them, we find that the work is being done in a very creditable manner. One physician and two nurses are not sufficient for the 40-bed hospital, caring for all kinds of medical and surgical cases, attending from 200 to 400 patients a week in the outpatient department, making physical examinations on a thousand pupils twice a year, and exercising sanitary supervision over kitchen and dairy. The hospital does not have a night nurse, although one of the day nurses sleeps where she is on call during the night for any emergency. In performing surgical work Doctor Loe is assisted by Dr. A. J. Wheeler, of the East Farm Sanatorium, located a mile and a half east of the school. Doctor Loe also assists Doctor Wheeler in such surgical work as is done at the sanatorium. An average of more than one surgical operation a day is thus performed. During one 5-month period we found 180 general anæsthetics had been administered for surgical operations.

According to Doctor Loe, and the records of the hospital department, pupils do not contract tuberculosis at the school, but contract it on the reservations, and it is detected when they enter the school and have physical examination. Sometimes pupils with an arrested tuberculosis case enter the school, and during the school term the disease becomes active again. Whenever they are found to have active tuberculosis, either at the time of the entrance examination or at any time during the school year, they are transferred immediately to the sanatorium .The number of cases discovered in pupils just entering the school or returning to the school in the fall after a summer on the reservation are many times more numerous than those breaking down during the school term.

A fact likely to be overlooked is that a return of activity in an arrested tuberculosis case is very likely to occur at the age of life when these pupils are in school, 12 to 20 years, regardless of conditions of life. Our observation would lead us to believe that the likelihood of a breakdown is much less under the conditions of life at the school than on the reservation. However, at the Phoenix school no pupil with active tuberculosis is kept in school, but is transferred to the sanatorium, where conditions are the best possible and where the child will have every chance to recover.

During the school year of 1927-28, according to the records of the hospital, there were 87 cases of pneumonia, from which no deaths resulted. These pneumonia patients were cared for in the school hospital, where each pupil was kept for two weeks convalescing after the crisis. According to Doctor Loe, after release from the school hospital, each of these pneumonia patients was sent to the sanatorium for rest and observation for a short time. Eighty-five cases of trachoma are now being treated in the school, but no new cases have developed during the present school year. Acute cases of trachoma are assigned to the hospital and segregated. All of the pupils who are now being treated for trachoma have separate towels, and are kept under close observation.

On account of his own ill health during the last two months, Doctor Loe has not been devoting his full time to the work in the school and Dr. A. J. Wheeler was personally in charge of the medical work at the school during this period. In interviewing Doctor Wheeler and verifying his statement by the hospital records, we found that during the recent epidemic of influenza, 452 children were given treatment and were kept in bed until fully recovered. At one time during the epidemic approximately 200 pupils were in bed, the others being sick at different periods during December and January. This number of influenza cases was cared for among the approximate 960 pupils of the school. In addition to this number, 45 in the tuberculosis sanatorium were also cared for with attacks of influenza.

Out of the total of 497 cases of influenza only one pupil developed pneumonia; that pupil is now in the sanatorium convalescing. There were no deaths as a result of the epidemic.

At the present time we found approximately 15 cases of influenza with which pupils are confined to their beds in the hospital. Ten or twelve of the smaller girls were also being cared for by doctors and nurses who have confined them to their beds in the girls' dormitory on account of all the beds in the hospital being occupied.

Food for the children in the hospital is prepared in a special hospital kitchen which we found to be thoroughly sanitary and well equipped. The meals for the hospital patients are prepared and served strictly under the direction of the doctors and nurses.

In interviewing Miss Helen McLemore and Miss Darline Loe, two graduate nurses at the hospital, we were advised that all of the food served patients confined to beds in the dormitories, as well as the hospital, is prepared and served under their jurisdiction.

FOOD

In talking with children and Indian employees of the school we did not hear a single complaint as to meals, kind of food supplied, or the manner in which it was prepared. The boys and girls apparently have plenty of food to eat, and we were advised that each child is given all he wants to eat of the plain foods.

We found that both the boys and girls march to their meals in military formation, and that each company occupies a group of tables, eight children seated at a table. Company officers are placed in charge of each group of children, with the corporal at each table. New waiters are appointed each week from the company by its captain. Before the children march into the dining room food is served family style on each table, and after being seated at the table an officer serves each pupil and then asks that an additional supply of bread, potatoes, meat, and whatever else may be desired be brought from the kitchen. If any pupil asks his officer for more food, it is brought immediately.

Doctor Loe exercises general supervision over the quality of food served in the general dining room, as well as over that served at the hospital. He makes it a practice to eat a meal at least once a month in the general dining room in order to judge from personal observation the quality of the meal. A copy of the menu for the week during which this inspection was made is attached, and we are assured that this is a fair sample of the food served at this school. One of us visited the dining room and kitchen after the meal was over, while the tables were being cleared and dishes washed. Numerous uneaten portions of bread and other food could be seen as evidence that there was no lack of quantity. Dishes were washed in an automatic washer with live steam, coming out clean and undoubtedly sterilized. Tables were being scrubbed with stiff brushes and cleansing powder; tables are covered with linoleum cemented upon wood.

We inspected the kitchen, bakery, warehouses, and cold-storage plant. We found them to be absolutely clean. Fruits and vegetables, all of very good quality, were stored in the large cold-storage warehouses; fresh meat, stamped as being inspected and certified under Government supervision, was hung in a large separate compartment of the cold-storage plant.

In interviewing Mrs. Jennie Howard, who has been in the employ of the school for 14 years, spending the last 5 years in charge of the kitchen, we were advised that she orders from 400 to 500 pounds of fresh meat daily, and that this is delivered each day by the Arizona Packing Co. She personally inspects all of the meat delivered, and during the last few years has never had occasion to reject any meat, although she stated that she was authorized to reject anything which was not strictly first class. She said that five years ago, when she first took charge of the kitchen, she had on a few occasions rejected meat.

Mrs. Howard stated that she had never used, and had never been required to use, any food, flour, corn meal, meats, vegetables, or anything else which had been spoiled or which might be considered unfit for consumption.

Mrs. Ada Dessau, who is in charge of the warehouses containing foodstuffs, both cold storage and dry storage, stated that they had received consignments of food which was unfit for use on a few occasions during the term of her employment. She stated that during the present school year a shipment of corn meal had arrived containing weevils, and that the entire lot had been delivered to the Agricultural Department for use as chicken feed. Mrs. Dessau advised that the feeding of the corn meal to the chickens did not deprive the children of food, as there is a large quantity of vegetables provided from the school's garden, as well as milk from the dairy, eggs from the poultry department, all of which are used in feeding the pupils.

We found potatoes, raisins, prunes, grapefruit, bacon, flour, oatmeal, sirup, and many other foodstuffs in the warehouses, all being in good condition and all of good eatable quality.

Visiting the dairy, we found that the school is milking 56 head of very good Holstein cows, many of which are registered purebred stock. At the present time 170 gallons of milk is being produced daily, and we were advised by employees and pupils that all of the milk is used in the hospital and dining room as food for the children. According to records for the year 1928, 48 cows in the herd produced an average of 9,250 pounds of milk per cow.

The sanitary conditions at the dairy will compare favorably with those of any dairy supplying Grade A milk to the city of Phoenix. The Indian school claims to have the most sanitary dairy in the valley, and we are not prepared to dispute this.

The dairy is not screened, and this is the only fault to be found with it. The cows are milked upon a slightly raised cement floor, after being brushed and cleansed in the runways which approach the milking stalls. Just behind the cement platforms is a gutter into which urine and feces falls. This is washed out with hose after each milking. Cows are milked with milking machines; they were inspected during afternoon milking period and teats and udders were found clean. Stripping is done by hand by Indian students. They are dressed in white cotton trousers and jackets while milking.

Boiler furnishes hot water and steam at 50 pounds pressure twice daily. Milk is aerated and cooled immediately by modern apparatus. The milk cans are washed with cold water, then hot water, finally with live steam; then placed behind wire screens so that the sun will shine into them. Dairy is superintended by Mr. Hendrix, who gives every evidence of knowing his business and in taking pride in accomplishing his work in the most modern and sanitary manner. We could make no suggestions for improving the sanitary surroundings or handling of the milk, although Mr. Hendrix seemed anxious to have these, if we had any to make.

This dairy herd is tuberculin tested and certified to be free from tuberculosis. (There is some abortus infection in the herd, as there is in every dairy herd in the Salt River Valley, but so far there is no evidence that this has resulted in any human infection in the school.)

The pupils are fed whole milk and butter is not served.

In our visit to the agricultural department we found a large quantity of vegetables are produced each year, and we were advised that all of these vegetables, as well as grapes, watermelons, and eggs and milk produced are used in the dining room which takes care of the pupils of the school.

DISCIPLINE

We found the children throughout the school very well behaved and heard no complaints from any pupil or from any other source as to cruelty or mistreatment. In the classrooms each teacher has charge of discipline as well as instruction of the pupils; in the dormitories a matron is constantly in touch with the children. We found everything in the dormitories, as well as in the classrooms and the entire grounds surrounding the school, to be in orderly condition. In the various shops and departments, including the laundry, dairy, printing office, etc., the employees in charge of such shop or department are in control of the discipline of the pupils who may be assigned to them.

According to regulations, any unruly child is first sent to the principal or head of the department in which the child is engaged. In turn the principal is to refer the child to the chief disciplinarian, if such action should become necessary.

In conferring with Jacob Duran, a full-blood Indian of the Pueblo Tribe, who is the chief disciplinarian of the school, we learned quite frankly the troubles of both boys and girls in school, as well as the manner of settlement of the children's difficulties by the school.

Mr. Duran advised us that he had attended the Indian schools at Santa Fe, Albuquerque, and Haskell as a boy, and that he has been working at the Phoenix Indian School for the last 10 years. He advised that the principal difficulty experienced with the pupils of the school when they become unruly would be the trait of stubbornness, which is to a greater or less degree in most Indians. His treatment, through persuasion and kindness, has consistently proven a success in influencing the children to do right, according to Duran's statement to us. Not one child has been sent to the chief disciplinarian by either teacher, principal, or head of departments during the present school year. Duran advised that he had heard of ill treatment of Indians since he was born, but that he had never seen or known of any severe punishment being given the boys and girls in any Indian school in all of his experience, and that he has personally given no physical punishment to the children of the school during the present school year in Phoenix.

Mr. Duran stated that the principal matters which had required his attention during the present school year have been violations of rules and regulations. He stated that the principal rule which is violated is boys going to town, leaving the school grounds and going to athletic games without first obtaining permission. His method of punishment for this violation is to deprive the pupil of certain privileges, such as refusing permission to attend football games, etc., for a certain period. Such action in disciplining the pupils apparently accomplishes the desired results, according to the testimony of many pupils and employees of the school.

Mr. Duran advised that the parents who visit the school, as well as the children attending the Phoenix school, are very happy and contented. He stated that he has seen only one fight between Indian boys in the last 10 years, and then the two participants were so ashamed that they ran away from school instead of facing their fellow pupils.

Keeping the children busy through their work in classrooms, in the industries and farms of the school, and their athletic activities is the chief thing which keeps the children satisfied, in the opinion of Mr. Duran.

Lewis, who is in charge of the printing office of the school, a full-blood Indian of the Pima Tribe, has spent 20 years in the school as a pupil and more recently as an employee. He advises us that the children of the Poenix Indian School are well satisfied with their food, clothing, and their treatment in all departments of the school.

We hereby certify that the above findings are a statement of the true conditions which now exist in the United States Indian school at Phoenix.

Respectfully submitted.

CITIZEN COMMITTEE OF SURVEY OF INDIAN BOARDING SCHOOLS

KINGMAN, ARIZ., February 13, 1929.

Re Circular No. 2546, E. B. Meritt, assistant commissioner.

To Senate Indian Committee, House Indian Committee, Congressional Delegation, Office of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIRS: Acting under and in accordance with instructions in the above captioned, under date of February 2, 1929, Supt. F. T. Mann, of the Truxton Canyon Indian School at Valentine, Ariz., requested Mr. Allen E. Ware, manager of Tarr, McComb & Ware Commercial Co., Kingman, Ariz., to select a suitable committee of which he would be chairman, to examine into the affairs of said school, and to report thereon. Mr. Ware appointed the following:

Mrs. Nelle E. Clack, former county superintendent of schools; Miss Letetia B. Mould, Red Cross nurse in charge of schools in Mohave County; H. L. Horner, assistant manager, the Arizona Central Bank, Kingman, Ariz.; who beg to submit the following:

This committee left Kingman by automobile at 10.10 a. m., and arrived at Valentine at 11.10 a. m. on the above date, the distance being approximately 35 miles.

First, believing that your office would appreciate having (though not asked for in above-mentioned circular) complete information as to the various buildings and equipment, and condition of same, in addition to treatment of the inmates or attendants. This, therefore, is embodied in the report.

There are at this time approximately 220 children in daily attendance—a greater number of boys than girls. Ages running from about 6 to 19 years. There is one Albino boy in the school, in age about 18 years, decided blond, light hair, and blue eyes. We believe Albinos are rare among the Indians. He looks robust and strong, and of average intelligence. All children appear to be healthy, and in a general way compare very favorably with white children in attendance at public schools. There are only four cases of sickness at the present time, three girls and one boy, all of which are in the hospital and receiving good treatment. One boy and one girl afflicted with tuberculosis, the other cases minor ailments, not serious.

All children appear contented and happy and there is no appearance of ill-treatment or abuse. Playgrounds nd equipment apparently ample and in good condition, and in use daily, giving sufficient exercise.

We attended mess at noon in the general dining room, and while the food served was of the so-called "coarse" or "heavy" variety, it was good in quality, wholesome, well cooked and well served, and ample in quantity. Children marched into dining room in an orderly manner, stood at their respective places, and in unison asked blessing before being seated. This being so well done shows it to be the custom. All children were clothed properly and well, and though clothing was simple and inexpensive in texture, was clean and warm. Also each child has the regulation change of clothing, ample for needs, and kept in good repair.

In the dormitory the sexes are separated, each occupying a wing of the building and both upper and lower floors. With one or two exceptions in the case of very small children each child has a separate bed, linens clean and coverings ample. Rooms are large, well ventilated, and with good sunlight. We were informed by the employee in charge that fire drill was held frequently at unexpected intervals, and, while the building is not by any means fireproof, it can be emptied quickly, if necessary, by means of the exits and metal-covered chutes or slides from the upper floor to the ground.

The hospital, a frame, 1-story, substantial structure, with a registered nurse in charge of rooms, is in charge of Doctor Leeds, the school physician, whom we believe to be thoroughly capable and efficient. There are 16 beds, and in addition to the regular and necessary equipment of a hospital of the kind and size, has a small dining room and kitchen, both of which are clean and well kept and ample in size. However, if we may be permitted to make a recommendation, it would be that a separate and distinct building be erected for the care of tubercular patients. As noted previously herein, there are two cases of tuberculosis in the same building and room with other patients at this time. This condition we believe should not be permitted to continue any longer than it would take to make a transfer or allotment of the necessary funds to remedy the existing condition.

For your further information, if your present records at hand do not show it, the following tribes are represented by children in attendance: Wallapai, Supai, Hopi, Navaho, Apache, Pima, and Papago, Wallapai, we believe, predominating.

Summing up, we consider conditions at this school to be very good; children not mistreated in any way, generally healthy and happy, well provided for as to food, clothing, housing, schooling, medical attention, and amusement.

PHYSICAL STRUCTURE OF SCHOOL

Houses for both superintendent and employees are of brick and wood construction, and though small are probably ample and appear to be in good condition both inside and out.

School: Brick construction, with, in addition to classrooms, a good-sized and well-constructed auditorium, with stage, etc. The classrooms, however, seem to be crowded to capacity, but in fairly good shape as to lighting and ventilation. There are two new wings or additions just about finished, containing wash rooms, sanitary toilets, baths, lockers, etc., strictly modern and up to date in every way; one for the boys and one for girls. These additions will be ready for occupancy in a short time.

Laundry: Brick building; old, but clean. Capacity, one washer only. This we beleive too small and incomplete for present requirements.

Hospital: Frame, 1-story structure; apparently quite new. Capacity, 16 beds. Well equipped as to other necessaries. Immaculate and probably ample, with the exception, as previously noted herein, that patients with contagious diseases are placed in the same rooms with the noncontagious. This condition should not be.

Warehouse: Brick building, in good condition, both as to building and contents. Apparently inadequate, however, as some stock is carried in basement or storeroom of another building. As this extra stock consists principally of foodstuffs and is located closer to kitchen, this may be done for convenience. Stock is in good condition.

Mess hall and kitchen: Equipment plain and substantial and in good condition, but just to its full capacity. Kitchen not fully equipped—refrigeration inadequate for protection and preservation of foods. Additional equipment badly needed for wholesome and efficient handling.

Domestic science: Immaculately clean and apparently ample for present needs.

Manual training: Seventy-six pupils now in daily attendance; each class receives 1½ hours instruction per day. This department only started about three months ago and doing wonderful work with the present equipment. Pupils seem very apt and take delight in this class of work and instruction. With more equipment, they can turn out some really fine products.

Sewing room: Ample in size, but in bad location for this class of work, being too dark and not well ventilated; very hard on the eyes.

Dormitory: Just about to capacity. Good ventilation and plenty of sunlight. Individual beds; very clean and sufficient bedding. Rooms in need of minor repairs, however; principally plastering. Metal ceilings should be substituted for plaster.

Water: Pumped from wells to tank of 30,000 gallons capacity located on hillside above property. Tank not covered or protected. Quality of water apparently good, however.

Pumping plant: Not good either as to building or equipment. We are informed, however, that a small appropriation will soon be available with which to increase this to greater capacity and, in addition, to make of it a central power and heating plant. This badly needed.

Dairy: Nine cows, seven of which are now milking and producing about 21 gallons of milk daily. In addition 5 gallons per day purchased from an adjacent ranch. This supply, however, we do not believe to be sufficient for needs and should be increased. In addition to the cows, there are two 2-year-old and five 1-year-old heifers, four calves, and one bull, Holstein stock. Milking is done in the barn which is an old structure, unsightly and unsanitary, and needs remedying badly. There are also about 25 or more hogs and young pigs. Too many to supply from the tables, and as feed is quite expensive, believe some should be sold.

Poultry: Approximately 300 white leghorns—excellent-looking stock. Producing an average of about 10 dozen eggs per day.

Farm: About 7 or 8 acres under cultivation. Corn, squash, tomatoes, carrots, spinach, etc. Last year produced about 20,000 pounds of tomatoes. With proper equipment and irrigation could be made more productive.

Office: Office in good order, books and records appear to be well kept. Room apparently too small for requirements, however, and there should be a vault for storing records. As a preventive against loss by fire, a vault of concrete could be added at small cost. Records for last fiscal year show a total cost (exclusive of superintendent's salary, repairs, and transportation) of $49,343.88, and during that time an average daily attendance of just about 200, making the cost per capita a little under $250, which, considering location, equipment, and facilities, we consider quite low, and bespeaks efficient management.

Employees: Superintendent Mann we believe to be thoroughly capable and efficient, honest and fair both with employees and attendants, firm but just. The type who probably could and would use harsh measures if made necessary, but one with whom those measures never become necessary. All employees appear capable, efficient, and happy in their work and surroundings, and well satisfied.

Not having been asked to make recommendations, we trust we have not overstepped the bounds. However, could they be complied with, we believe it would mean increased efficiency and lowered costs.

Hoping the information supplied herewith will be of service, and assuring you it has been our pleasure to serve you, we are,

Very sincerely,

ALLEN E. WARE,

REPORT OF INSPECTION, FORT MOHAVE INDIAN SCHOOL, BY ALLEN E. WARE, C. J. WALTERS, MRS. G. H. CLACK, AND LEROY ROOT, FEBRUARY 16, 1929

In conformity with circular No. 2546, issued by the Office of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, dated February 2, 1929, and at the invitation of Supt. W. E. Thackery, of the Fort Mohave Indian School, the undersigned citizens of Kingman, Mohave County, Ariz., visited the said school and investigated existing conditions there.

We found that all Indian school children were properly fed. The food was of good quality and sufficient. The daily menus indicated a considerable variety. More eggs and milk would be desirable.

We found that all children were adequately and comfortably clothed and housed. The dormitories are in need of repairs.

We found that the children received all needed medical attention. The hospital building should be larger.

We learned of no cruel punishments of children. The discipline appeared excellent and the children contented, happy, and interested in their work. Some of the school work showed marked ability.

The preceding four paragraphs answer in particular the questions asked in the circular letter. We feel justified, however, in making further comment relative to conditions.

In the school there are approximately 275 pupils, representing 15 different Indian tribes, i. e., Mohave, Navajo, Papago, Chimejuevis, Paiute, Hava-supai, Pueblo, Sioux, Mission, Apache, Pima, Shoshone, Cherokee, Maricopa, and Mono (Digger). This intermingling is undoubtedly having a most desirable effect.

The main school building and assembly hall is in good condition, but inadequate in room. Two rooms in dormitory buildings are used for school purposes. This is inconvenient and undoubtedly detracts from the school efficiency.

The warehouse contains a reasonable stock of food supplies of good quality, as well as a quantity of necessary clothing. The building, however, is an old "adobe" with crumbling walls. Its roof is leaky and daylight can be seen through it in many places. It is, therefore, impossible to keep the food and clothing free from dust.

The kitchen and dining room are very good and are exceptionally clean and sanitary. A new refrigeration plant and a bakery are now building, being removed from the basement of the kitchen and dining hall.

The laundry is modern, both building and equipment.

The power plant is well housed, in excellent condition, and apparently adequate for present needs.

The employees' quarters are generally comfortable, although many of them are in old "adobe" buildings and have a rather unsightly exterior appearance. The interiors are much more inviting.

One of the two elevated water-storage tanks giving pressure to the mains, although roofed, is open entirely around underneath the eaves. A new tank is needed. The other tank appears in good condition.

The bathing conditions are inadequate, but we are told an appropriation has been made to adjust this situation.

A dairy herd of 25 cows belongs to the school, 12 of which are being milked, furnishing about 25 gallons per day. At least 10 more milch cows should be added to the herd to bring the daily menu to a proper balance.

No chickens except a very few, whose eggs are used at the hospital, are on the farm. Sufficient chickens should be added to the farm stock. Eggs are needed for their food value.

The farm is in rather poor condition at this time due to the channel of the Colorado River changing and the pumps being unable to deliver water to the land at a time when it was most vitally needed during the past season. This is the first time that there has been a shortage of water from this cause. The situation is easily remedied. Instead of taking water directly from the stream flow wells should be sunk. Wells driven or bored to a considerable depth below the level of the river will furnish an adequate supply of water. Such wells have been frequently tested, with satisfactory results. We are informed that the school now has a well 365 feet deep, 12 inches in diameter, which has been severely tested, with gratifying results. With an assured supply of water for irrigation needs, chickens and more cows could be kept and eggs and milk furnished at an economical cost. The gardens would furnish an adequate supply of vegetables at low cost over an extraordinary long season, due to the temperate climate. A large variety should also be grown. The hogs were in excellent condition.

In the matter of housing, we found the dormitories greatly in need of repairs. The roofs are in bad condition and there is a great need of paint and a general overhauling to put them in real serviceable condition. They are kept clean and sanitary, however, so far as their existing condition will permit. The buildings generally are far below the standard buildings at other Indian schools of which we have acquaintance. Because of this condition the school has rather a run-down appearance. We do not believe this condition is due to the school superintendency or the school employees. They appear to be making the best of what they have to do with. There is apparent ability on the part of all employees. The forlorn appearance is due, as we see it, to inadequate appropriations by the Government to construct and maintain the buildings up to the usual governmental standards. An appropriation is needed to place the buildings in repair and to construct new ones necessary to meet the demands of the schools. If this were done, the Fort Mohave Indian school under an intelligent and able superintendency, as it now has, with a corps of loyal employees, such as it now possesses, would be one of the most economically conducted schools in the country. It is very evident that the Government is not as adequately supporting this school as it is many others. An appropriation of $50,000 over a period of two years would ultimately make this school compare favorably with other schools.

We make these comments, not in a spirit of criticism but in a sincere effort to correct a condition which detracts from the school standard, provokes criticism of the Indian Department, and handicaps the school employees.

Very respectfully submitted.

ALLEN E. WARE.
C. J. WALTERS.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The Chair, as in executive session, transmits certain nominations and treaties for proper reference.

Mr. GOFF, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported executive nominations, which were placed on the Executive Calendar.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 2, insert a subhead "Senate"——

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Was unanimous consent given to dispense with the reading of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not. The clerk is reading the first amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. Insert a subhead "Senate" and the following:

To pay William A. Folger for extra and expert services rendered the Committee on Pensions during the second session of the Seventieth Congress as assistant clerk to said committee, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, fiscal year 1929, $1,200——

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	Kendrick	Smith
Barkley	Edwards	Keyes	Smoot
Bayard	Fess	King	Steck
Bingham	Fletcher	McKellar	Steiwer
Black	Frazier	McMaster	Stephens
Blaine	George	Mayfield	Swanson
Blease	Gerry	Metcalf	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Glass	Moses	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Glenn	Neely	Trammell
Broussard	Goff	Norbeck	Tydings
Bruce	Gould	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Hale	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Harris	Pine	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Harrison	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Couzens	Hawes	Robinson, Ark.	Waterman
Curtis	Hayden	Sackett	Watson
Dale	Heflin	Sheppard	Wheeler
Deneen	Johnson	Shortridge
Dill	Jones	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a situation has arisen which endangers the passage of both the deficiency appropriation bills. A number of amendments were inserted in the Senate to the bill, H. R. 15848, and, conference agreement having been reached touching the provisions of those amendments in the body at the other end of the Capitol, many provisions in the deficiency bill referred to were incorporated in the pending bill, the effect of which was to defeat final disposition of the deficiency bill, H. R. 15848.

The following appears on page 175:

Title III—Items transferred from H. R. 15848, Seventieth Congress (first deficiency act, fiscal year 1929).

Then follow on down substantially to the end of the bill, on page 213, those provisions which were in the bill to which I have referred, the first deficiency bill.

This constitutes a precedent which all Senators with whom I have talked feel should not be established. It is the universal conviction of the Senators with whom I have discussed the matter that the provisions which were incorporated in the bill H. R. 15848 should be considered and disposed of in the conference under that bill. To take out of that bill such items as some of the members of the conference favor and incorporate them in another bill is a most extraordinary procedure, and one which I think neither branch of the Congress would want to establish or approve.

I am therefore going to submit an amendment, to which I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], designed to strike out of the bill now before the Senate all of Title III, which was embraced in the former deficiency bill, and such provisions in the pending bill as have direct relationship to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I think, however, that as to the latter amendment, there is nothing in this bill.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Not in the pending bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The effect of the adoption of this amendment would be to preserve the rights of the conference under the first bill, and I think it is of paramount and primary importance that that course be pursued.

Mr. President, with this explanation, I desire to submit the following amendment. Permit me to say that if the amendment is agreed to, it will enable the conferees to work out all amendments that have been presented to both bills. It will give the conferees a free hand in reaching an arrangement, and it will probably result in the passage of both bills, whereas I fear, from statements made to me by other Senators, that if some such action be not taken, both bills will fail during this session.

I now offer the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may it be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out all of Title III.

Strike out the following: Commencing with line 4 on page 7 and extending down to and including line 7 on page 8.

Strike out all language on page 57, lines 1 to 6, inclusive.

On page 71 strike out all language commencing with line 23 extending down to and including line 9, page 72.

On page 55 strike out all language commencing with line 22 down to the end of line 3, on page 56.

On page 73, commencing with line 12, strike out all down to the end of line 17.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as I understand this, the Senator from Arkansas is aiming to bring about very nearly if not exactly that which is attempted in the two bills as they would probably finally come out of conference. As I understand, the Senator from Arkansas wishes to have us strike out the provision in the pending bill in reference to Title III and to go back to the original bill and act upon that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That would be the legal effect of it and the moral effect of it, and that is the purpose of it.

Mr. WARREN. The purpose of the Senator from Arkansas is very nearly the same as mine; and although I can speak only as chairman of the committee, not having had an opportunity to confer with the other members of the committee, nevertheless, so far as I may speak for the committee, I am willing to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCE. I object.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I dislike to make any objection, but I think the bill ought to be read first before the amendment is offered.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Oh, no!

Mr. HARRISON. May I say that the next bill on the program, which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has said must be taken up, and that statement seems to be in accord with the view of a good many Senators, is the apportionment bill. I had been hopeful that some arrangement could be made, since the sentiment here is clearly in opposition to the apportionment bill, or at least there will be a great deal of discussion about it, that the measure might be referred to a committee or that the Senator from Michigan would, in the public interest of having other legislation enacted, agree not to press that particular bill. We have had no such assurance from the Senator from Michigan. Therefore, in view of that fact, the deficiency bill now before the Senate will be considered at length. I have no objection in the world to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, but I think the bill ought to be read after his amendment is voted on.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of my amendment out of order. Of course, I realize that any Senator can object to it.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not object.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I should like to know specifically what is the object of the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I tried to state it.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator explained the difficulties and all that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well, I will explain it again.

Mr. BRUCE. I suppose the Senator thinks it will take two explanations to explain anything to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; not that at all. My own obscurity of expression in all probability did not make clear the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. Never mind; I will waive the explanation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may we now proceed with the consideration of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will proceed with the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, lines 3 to 10, inclusive, under Title I, legislative, to insert the following:

SENATE

To pay William A. Folger for extra and expert services rendered the Committee on Pensions during the second session of the Seventieth Congress as assistant clerk to said committee, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, fiscal year 1929, $1,200.

For payment to Guy E. Ives for services rendered the Senate and committees thereof, fiscal year 1929, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was on page 3, after line 4 to insert:

For payment to Everett Kent for expenses incurred in presenting the case against the right of JAMES M. BECK to a seat in the House of Representatives, as audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections No. 2, $422.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is the first reading of the bill, as I understand it, and we are not accepting these amendments yet. They are still open to amendment, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments are to be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it the ruling of the Chair that as the amendments are read they are to be acted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the fact that the bill was read twice under the rule by title, and this is the third reading of the bill. If the Senator insists, the bill will be read at length, but when amendments are reached the Senate will act upon them.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we reconsider the vote by which the first amendment, on page 2, lines 3 to 10, inclusive, was agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. I object for the moment.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I move that the vote by which the first amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. First I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Barkley	Glass	McNary	Smoot
Bingham	Glenn	Mayfield	Steiwer
Black	Goff	Moses	Swanson
Blaine	Hale	Norbeck	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Harris	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Bruce	Harrison	Oddie	Trammell
Capper	Hayden	Overman	Vandenberg
Copeland	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Wagner
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Jones	Robinson, Ind.	Warren
Dale	Kendrick	Sackett	Waterman
Edge	Keyes	Sheppard	Watson
Edwards	King	Shortridge	Wheeler
Fess	McKellar	Simmons
Fletcher	McMaster	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m., and on that motion I ask for the years and nays.
